THE WORKS

OF

SHAKESPEARE.
ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.
Act II Scene 3 line 11
Hel. (to Bertram.) This is the man.
THE WORKS
OF
WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE

EDITED BY
HENRY IRVING AND FRANK A. MARSHALL.

WITH
NOTES AND INTRODUCTIONS TO EACH PLAY BY F. A. MARSHALL AND OTHER SHAKESPEARIAN SCHOLARS,

AND
NUMEROUS ILLUSTRATIONS BY GORDON BROWNE.

VOLUME V.

LONDON:
BLACKIE & SON, 49 & 50 OLD BAILEY, E.C.; GLASGOW, EDINBURGH, AND DUBLIN.
1889.
PREFATORY NOTE.

Three of the five plays contained in this volume are to be found among the Tragedies in the First Folio, although, perhaps, strictly speaking, only two—Julius Cæsar and Macbeth—really belong to that category; Troilus and Cressida being a play of that nondescript class which is generally described as tragi-comedy. Of the two comedies which complete this volume, All’s Well That Ends Well is one of the least popular of all Shakespeare’s plays of that class; while Measure for Measure forms, as it were, a stepping-stone between the greatest of his comedies and the greatest of his tragedies. It is a play but seldom seen upon the stage; yet it is quite as dramatic as The Merchant of Venice, though the nature of the story, and the almost total absence of the element of high comedy, will prevent its ever attaining any great popularity.

The delay in the issue of this volume has been caused by more than one circumstance, chiefly by an unfortunate loss of nearly four acts of the text of Hamlet, which had been prepared for the printers. It was thought better, therefore, to include Macbeth in this volume; though it must be clearly understood that this play is entirely out of its chronological order. In fact, according to the original plan, Hamlet should have preceded both Measure for Measure and Troilus and Cressida. I have to thank Mr. Arthur Symons for enabling us to get this play ready under very considerable pressure as to time.

As in the last volume, those notes added by me to plays edited by any of our collaborators, for the opinions expressed in which I am solely responsible, are distinguished by the addition of my initials. For the Stage Histories of all the plays in this volume I am also responsible.

I cannot help referring here to a loss which all lovers and students of Shakespeare have recently sustained. As this volume was being prepared for publication, the news arrived of the death of Mr. Halliwell-Phillipps, whose long and loving devotion to the memory of Shakespeare has given to us work, the value of which it would be difficult to exaggerate. From the very commencement of this edition he took the warmest interest in it; and I owe much to the hearty encouragement which I always received from him. In spite of the fact that many of the conclusions arrived at, and of the opinions expressed in my Introductions, were contrary to those which, guided by the experience of a lifetime, he himself held, his criticism of our work was as generous as his help, in every way and whenever we asked it, was ungrudgingly given. It is impossible not to feel that, not only I myself personally, but all concerned in the production of the Henry Irving Shakespeare, have lost a true friend. I had hoped to have had the benefit of his guidance in the preparation of the brief life of Shakespeare, which is to be given with the last volume of this edition; but that, alas, was not to be; and I can only hope that all of us, who are engaged in the study of Shakespeare, may try and imitate his untiring industry, his genuine modesty, his true kindness of heart, and his loyal enthusiasm in the work to which he devoted not only his time, but what is dearer to many men than their time—a great portion of his fortune.

F. A. MARSHALL

London, January, 1889.
CONTENTS

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL, ........................................... 1
JULIUS CAESAR, .......................................................... 77
MEASURE FOR MEASURE, ............................................. 161
TROILUS AND CRESSIDA, ............................................ 243
MACBETH, .................................................................. 343

PASSAGES AND SCENES ILLUSTRATED

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Vignette, ..........</th>
<th>10</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Act I. scene 1. lines 3, 4, ..........</td>
<td>11</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ber. And I, in going, madam, woop-o'er my father's death anew.__</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Act I. scene 2. line 19, ..........</td>
<td>15</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>King. Youth, thou beardst thy father's face.__</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Act II. scene 1. lines 117, 118, ..........</td>
<td>21</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>King. We thank you, maids; But may not be so credulous of cure.__</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hel. (To Bertram) I dare not say I take you; but I give Me and my service, ever whilst I live, Into your guiding power.—This is the man.__</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Act II. scene 3. line 243, ..........</td>
<td>27</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fer. My lord, you do me most insupportable vexation.__</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Act II. scene 4. lines 29-31, ..........</td>
<td>29</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ola. You should have said, sir, before a knave thou'rt a knave; that's, before me thou'rt a knave: this had been truth, sir.__</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Act III. scene 2. line 117, ..........</td>
<td>34</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hel. I am the caitiff that do hold him to't.__</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Act III. scene 4. line 4, ..........</td>
<td>35</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Stew. (Reads) I am Saint Jacques' pilgrim, thither gone.__</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Act III. scene 7. lines 1, 2, ..........</td>
<td>39</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hel. If you misdoubt me that I am not she, I know not how I shall assure you further.__</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Act IV. scene 1. lines 27, 28, ..........</td>
<td>41</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fer. Within those three hours 't will be time enough to go home.__</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Act IV. scene 3. line 3, ..........</td>
<td>43</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sec. Lord. I have delivered it an hour since.__</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Act IV. scene 3. line 349, ..........</td>
<td>47</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ber. Good morrow, noble captain.__</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Act IV. scene 5. lines 44, 45, ..........</td>
<td>49</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ola. The black prince, sir; alack, the prince of darkness; alack, the devil.__</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Act V. scene 1. lines 18, 19, ..........</td>
<td>51</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hel. That it will please you To give this poor petition to the king.__</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Act V. scene 2. lines 11, 12, ..........</td>
<td>52</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fer. Nay, you need not to stop your nose, sir; I spoke but by a metaphor.__</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Vignette, .......... 76
CONTENTS.

JULIUS CAESAR.

Act I. scene 1. line 1, . . . . 89

Act I. scene 2. lines 135, 136, . . . . 92

Act I. scene 3. line 42, . . . . 96

Act II. scene 1. line 278, . . . . 102

Act III. scene 2. line 174, . . . . 114

Act IV. scene 3. lines 100, 101, . . . . 121

Act II. scene 2. lines 25, 26, (Etching) 103

Act II. scene 3. line 11, . . . . 105

Act II. scene 4. line 31, . . . . 107

Act III. scene 3. line 55, . . . . 114

Act IV. scene 3. line 275, . . . . 124

Act V. scene 1, . . . . 126

Act V. scene 3. line 28, . . . . 129

Act V. scene 3. line 28, . . . . 129

Act V. scene 6, 63, . . . . 207

M. Measure for Measure.

Act I. scene 1. lines 17, 18, . . . . 173

Act I. scene 2. lines 119–121, . . . . 176

Act I. scene 4. lines 67–69, . . . . 179

Act II. scene 1. lines 159, 160, (Etching) 182

Act II. scene 2. line 88, . . . . 185

Act II. scene 2. lines 162, 163, . . . . 187

Act II. scene 4. line 151, . . . . 191

Act III. scene 1. lines 187, 188, . . . . 194

Act III. scene 2. lines 27, 28, . . . . 197

Act III. scene 2. lines 174, . . . . 114

Act III. scene 3. line 40, . . . . 116

Act IV. scene 3. lines 100, 101, . . . . 121

Act IV. scene 3. line 174, . . . . 114

Act IV. scene 3. line 275, . . . . 124

Act V. scene 1, . . . . 126

Act V. scene 3. line 28, . . . . 129

Act V. scene 6, 63, . . . . 207

Vignette, . . . . 160

Tailpiece, . . . . 182

Vignette, . . . . 160

M. Measure for Measure.

Act I. scene 1. lines 17, 18, . . . . 173

Duke. For you must know, we have with special soul Elected him our absence to supply.

Act I. scene 2. lines 119–121, . . . . 176

Clown. Fellow, why dost thou show me thus to the world? Bear me to prison, where I am committed.

Act I. scene 4. lines 67–69, . . . . 179

Lucio. All hope is gone,
Unless you have the grace by your fair prayer
To soften Angelo.

Act II. scene 1. lines 159, 160, (Etching) 182

Pom. Dost your honour see any harm in his face?

Act II. scene 2. line 88, . . . . 185

Isab. To-morrow! O, that's sudden! Spare him, spare him!

Act II. scene 2. lines 162, 163, . . . . 187

Ang. What's this, what's this? Is this her fault or mine?
The tempter or the tempted.

Act II. scene 4. line 151, . . . . 191

Isab. I will proclaim thee, Angelo; look for't.

Act III. scene 1. lines 187, 188, . . . . 194

Isab. O faithless coward! O dishonest wretch! Will thou be made a man out of my vice?

Act III. scene 2. lines 27, 28, . . . . 197

Duke. Canst thou believe thy living is a life,
So stinkingly depending? Go mend, go mend.

Act III. scene 2. lines 244, 245, . . . . 199

Duke. I pray you, sir, of what disposition was the Duke?

Act IV. scene 1. lines 1, 2, . . . . 201

Take, 0, take those lips away,
That so sweetly were forsworn.

Act IV. scene 2. lines 33–38, . . . . 203

Pom. Pray, sir, by your good favour,—for surely, sir, a good favour you have, but that you have a hanging look,—. . . your occupation a mystery?

Act IV. scene 3. lines 62, 63, . . . . 207

Bar. I swear I will not die to-day for any man's persuasion.

Act IV. scene 3. lines 189, 190, . . . . 209

Lucio. Nay, friar, I am a kind of Burr; I shall stick.

Act V. scene 1. line 361, . . . . 216

Duke. Thou art the first knave that ever mad'st a Duke.

Tailpiece, . . . . 219

Vignette, . . . . 242
TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Act</th>
<th>Scene</th>
<th>Lines</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>I</td>
<td>1</td>
<td>15, 16</td>
<td>255</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I</td>
<td>2</td>
<td>115-115</td>
<td>259</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I</td>
<td>3</td>
<td>151</td>
<td>264</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I</td>
<td>3</td>
<td>298-301</td>
<td>267</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>II</td>
<td>1</td>
<td>57</td>
<td>269</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>II</td>
<td>2</td>
<td>101, 102</td>
<td>272</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>III</td>
<td>3</td>
<td>47, 48</td>
<td>274</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>III</td>
<td>2</td>
<td>108, 109</td>
<td>281</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

---

Act III. scene 3. lines 60, 61, . 284

Nest. Nothing, my lord.

Agam. The better.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Act</th>
<th>Scene</th>
<th>Line</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>IV</td>
<td>4</td>
<td>32</td>
<td>291</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV</td>
<td>5</td>
<td>119, 120</td>
<td>295</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V</td>
<td>2</td>
<td>19</td>
<td>301</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V</td>
<td>3</td>
<td>16-18</td>
<td>303</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V</td>
<td>3</td>
<td>107, 108</td>
<td>305</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V</td>
<td>10</td>
<td></td>
<td>308</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

---

Act III. scene 3. lines 16-17, . 381

Ban. O, treachery! Fly, good Fleance, fly, fly, fly! Thou mayest revenge. O slave!

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Act</th>
<th>Scene</th>
<th>Lines</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>IV</td>
<td>1</td>
<td>63-67</td>
<td>385</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V</td>
<td>1</td>
<td>44, 45</td>
<td>394</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V</td>
<td>8</td>
<td>3</td>
<td>397</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V</td>
<td>8</td>
<td>59</td>
<td>400</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

---

MACBETH.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Act</th>
<th>Scene</th>
<th>Lines</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>I</td>
<td>1</td>
<td>2</td>
<td>361</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I</td>
<td>3</td>
<td>48</td>
<td>363</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I</td>
<td>5</td>
<td>67, 68</td>
<td>366</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>II</td>
<td>2</td>
<td>19</td>
<td>371</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>II</td>
<td>4</td>
<td>14-18</td>
<td>375</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>III</td>
<td>1</td>
<td>114, 115</td>
<td>378</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

---

Act III. scene 3. lines 16-17, . 381

Ban. O, treachery! Fly, good Fleance, fly, fly, fly! Thou mayest revenge. O slave!

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Act</th>
<th>Scene</th>
<th>Lines</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>IV</td>
<td>1</td>
<td>63-67</td>
<td>385</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V</td>
<td>1</td>
<td>44, 45</td>
<td>394</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V</td>
<td>8</td>
<td>3</td>
<td>397</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V</td>
<td>8</td>
<td>59</td>
<td>400</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

NOTES AND INTRODUCTION

BY

H. A. EVANS.
DRAMATIS PERSONÆ

KING OF FRANCE.
DUKE OF FLORENCE.
BERTRAM, Count of Rousillon.
LAFEU, an old Lord at the French court.
PAROLLES, a follower of Bertram.

First Lord, Two brothers belonging to the French court, serving Second Lord, with Bertram in the Florentine war.
First Gentleman, belonging to the French army.
Second Gentleman,

A Gentleman, attached to the French army.

Steward, servants to the Countess of Rousillon.
Clown,

COUNTESS OF ROUSILLON, mother to Bertram.
HELENA, a gentlewoman protected by the Countess.
An old Widow of Florence.
DIANA, daughter to the Widow.

VIOLENTA, neighbours and friends to the Widow.

MARIANA,

SCENE—Partly in France and partly in Tuscany.

HISTORICAL PERIOD: the 13th or 14th century.

TIME OF ACTION (according to Daniel).

ELEVEN DAYS distributed over about three months.

Day 1: Act I. Scene 1.—Interval; Bertram’s journey to Court.
Day 2: Act I. Scenes 2, 3.—Interval; Helena’s journey to Court.
Day 3: Act II. Scenes 1, 2,—Interval two days; cure of the King’s malady.
Day 4: Act II. Sc. 3, 4, 5.—Interval; Helena’s return to Rousillon; Bertram’s journey to Florence.
Day 5: Act III. Scenes 1, 2.

Day 6: Act III. Scenes 3, 4.—Interval “some two months” (iv. 3, 56).
Day 7: Act III. Scene 5.
Day 8: Act III. Scenes 6, 7; Act IV. Scenes 1, 2.
Day 9: Act IV. Scenes 3, 4.—Interval; Bertram’s return to Rousillon; Helena’s return to Marseilles.
Day 10: Act IV. Scene 5; Act V. Scene 1.
Day 11: Act V. Scenes 2, 3.

1 LAFEU: Spelt Lafeu in the Folio.
2 See note on Dramatis Personæ.
3 HELENA: Sometimes spelt Hellen in the Folio.
4 VIOLENTA: A mute personage. Perhaps her part was omitted for practical reasons in the copy from which the Folio was printed.
ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

INTRODUCTION.

LITERARY HISTORY.

All's Well That Ends Well was first printed in 1623 in the First Folio. In the entry of this volume in the Stationers' Register, November 8th of that year, it is enumerated among such plays as had not been previously entered to other men. This is the first time we hear of the play under its present name, and the period at which it was first produced is therefore purely a matter of conjecture. The theories here put forward are substantially those received by most modern critics, but every reader is at liberty to form his own opinion.

Francis Meres, in the list of Shakespeare's plays which he gives in the well-known passage of his Palladis Tamia (1598), mentions a comedy entitled Love labours wonne, and this immediately following Love labors lost. No other mention of this comedy has ever been found, and since Meres's testimony to its existence is unimpeachable, we are left to make the best conjecture we can as to its fate. Has it been lost, or is it one of the plays which we now know by another name? That Love's Labour's Won, an undoubted work of so popular a dramatist as Shakespeare, should have utterly disappeared, while Love's Labour's Lost has survived, is very unlikely; and there is every probability that, if it had so far escaped the printer, there would have been an acting copy in existence which the editors of the First Folio would have secured. But they have printed no play under this name, and we must, therefore, conclude that it is in some sense or other identical with one of the existing plays. Which play this was is a question which seems to have troubled nobody till Farmer in his Essay on the Learning of Shakespeare suggested that it was All's Well That Ends Well, and although two or three others have been put forward,1 no other has such strong claims. There is, however, an insuperable difficulty in the way of the supposition that Love's Labour's Won and All's Well are absolutely identical. Considerations of style and metre forbid us to suppose that the latter in its present shape was written as early as 1598; if it was, we should have to put it earlier than such plays as Much Ado, As You Like It, and Twelfth Night, none of which are mentioned by Meres, and which he could not fail to have pointed to, had he been acquainted with them, rather than to the "Gentlemen of Verona," and the "Errors" in order to prove Shakespeare's excellence "for the stage." But although the prevailing tone and style of All's Well unquestionably indicate a later date than these three plays, there are good reasons for believing that it is an earlier play remodelled, and that this earlier play was the Love's Labour's Won of Meres. Love's Labour's Won was evidently considered by Meres to be a companion play to Love's Labour's Lost, and in All's Well there are certain passages quite in the rhyming, balanced, somewhat artificial style of that play—passages which Mr. Fleay, who was the first to call attention to them, aptly terms "boulders from the old strata imbedded in the later deposits." The following is a list of them as picked out by Mr. Fleay, and among them, at the end of the play, may be noticed an expression of Helena suggestive of the old title:

This is done:

Will you be mine, now you are doubly won?
—Act ii. 3. 314, 315.

Act i. 1. 231–244. Speech of Helena, preserved for its poetic worth; it is also very appropriate to the situation, emphasizing, as it does, Helena's self-reliance and strength of purpose.

1 The Tempest, Hunter (impossible!); Much Ado, Brae; The Taming of the Shrew, Hertford.

3
ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

Act i. 3. 134–142. Nine lines spoken by the Countess, the first four in alternate rhyme.

Act ii. 1. 138–213. Dialogue between the King and Helena in continuous rhyme, quite different in tone from the rest of the play, and quite in Shakespeare's early style. The gradual yielding of the sick king to Helena's persuasions is well depicted, and it probably struck the author as a bit worth preserving.

Act ii. 3. 78–111. Rhymed lines spoken by the King, Helena, and the two lords, with prose comments by Lafeu inserted on the revision. Helena's choice of a husband, naturally a telling bit in the original play.

Act iii. 3. 132–151. Speech of the King, of which the same may be said.

Act iii. 4. 4–17, and iv. 3. 252–260. Two letters in the form of sonnets. "This sort of composition," says Mr. Pleas, "does not quite die out till the end of Shakespeare's Second Period, but it is very rare in that period, and never appears in the Third." It is, however, conceivable that Shakespeare may have recurred to this form for a letter by a poetical character like Helena, or a fantastic character like Parolles, even in his Third Period.

Act v. 3. 60–72, 291–294, 301–304, 314–319, 325–340. Rhyming bits, chiefly from the speeches of the King and Helena, the last, which includes the epilogue, forming a suitable finish to the play.

The above passages will be seen to be quite in Shakespeare's early style, as we find it in Love's Labour's Lost, the title of which play probably suggested that of Love's Labour's Won, and we cannot be far wrong in surmising that both plays were written about the same time, i.e. in the period 1590–92.1 The date at which the play was recast and appeared in its present shape of All's Well That Ends Well was probably the period 1601–1604. We should thus put it, with Professor Dowden and others, later than the romantic comedies Much Ado, As You Like It, and Twelfth Night, and earlier than the three great tragedies, Othello, Lear, and Macbeth, while we should bring it near to Measure for Measure, to which the conjectural date 1603 has been assigned,—a play which, apart from certain resemblances of incident, it resembles perhaps more closely than any other in "motif" and expression.

The source from which Shakespeare derived the story of All's Well is the story of Giletta of Narbona, which forms the Ninth Novel of the Third Day of the Decameron. He probably became acquainted with it through the translation in Painter's Palace of Pleasure, 1566–67, but all that he derived from it was the outline of the plot. The name Giletta he changed to Helena, Beltramo he anglicized into Bertram; the other names, with the exception of that of Helena's father, Gerard de Narbon, are his own. Lafeu, the Countess, the Steward, the Clown, and Parolles, are entirely his own creation, nor is there the slightest hint of the comic scenes in the original story, the extent of Shakespeare's obligation to which will be evident from the following analysis of it.

Giletta, the daughter of Gerado of Narbona, a physician, having been brought up in the family of the Count of Rossiglione with his only son Beltramo, fell in love with Beltramo "more than was meete for a maiden of her age." On his father's death, Beltramo, as the king's ward, was sent to Paris, "for whose departure the maiden was verie pensif." Accordingly she watched for an opportunity of going herself to Paris and joining Beltramo, and at last, hearing that the king "had a swellynge upon his breast, whiche by reason of ill cure, was growen to a Fistula," and had abandoned all hope of cure, she thought that "if the disease were suche (as she supposed,) easily to bryng to passe that she might have the Counte Beltramo to her hushande." So she "made a pouder of certain herbes, which she thought meete for that disease, and rode to Paris" (act i. sc. 1 and 3). Here she obtained an interview with the king, and "putte hym in confort, that she was able to heale hym, saiyng: 'Sire, if it shall please your grace, I trust in God, without any paine or grieve unto your highnesse, within eighte daies I will make you whole of this disease.' The kyng hearyng her saie so, began to mocke her, saiyng: 'How is it possible for thee, beyng a yong woman, to doe that, whiche the best renoumed Phisicions in the worlde can not?"

1 In common with Love's Labour's Lost may be noticed the name Dumaín, All's Well, iv. 3. 200, &c.; and perhaps an allusion to the crazy Italian, Monarcho (see Love's Labour's Lost, Introduction), All's Well, i. 1. 118.
INTRODUCTION.

He thanked her, for her goodwill, and made her a directe answere, that he was determined no more to followe the counsaile of any Phisicion. Whereunto the maiden answered: 'Sire, you dispise my knowledge, because I am yonge, and a woman, but I assure you, that I do not minister Phisicke by profession, but by the aide and helpe of God: and with the cunning of maister Gerardo of Narbona, who was my father, and a Phisicion of greate fame, so longe as he lived.' The kyng hearyng those wordes, saied to hymself: 'This woman peradventure is sent unto me of God, and therefor, why should I disdain to prove her cunning? Sithens she promiseth to heale me within a little space, without any offence or grief unto me.' And beyng determined to prove her, he said: 'Damosell, if thou doest not heale me, but make me to breake my determinacion, what wilt thou solowe thereof?' 'Sire,' saied the maiden: 'Let me be kept in what guarde and kepyng you list: and if I doe not heale you within these eight daies, let me bee burnte: but if I do heale your grace, what recompence shall I have then?' To whom the kyng answered: 'Bicause thou art a maiden, and unmarried, if thou heale me, accordyng to thy promisse, I will bestowe thee upon some gentleman, that shalbe of right good worship and estimacion.' To whom she answeread: 'Sire I am verie well content, that you bestowe me in mariage: But I will have suche a husbande, as I my self shall demaunde; without pressumption to any of your children, or other of your bloudde!' (act ii. sc. 1). The king granted her request, and being cured by her even before the appointed time, told her to choose such a husband as she wished. Accordingly she chose Beltramo. The king, however, 'was very lothe to graunte him unto her: But bicause he had made a promis, which he was lothe to breake, he caused him to be called forth, and saied unto hym: 'Sir Counte, bicause you are a gentleman of greate honor, our pleasure is, that you retourne home to your owne house, to order your estate according to your degree: and that you take with you a Damosell which I have appinted to be your wife.' To whom the Counte gave his humble thankes, and demaund what she was? 'It is she (quoth the kyng) that with her medecines, hath healed me.' The Counte knewe her well, and had alredie seen her, although she was faire, yet knowing her not to be of a stocke, convenable to his nobilitie, disdainfullie said unto the king, 'Wil you then (sir) give me, a Phisicion to wife? It is not the pleasure of God, that ever I should in that wise bestowe my self.' To whom the kyng said: 'Wilt thou then, that we should breake our faythe, which we to recover healthe, have given to the damosell, who for a rewarde thereof, asked thee to husband?' 'Sire (quod Beltramo) you maie take from me al that I have, and give my persone to whom you please, bicause I am your subject: but I assure you, I shall never bee contented with that mariadge.' 'Welle you shall have her (saied the Kyng), for the maiden is faire and wise, and loveth you mooste entirly: thinkyng verelie you shall leade a more joyfull life with her, then with a ladie of a greater house.' So Beltramo had to give way and was married to Giletta, but immediately after the marriage he begged leave to returne home (act ii. sc. 3). 'And when he was on horsebacke, he went not thither, but took his journey into Thuscane, where understanding that the Florentines, and Senois were at warres, he determined to take the Florentines parte, and was willinglie received, and honourable interteigned, and made capitaine of a certaine number of men, continuyng in their service a longe tyme' (act iii. sc. 3). As for Giletta, she returned to Rousillon, and governed the country very wisely for some time, hoping thereby to induce her husband to return to her. At last she sent to the count offering to leave the country, if that would satisfy him. His reply was, "Lette her doe what she list. For I doe purpose to dwell with her, when she shall have this ryng, (meaning a ryng which he wore) upon her finger, and a soorne in her armes, begotten by me" (act iii. sc. 2). Giletta, however, was not to be discouraged, and giving out that she intended to devote the rest of her days to a religious life, she left Rousillon, "tellyng no man whither she went, and never rested, till she came to Florence (act iii. sc. 4): where by Fortune at a poore widowes house, she contented her self, with the state of a poore pilgrimage, desirous to here newes of her lorde, whom by fortune she saw the next daie, passing by the house (where she lay) on horsebacke with his companie. And although she knewed him well enough, yet she demanded of the good wife of the house what he was: who answered that he was a strange gentleman, called the Counte Beltramo of Rossiglione, a curteous knighte, and welbeloved in the citie, and that he was mervelously in love with a neighbor of her, that was a gentlewoman, verie poore and of small subsance, nevertheless of right honest life and report, and by reason of her povertie, was yet unmarried, and dwelt with her mother, that was a wise and honest Ladie" (act iii. sc. 5). Giletta accordingly repaired to this lady, and with her laid the plot by which she was to fullfil the two conditions which her husband had laid down (act iii. sc. 7). The lady got the ring from Beltramo, "although it was with the Countes ill will," and having sent him word that her daughter was ready "to accomplishe his pleasure," she substituted Giletta in her place (act iv. sc. 2). By way of recompensing the service the lady had done her, Giletta gave her five hundred pounds and many costly jewels "to marie her daughter" (act iv. sc. 4), and Beltramo having returned to Roussillon, she remained at Florence till she was "brought a bedde of twoo soones, which were verie like unto their father," and "when she sawe tyme," she took her journey to Roussillon, and appeared in her husband's hall with her two sons in her arms just as he was about to sit down to table with a large company. She then produced the ring, and called upon Beltramo to recognize his children, and to receive her as his wife. This he could not refuse to do, but "abjected his obstinate rigour: causyng her to rise up, and imbraced and kissed her, acknowledging her againe for his lawfull wife (act v. sc. 3)."

STAGE HISTORY.

No record of the performance of All's Well That Ends Well in Shakespeare's time remains, nor do we find any mention of it among the plays performed on the reopening of the theatres at the Restoration, nor can any record be found of such a play as Love's Labour's

Won having ever been acted. It was not till the middle of the eighteenth century that any manager thought it worth his while to bring this play forward on the stage, when it was produced for Mrs. Giffard's benefit at the theatre in Goodman's Fields (March 7, 1741), Mrs. Giffard taking the part of Helena, and her husband that of Bertram. The Parolles of this revival was Joseph Peterson, an actor of some note, who played Buckingham to Garrick's Richard III. on the occasion of the latter's first appearance at Goodman's Fields, October 26, 1741; Miss Hippesley was the Diana; she, as well as Mrs. Giffard, were in the cast in Richard III. at Garrick's debut, the former as Prince Edward, the latter as Queen Anne.

Davies, who does not seem to have known of the performance at Goodman's Fields, says that this play, "after having lain more than a hundred years undisturbed upon the prompter's shelf, was, in October, 1741, revived at the theatre in Drury Lane" (Dramatic Miscellanies, vol. ii. p. 7). It was really on the 22nd January, 1742, that this production took place; a production attended by so many calamities to the actors that the play was termed by them "the unfortunate comedy." On this first representation Mrs. Woffington, who played Helena, was taken so ill that she fainted on the stage during the first act (Genest, vol. iii. p. 645), and the part had to be read. The play was advertised for the following Friday, but had to be deferred till February 16th in consequence of Milward's illness. This illness was said to have been caused by his wearing too thin clothes in the part of the King which he played with great effect. He was seized with a shivering fit, and, when asked by one of his fellow-actors how he was, replied, "How is it possible for me to be sick, when I have such a physician as Mrs. Woffington!" (Davies, vol. ii. p. 7). This illness soon terminated fatally, for on February 9th we find that there was a performance of All's Well for the benefit of Milward's widow and children. Davies says that Mrs. Ridout, "a pretty woman and a pleasing actress," was taken ill and forbidden to act for a month, and that Mrs. Butler
INTRODUCTION.

"was likewise seized with a distemper in the progress of this play" (ut supra, p. 9). Genest challenges the correctness of both these statements, on the ground that the names of these actresses appear in the bills for the remaining performances of this play; but, unless the habits of theatrical managers were different to what they are now, such a fact as the appearance of a name on the bills would not be a positive guarantee that the actor or actress so named did absolutely perform. Other troubles besides those occasioned by illness beset the production of this play. Fleetwood, the manager, had promised the part of Parolles to Macklin, but "Theophilus Cibber, by some sort of artifice, as common in theatres as in courts, snatched it from him to his great displeasure" (ut supra, p. 9). Macklin had to content himself with the part of the clown. In spite of these fatalities and these contretemps this revival certainly seems to have been successful; for the comedy was repeated nine times; Delane taking the place of Milward. Berry's performance of Lafeu is much praised by Davies; nor does Cibber seem to have made the ridiculous failure in the part that might have been expected. When the piece was revived at Covent Garden, April 1st, 1746, Chapman succeeded Macklin as the clown; this actor was admitted to be the best representative of Shakespeare's clowns and of some other comic characters, but was the victim of a delusion that he could play tragedy; and he indulged this delusion in the theatre at Richmond which belonged to him, playing such parts as Richard III. to the utter ruin of his own property. This revival at Covent Garden was notable for the fact that Woodward first played Parolles, a part in which he is said to have been unequalled. Mrs. Pritchard was the Helena. The piece was produced again, under Garrick's management at Drury Lane, February 24, and March 2, 1756; probably owing to the instigation of Woodward, who was so fond of the part of Parolles that he revived this comedy on several occasions, not only in London but under his own management in Dublin. Mrs. Pritchard now exchanged the part of Helena for that of the Countess. On October 23rd, 1762, Woodward having left Garrick's company, King took the part of Parolles, Bertram being played by Palmer. On July 26, 1785, All's Well was produced at the Haymarket in three acts for the benefit of Bannister, jun., who played Parolles; Mrs. Inchbald, the celebrated authoress, being the Countess, and Miss Farren, afterwards Countess of Derby, Helena. On December 12, 1794, All's Well was produced, as arranged for the stage by John Kemble at Drury Lane. The cast included himself as Bertram, with King as Parolles and Mrs. Jordan as Helena. It was only played for one night. This play would seem to have been cast in 1793, as the first edition bears that date and contains Mrs. Siddons' name as the representative of Helena. On May 24, 1811, this version was again played under Charles Kemble's management; Fawcett playing Parolles and Munden Lafeu. The comedy seems, on the whole, to have been tolerably well received. It is said that Fawcett's was a comparative failure, and was even hissed on coming off the stage. So discouraged was he that he insisted on surrendering the part; but Kemble persuaded him not to do so, as if he did, he would "knock up the play." The piece was only played once more, on June 22nd. Kemble's alteration is a very good one. He has retained as much as possible of the original text, and has not introduced any embellishments of his own; but, by means of judicious excisions and a few ingenious transpositions, he has made a very good acting version of the play. We do not find any further record of its performance except at Bath, May 23, 1820, when, according to Genest, "it was acted in a respectable manner" (vol. ix. p. 132). The last time that it was produced at a London theatre was in 1852, September 1st, when Phelps revived it at Sadlers Wells, Phelps himself taking the part of Parolles; but the revival was not very successful.

Although All's Well That Ends Well from the nature of its main story can never be a

1 Fawcett's copy of Kemble's edition of this play dated 1811 is in my possession. It is marked, for stage purposes, as far as his own part is concerned; but the alterations and cuts are very few. — P. A. M.
ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

popular play, we may hope some day to see its revival, if only for a short period, when any actor can be found of sufficient vivacity and impudence—coupled with a thorough knowledge of his art—to play the part of Parolles. At any rate the experiment of its revival might be worth trying at some of those matinées, at which such dismal and depressing experiments are wont to be made on the patience of the audience, and on the long-suffering endurance of the critics.—F. A. M.

CRITICAL REMARKS.

There is no doubt that at a first reading All's Well That Ends Well is one of the least attractive of Shakespeare's plays: it has neither the freshness and sprintsightfulness of the earlier comedies, nor the thrilling interest of the great tragedies which succeeded it. But on re-reading it its beauties rise into relief before us; and although we should undoubtedly gain much from a careful representation of it upon the stage, we can more easily afford to dispense with the actor's aid than in most plays. There are no telling situations, no stirring incidents, the action moves calmly and soberly to its conclusion, but our interest in the heroine carries us through. It is to Shakespeare's conception of her character, perhaps, that his choice of what might seem an unpromising subject is due; but every character in the play is sketched with a master's hand, and if some scenes are dramatically irrelevant, as, for instance, those in which the clown is introduced, they fulfill their purpose in the fresh lights which they throw upon the principal personages, each of whom is a finished portrait. There is no waste of words in this play: the whole is instinct with thought, and it is perhaps from the irrepressible reflective energy of the writer's mind that the number of obscurities of language arises.

Nothing can give a clearer notion of the genius of Shakespeare than a comparison between the bald, wooden narrative in the Palace of Pleasure and the picture which he has painted from it. The characters which he has adopted from his original are so transformed that they may be considered almost as much new creations as those which are wholly of his own invention. Compare Helena with the Giletta of the story. Of Giletta and her proceedings we have an unimpassioned straightforward narrative told in business-like fashion. We read of her love for Beltramo, and her desire to have him for a husband; of the conditions which he lays down, and of her fulfilment of them; we recognize in her a woman of a determined will, but we do not feel for her the love and admiration which we feel for Helena. Boccaccio retails the incidents, Shakespeare lets us into the secrets of the heart. Helena is his ideal of true womanhood, of true self-devotion, only equalled among all his heroines by Imogen and Hermione. The devotion of Helena is the key to the play, and as if to exalt it still higher, as if to emphasize the boundless capabilities of a woman's love, when once it has fastened itself upon an object, he has given it an object so unworthy as Bertram. Brought up with the young and handsome noble, we cannot wonder, though we may regret, that she has fallen in love with him; but regrettable as the passion of such a woman for such a man may be, when once she has given herself to him—

"I dare not say I take you; but I give Me and my service, ever whilst I live,
Into your guiding power"—

she will shrink from nothing that may follow; she will save him even from himself.

It is but a superficial criticism that sees anything immodest in the conduct of Helena. She is not afraid to choose her husband, but her courage is equalled by her humility. She can meet adversity with resignation. When her hopes are dashed by the seeming refusal of the king to accept her offices she does not complain:

"My duty, then, shall pay me for my pains:
I will no more enforce mine office on you;
Humbly entreating from your royal thoughts
A modest one, to bear me back again."

And when she is scornfully rejected by Bertram, although her claims have all the advantage of the king's powerful advocacy, she accepts the situation with a sigh which only too plainly indicates the painfulness of the effort:

8
INTRODUCTION.

"That you are well restor'd, my lord, I'm glad:
Let the rest go."

The same spirit of self-sacrifice animates her subsequent conduct. For Bertram she is ready to suffer anything. In obedience to his commands she returns home, but she will not stay there when she finds that her presence keeps him away:

"My being here it is that holds thee hence:
Shall I stay here to do't? no, no, although
The air of paradise did fan the house,
And angels offic'd all."

Yet she is not a woman who never tells her love, not one who sits like Patience on a monument smiling at grief. She is a woman, who, with all her gentleness and tenderness, combines an indomitable resolution. Although she has abandoned her home for her husband's sake, so assured is she of her power to help and preserve him, that she goes straight to Florence in search of him, where she may at least watch over him in her disguise, and perchance find some occasion of securing him. The occasion offers, and with the decision which is one of her characteristics, she seizes it at once, saves her husband from sin, and in the end, if she has not yet won his affection, is at any rate acknowledged by him as his lawful wife.

The loveliness of Helena is felt by every personage in the drama except Bertram and Parolles. In this respect the latter is not worth consideration; but Bertram, the son of a noble father and a gentle mother, might have been expected at least to recognize her worth. Every allowance must be made for his aristocratic prejudices, and above all, for the constraint put upon him in a matter in which no man brooks constraint—the choice of a wife; but we cannot but feel that he is throughout unworthy of such a woman as Helena, and, like Johnson, we cannot reconcile our hearts to him. Had he had the courage to brave the king's displeasure and refuse the wife proffered to him, we might have questioned his taste, but could not have condemned his conduct; but after once accepting her his action is inexcusable. If in the end he finds salvation it is through no merit of his own; the victim of a delusion for a worthless led-captain, he is cured by the device of his friends; false to his promises to the girl whose seducer he believed himself to be, he is rescued from meshes of his own deceit and from his sovereign's displeasure by the timely interposition of his wife. We are left to hope that under her guidance he will be led to better things.

Much of Bertram's shortcoming is attributed to Parolles, a snipt-taffeta fellow with whose inducement the young nobleman corrupts a well-derived nature; and Parolles is indeed a pitiful rascal. An abject sneak and coward, he is the only thorough specimen of his class that Shakespeare has depicted. He has been compared with Falstaff, but the very idea is sacrilege; he has not a spark of the wit and the geniality which always gives us a kindly feeling for honest Jack. When he is exposed he feels no shame; he hurls himself in his disgrace:

"Captain I'll be no more;
But I will eat and drink, and sleep as soft
As captain shall: simply the thing I am
Shall make me live."

Yet, like old Lafeu, who was the first that "found" him, we are content to dismiss this miserable creature, not without compassion, "Though you are a fool and a knave, you shall eat; go to."

A peculiar charm is lent to this play by the halo which it casts around old age. With this, as with all other phases of humanity, Shakespeare manifests his intense power of sympathy. The King, Lafeu, and the Countess are each delightful in their way. The King, who joins a benevolent regard for the rising generation to his eulogy of the past; Lafeu with his dry genial humour; and above all, the aged Countess, the most admirable character of her class that Shakespeare has drawn for us. The scene in which she elicits from Helena the confession of her love for Bertram sets before us at once her calm matronly dignity, her womanly insight, and her sympathy with the emotions of a girlish heart; unlike her son she could see that nobility does not depend upon birth alone, and in Helena she could recognize "a maid too virtuous for the contempt of empire."
ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

ACT I.

SCENE I. Rousillon, in France. The hall of the Countess of Rousillon's house.

Enter Bertram, the Countess of Rousillon, Helena, and Lafféu, all in black.

Count. In delivering my son from me, I bury a second husband.

Ber. And I, in going, madam, weep o'er my father's death anew: but I must attend his majesty's command, to whom I am now in ward, evermore in subjection.

Laf. You shall find of the king a husband, madam;—you, sir, a father: he that so generally is at all times good, must of necessity hold his virtue to you; whose worthiness would stir it up where it wanted, rather than lack it where there is such abundance.

Count. What hope is there of his majesty's amendment?

Laf. He hath abandoned his physicians, madam; under whose practices he hath persecuted time with hope; and finds no other advantage in the process but only the losing of hope by time.

Count. This young gentlewoman had a father,—O, that "had"! how sad a passage 'tis! whose skill was almost as great as his honesty; [had it stretched so far, would have made nature immortal, and death should have play for lack of work.] Would, for the king's sake, he were living! I think it would be the death of the king's disease.

Laf. How called you the man you speak of, madam?

Count. He was famous, sir, in his profession, and it was his great right to be so,—Gerard de Narbon.

Laf. He was excellent indeed, madam: the king very lately spoke of him admiringly and mourningly: [he was skilful enough to have lived still, if knowledge could be set up against mortality.

Ber. What is it, my good lord, the king languishes of?

Laf. A fistula, my lord.

Ber. I heard not of it before.

Laf. I would it were not notorious.—

---

1 Hold, continue.

2 Passage, something passed, an event.

3 Fistula, a sinuous ulcer.
Was this gentlewoman the daughter of Gerard de Narbon? 48

Count. His sole child, my lord; and bequeathed to my looking over. I have those hopes of her good that her education promises: her dispositions she inherits, which makes fair gifts fairer; [for where an unclean mind carries virtuous qualities, there commendations go with pity,—they are virtues and traitors too: in her they are the better for their simplicity;] she derives her honesty,¹ and achieves her goodness. 52

Laf. Your commendations, madam, get from her tears.

Count. Tis the best brine a maiden can season her praise in. The remembrance of her father never approaches her heart but the tyranny of her sorrows takes all livelihood from her cheek.—No more of this, Helena,—go to, no more; lest it be rather thought you affect a sorrow than to have it. 61

Hel. I do affect a sorrow, indeed; but I have it too.

[Laf. Moderate lamentation is the right of the dead; excessive grief the enemy to the living.

Count. If the living be enemy to the grief, the excess makes it soon mortal.]

Ber. Madam, I desire your holy wishes.

[Laf. How understand we that?] 70

Count. Be thou blest, Bertram! and succeed thy father

In manners, as in shape! thy blood and virtue Contend for empire in thee, and thy goodness Share² with thy birthright! Love all, trust a few,

Do wrong to none; be able for thine enemy Rather in power than use, and keep thy friend Under thy own life's key; be check'd³ for silence, But never tax'd for speech. What heaven more will,

That thee may furnish, and my prayers pluck down,

Fall on thy head!—Farewell, my lord:
'Tis an unseason'd courtier; good my lord, 80
Advise him.

⁰ Comfortable, serviceable.
¹ Fav'rous, suitable.
² Hawking, hawk-like.
³ Capable, susceptible.
⁴ Trick, peculiarly.
⁵ Solely, without an equal.
⁶ Place, precedence.
⁷ Superfluous, having more than enough.
ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

ACT I. Scene 1.

Enter Parolles.

Par. Save you, fair queen!
Hel. And you, monarch!
Par. No.
Hel. And no.
Par. Are you meditating on virginity?
Hel. Ay. You have some stain of soldier in you: let me ask you a question. Man is enemy to virginity; how may we barricado it against him?
Par. Keep him out.
Hel. But he assails; and our virginity, though valiant in the defence, yet is weak: unfold to us some warlike resistance.
Par. There is none: man, sitting down before you, will undermine you, and blow you up.
Hel. Bless our poor virginity from underminers and blowers-up!—Is there no military policy, how virgins might blow up men?
Par. Virginity being blown down, man will quicklier be blown up: marry, in blowing him down again, with the breach yourselves made, you lose your city. It is not politic in the commonwealth of nature to preserve virginity. Loss of virginity is rational increase; and there was never virgin got till virginity was first lost. That you were made of, is metal to make virgins. Virginity, by being once lost, may be ten times found; by being ever kept, it is ever lost: 'tis too cold a companion; away with 't! I will stand for 't a little, though therefore I die a virgin.

Hel. There's little can be said in 't; 't is against the rule of nature. To speak on the part of virginity, is to accuse your mothers; which is most infallible disobedience. He that hangs himself is a virgin: virginity murders itself; and should be buried in highways, out of all sanctified limit, as a desperate offender against nature. Virginity breeds mites, much like a cheese; consumes itself to the very paring, and so dies with feeding his own stomach. Besides, virginity is peevish, proud, idle, made of self-love, which is the most inhibited sin in the canon. Keep it not; you cannot choose but lose by 't: out with 't! within ten year it will make itself ten, which is a goodly increase; and the principal itself, not much the worse: away with 't!

Hel. How might one do, sir, to lose it to her own liking?
Par. Let me see: marry, ill, to like him that ne'er it likes. 'Tis a commodity will lose the gloss with lying; the longer kept, the less worth: off with 't while 't is vendible; answer the time of request. Virginity, like an old courtier, wears her cap out of fashion; richly suited, but unsuitable: just like the brooch and the toothpick, which wear not now. Your date is better in your pie and your porridge than in your cheek: and your virginity, your old virginity, is like one of our French withered pears,—it looks ill, it eats dryly; marry, 'tis a withered pear; it was formerly better; marry, yet, 't is a withered pear: will you anything with it?

Hel. Not my virginity yet. There shall your master have a thousand loves, A mother, and a mistress, and a friend, A phoenix, captain, and an enemy, A guide, a goddess, and a sovereign, A counsellor, a traitress, and a dear; His humble ambition, proud humility, His jarring concord, and his discord dulcet, His faith, his sweet disaster; with a world Of pretty, fond, adoptious christendoms, That blinking Cupid gossips. Now shall he— I know not what he shall;—God send him well!—
The court's a learning-place;—and he is one—
Par. What one, i' faith?
Hel. That I wish well.—'T is pity—
Par. What's pity?
Hel. That wishing well had not a body in 't, Which might be felt; that we, the poorer born, Whose baser stars do shut us up in wishes, Might with effects of them follow our friends, And show what we alone must think; which never Returns us thanks.

Enter a Page.

Page. Monsieur Parolles, my lord calls for you.

Exit.

1 Stain, tinge.

2 Wear not now, are not in fashion.

3 Adoption christendoms, assumed Christian names or appellations.

4 Gossips, gives as a sponsor.
ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL

ACT I. Scene 1.

Par. Little Helen, farewell: if I can remember thee, I will think of thee at court.
Hél. Monsieur Parolles, you were born under a charitable star.
Par. Under Mars, I.
Hél. I especially think, under Mars.
Par. Why under Mars?
Hél. The wars have so kept you under, that you must needs be born under Mars. 210
Par. When he was predominant.
Hél. When he was retrograde, I think, rather.
Par. Why think you so?
Hél. You go so much backward when you fight.
Par. That's for advantage.
Hél. So is running away, when fear proposes the safety: but the composition, that your valour and fear make in you, is a virtue of a good wing, and I like the wear well. 219
Par. I am so full of businesses, I cannot answer thee acutely. I will return perfect courtier; in the which, my instruction shall serve to naturalize thee, so thou wilt be capable of a courtier's counsel, and understand what advice shall thrust upon thee; else thou diest in thine unthankfulness, and thine ignorance makes thee away: farewell. When thou hast leisure, say thy prayers; when thou hast none, remember thy friends: get thee a good husband, and use him as he uses thee: so, farewell. 220
Hél. Our remedies oft in ourselves do lie,
Which we ascribe to heaven: the fated sky
Gives us free scope; only doth backward pull
Our slow designs when we ourselves are dull.
What power is it which mounts my love so high;
That makes me see, and cannot feed mine eye?
The mightiest space in fortune nature brings
To join like likes, and kiss like native things.
Impossible be strange attempts to those
That weigh their pains in sense; and do suppose
What hath been cannot be: who ever strove

To show her merit, that did miss her love?
The king's disease,—my project may deceive me,
But my intents are fixed, and will not leave me. 230
[Exit.

ACT I. Scene 2.

[SCENE II. Paris. The King's palace.

Flourish of cornets. Enter the King of France with letters, and divers Attendants.

King. The Florentines and Senoys are by th' ears;
Have fought with equal fortune, and continue
A brave war.
First Lord. So 'tis reported, sir.
King. Nay, 'tis most credible; we here receive it
A certainty, vouch'd from our cousin Austria,
With caution, that the Florentine will move us
For speedy aid; wherein our dearest friend 7
Prejudicates the business, and would seem
To have us make denial.
First Lord. His love and wisdom.
Approv'd so to your majesty, may plead 10
For amplest credence.
King. He hath arm'd our answer,
And Florence is denied before he comes:
Yet, for our gentlemen that mean to see
The Tuscan service, freely have they leave
To stand on either part.
Sec. Lord. It well may serve
A nursery to our gentry, who are sick
For breathing and exploit.

Enter Bertram, Lafeu, and Parolles.

First Lord. It is the Count Roussillon, my good lord, Young Bertram.
King. Youth, thou bear'st thy father's face; 19
Frank nature, rather curious than in haste,
Hath well compos'd thee. Thy father's moral parts
Mayst thou inherit too! Welcome to Paris.
Ber. My thanks and duty are your majesty's.
King. I would I had that corporal soundness now

---

1 Retrograde, in astronomy, means, seeming to move contrary to the succession of the signs.
2 Wear, fashion.
3 Fated, invested with the power of destiny.
4 Native, congenial, kindred.
5 In sense, in thought.
6 Braving, defiance.
7 Our dearest friend, i.e. our cousin Austria.
8 Sick for, pining for.
9 Frank, bountiful.
10 Curious, careful.
As when thy father and myself in friendship
First tried our soldiership! He did look far Into the service of the time, and was Discipl'd of the bravest: he lasted long;
But on us both did haggish age steal on,
And wore us out of act. It much repairs me
To talk of your good father. In his youth
He had the wit, which I can well observe

To-day in our young lords; but they may jest,
Till their own scorn return to them unnoted
Ere they can hide their levity in honour:
So like a courtier, contempt nor bitterness
Were in his pride or sharpness; if they were,
His equal had awak'd them; and his honour,
Clock to itself, knew the true minute when Exception¹ bid him speak, and at this time ⁴⁰

King. Youth, thou bear'st thy father's face.—(Act i. 2. 18.)

His tongue obey'd his hand: who were below
him
He us'd as creatures of another place;
And bow'd his eminent top to their low ranks,
Making them proud of his humility,
In their poor praise he humbled.³ Such a man
Might be a copy to these younger times;
Which, follow'd well, would demonstrate them now
But goers backward.

Ber. His good remembrance, sir,

Lies richer in your thoughts than on his tomb;
So in approof lives not his epitaph ⁵⁰
As in your royal speech.

King. Would I were with him! He would always say,—
Methinks I hear him now; his plausive⁴ words
He scatter'd not in ears, but grafted them,
To grow there, and to bear,—"Let me not live,"—
This his good melancholy oft began,
On the catastrophe and heel of pastime,
When it⁵ was out,—"Let me not live," quoth he,

¹ Exception, disapprobation.
² He, its.
³ He humbled, he made himself humble.
⁴ Plausive, pleasing.
⁵ It, i.e. the pastime.
"After my flame lacks oil, to be the snuff 59
Of younger spirits, whose apprehensive senses
All but newthings disdain; whose judgments are Mere fathers of their garments; whose con-stances
Expire before their fashions."—this he wish'd:
I, after him, do after him wish too,
Since I nor wax nor honey can bring home,
I quickly were dissolved from my hive,
To give some labourers room.

Sec. Lord.
You're loved, sir; They that least lend it you shall lack you first.

King. I fill a place, I know't.—How long is't, count,
Since the physician at your father's died? 70
He was much fam'd.

Ber. Some six months since, my lord.

King. If he were living, I would try him yet;—
Lend me an arm;—the rest have worn me out
With several applications:—nature and sickness
Debate it at their leisure. Welcome, count;
My son's no dearer.

Ber. Thank your majesty. [Exeunt. Flourish.]

Scene III. The Countess of Rousillon's garden.
Enter Countess, Steward, and Clown.

Count. I will now hear: what say you of this gentlewoman?

Stew. Madam, the care I have had to even your content, I wish might be found in the calendar of my past endeavours; [for then we wound our modesty, and make foul the clearness of our deservings, when of ourselves we publish them.]

Count. What does this knave here? Get you gone, sirrah: [the complaints I have heard of you I do not all believe: 'tis my slowness that I do not; for I know you lack not folly to commit them, and have ability enough to make such knavery yours.]

Clo. 'Tis not unknown to you, madam, I am a poor fellow.

Count. Well, sir.

1 Apprehensive, fantastic, finical.
2 It, love.
3 Lack, miss.
4 Applications, attempts at healing.

Clo. No, madam, 'tis not so well that I am poor; though many of the rich are damned: but, if I may have your ladyship's good-will to go to the world, Isabel the woman and I will do as we may.

Count. Wilt thou needs be a beggar?
Clo. I do beg your good-will in this case.
Count. In what case?
Clo. In Isabel's case and mine own. Service is no heritage: and I think I shall never have the blessing of God till I have issue o' my body; for they say barns are blessings.

Count. Tell me thy reason why thou wilt marry.

Clo. My poor body, madam, requires it: I am driven on by the flesh; and he must needs go that the devil drives.

Count. Is this all your worship's reason?

Clo. Faith, madam, I have other holy reasons, such as they are.

Count. May the world know them?

Clo. I have been, madam, a wicked creature, as you and all flesh and blood are; and, indeed, I do marry that I may repent.

Count. Thy marriage,—sooner than thy wickedness.

Clo. I am out o' friends, madam; and I hope to have friends for my wife's sake.

Count. Such friends are thine enemies, knave.

Clo. You're shallow, madam, in great friends; for the knaves come to do that for me, which I am a- weary of. He that ears my land spares my team, and gives me leave to in the crop; if I be his cuckold, he's my drudge: he that comforts my wife is the cherisher of my flesh and blood; he that cherishes my flesh and blood loves my flesh and blood; he that loves my flesh and blood is my friend: ergo, he that kisses my wife is my friend. If men could be contented to be what they are, there were no fear in marriage; for young Charbon the puritan and old Pysam the papist, how-some'er their hearts are severed in religion, their heads are both one,—they may joul horns together, like any deer i' the herd.

Count. Wilt thou ever be a foul-mouthed and calumnious knave?

5 Ears, ploughs.
6 Joult, thrust.
ACT I. Scene 3.

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

Clo. A prophet I, madam; and I speak the truth the next way:

For I the ballad will repeat,
Which men full true shall find;
Your marriage comes by destiny,
Your cuckoo sings by kind.

Count. Get you gone, sir; I'll talk with you anon.

Stew. May it please you, madam, that he bid Helen come to you: of her I am to speak.

Count. Sirrah, tell my gentlewoman I would speak with her; Helen I mean.

Clo. Was this fair face the cause, quoth she,
Why the Grecians sacked Troy?
Fond, done, done fond,
Was this King Priam's joy?
With that she sighed as she stood,
With that she sighed as she stood,
And gave this sentence then;
Among nine bad if one be good,
Among nine bad if one be good,
There's yet one good in ten.

Count. What, one good in ten? You corrupt the song, sirrah.

Clo. One good woman in ten, madam; which is a purifying o'the song: would God would serve the world so all the year! we'd find no fault with the tithe-woman, if I were the person: one in ten, quoth a' an we might have a good woman born but one every blazing star, or at an earthquake, 't would mend the lottery well: a man may draw his heart out, ere 'a pluck one.

Count. You'll be gone, sir knave, and do as I command you?

Clo. That man should be at woman's command, and yet no hurt done!—[Though honesty be no puritan, yet it will do no hurt; it will wear the surplise of humility over the black gown of a big heart.—] I am going, forsooth: the business is for Helen to come hither.

[Exit.]

Count. Well, now.

Stew. I know, madam, you love your gentlewoman entirely.

Count. Faith, I do: her father bequeathed her to me; and she herself, without other advantage, may lawfully make title to as much love as she finds: there is more owing her than is paid; and more shall be paid her than she'll demand.

Stew. Madam, I was very late more near her than I think she wished me: alone she was, and did communicate to herself her own words to her own ears; she thought, I dare vow for her, they touched not any stranger sense. Her matter was, she loved your son: Fortune, she said, was no goddess, that had put such difference betwixt their two estates; Love no god, that would not extend his might, only where qualities were level; [Dian no queen of virgins, that would suffer her poor knight surprised, without rescue in the first assault, or ransom afterward.] This she delivered in the most bitter touch of sorrow that e'er I heard virgin exclaim in: which I held my duty speedily to acquaint you withal; sithence, in the loss that may happen, it concerns you something to know it.

Count. You have discharged this honestly; keep it to yourself: many likelihoods informed me of this before, which hung so tottering in the balance, that I could neither believe nor misdoubt.] Pray you, leave me: stall this in your bosom; and I thank you for your honest care: I will speak with you further anon.

[Exit Steward.]

Enter Helena.

[Even so it was with me when I was young:
If ever we are nature's, these are ours; this thorn
Doth to our rose of youth rightly belong;
Our blood to us, this to our blood is born;
It is the show and seal of nature's truth,
Where love's strong passion is impress'd in youth:
By our remembrances of days foregone,
Such were our faults, or then we thought them none.
Her eye is sick on 't: I observe her now.]

Hel. What is your pleasure, madam?

Count. You know, Helen, I am a mother to you.

Hel. Mine honourable mistress.

Count. Nay, a mother:
Why not a mother? [When I said a mother, Methought you saw a serpent: what's in "mother,"
That you start at it? I say, I am your mother;
And put you in the catalogue of those That were enwomb'd mine: 'tis often seen
Adoption strives with nature; and choice breeds
A native slip to us from foreign seeds:
You ne'er oppress'd me with a mother's groan,
Yet I express to you a mother's care:—
God's mercy, maiden! does it curst thy blood,
To say, I am thy mother? What's the matter,
That this distemper'd messenger of wet,
The many-colour'd Iris, rounds thine eye?
Why,—that you are my daughter?
Hel. That I am not.
Count. I say, I am your mother.
Hel. Pardon, madam, 160
The Count Rousillon cannot be my brother:
I am from humble, he from honour'd name;
No note upon my parents, his all noble:
My master, my dear lord he is; and I
His servant live, and will his vassal die:
He must not be my brother.
Count. Nor I your mother?
Hel. You are my mother, madam; would you were—
So that my lord your son were not my brother—
Indeed my mother!—or were you both our mothers,
I care no more for than I do for heaven, 170
So I were not his sister. Can't no other,
But I your daughter, he must be my brother?
Count. Yes, Helen, you might be my daughter-in-law:
[God shield, you mean it not! "daughter" and "mother"
So strive upon your pulse.] What, pale again?
My fear hath catch'd your fondness: now I see
[The mystery of your loneliness, and find
Your salt tears' head; now to all sense 'tis gross]
You love my son; invention is asham'd,
Against the proclamation of thy passion, 180

To say thou dost not: therefore tell me true;
[But tell me then, 'tis so;—for, look, thy cheeks
Confess it, th' one to th' other; and thine eyes
See it so grossly shown in thy behaviours,
That in their kind they speak it: only sin
And hellish obstinacy tie thy tongue,
That truth should be suspected. Speak, is't so?]
If it be so, you've wound a goodly clew;
If it be not, forswear 't: howe'er, I charge thee,
As heaven shall work in me for thine avail,
To tell me truly.

Hel. Good madam, pardon me! 191
Count. Do you love my son?
Hel. Your pardon, noble mistress!
Count. Love you my son?
Hel. Do not you love him, madam?
Count. Go not about; my love hath in't a bond.
Whereof the world takes note: come, come,
disclose
The state of your affection; for your passions
Have to the full appeach'd. 4
Hel. Then, I confess,
Here on my knee, before high heaven and you,
That before you, and next unto high heaven,
I love your son:— 200
My friends were poor, but honest; so's my love;
Be not offended; for it hurts not him,
That he is lov'd of me: I follow him not
By any token of presumptuous suit;
Nor would I have him till I do deserve him;
Yet never know how that desert should be.
[Il I know I love in vain, strive against hope;
Yet in this captious and intemperate 10 sieve
I still pour in the waters of my love,
And lack not to lose still: thus, Indian-like,
Religious in mine error, I adore
The sun, that looks upon his worshipper,
But knows of him no more. My dearest madam,
Let not your hate encounter with my love,
For loving where you do: but, if yourself,
Whose aged honour cites a virtuous youth,
Did ever, in so true a flame of liking,

1 Native, kindred, as in l. 1. 238.
2 Both our mothers, the mother of both of us.
3 I care no more for, I care as much for, wish it equally.
4 Can't no other. Can it not be otherwise, but that if I am your daughter, &c.
5 Grossly, palpably.
6 In their kind, in their way.
7 Assass, Interest; compare III. i. 22. 8 Bond, obligation.
9 Appeach'd, informed against you.
10 Captious and intemperate, capacious, and incapable of retaining.
11 Cites a virtuous youth, proves that you were no less virtuous when young.
ACT I. Scene 3.

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

ACT II. Scene 1.

\[Wish chastely, and love dearly, that your Dian Was both herself and love; O, then, give pity To her, whose state is such, that cannot choose But lend and give, where she is sure to lose; That seeks not to find that her search implies, But, riddle-like, lives sweetly where she dies!\]

Count. Had you not lately an intent,—speak truly,—

To go to Paris?

Hel. Madam, I had.

Count. Wherefore? tell true.

Hel. I will tell truth; by grace itself, I swear.

You know my father left me some prescriptions Of rare and prov'd effects, such as his reading And manifest experience had collected

For general sovereignty,\[1\] and that he will'd me In heedfully's reservation to bestow them,

As notes, whose faculties inclusive\[4\] were More than they were in note;\[5\] amongst the rest, There is a remedy, prov'd, set down,

To cure the desperate languishings whereof

The king is render'd\[2\] lost.

Count. This was your motive

For Paris, was it? speak.

Hel. My lord your son made me to think of this; Else Paris, and the medicine, and the king, Had from the conversation\[4\] of my thoughts Haply been absent then.

Count. But think you, Helen,

If you should tender your supposed aid,

He would receive it? he and his physicians Are of a mind; he, that they cannot help him;

They, that they cannot help: how shall they credit

A poor unlearned virgin[, when the schools,

Embowell'd of their doctrine,\[4\] have left off

The danger to itself]\[?\]

Hel. There's something in 't,

More than my father's skill, which was the greatest

Of his profession, that his good receipt

Shall, for my legacy, be sanctified

By the luckiest stars in heaven: and, would your honour

But give me leave to try success,\[6\] I'd venture

The well-lost life of mine on 's grace's cure

By such a day and hour.

Count. Dost thou believe 't?

Hel. Ay, madam, knowingly.

Count. Why, Helen, thou shalt have my leave, and love,

Means, and attendants, and my loving greetings

To those of mine in court: I'll stay at home,

And pray God's blessing into thy attempt:

Be gone to-morrow; and be sure of this,

What I can help thee to, thou shalt not miss.

[Exeunt.]

ACT II.

[Scene I. Paris. The King's palace.

Flourish of cornets. Enter King, attended with divers young Lords taking leave for the Florentine war; Bertram, Paroles.

King. Farewell, young lords; these warlike principles

Do not throw from you:—and you, my lords, farewell:—

Share the advice betwixt you; if both gain,\[1\] all

The gift doth stretch itself as 't is receiv'd,

And is enough for both.

---

1 Sovereignty, efficacy. 4 Inclusive, comprehensive.

2 Render'd, said to be. 5 Conversation, intercourse.

3 Doctrine, learning. 6 Success, fortune.

7 Gain, profit. 8 Owns, owns.

9 Bated, beaten down, subdued.
The bravest questant\(^1\) shrinks, find what you seek,
That fame may cry you loud: I say, farewell.
  Sec. Lord. Health, at your bidding, serve your majesty!
  King. Those girls of Italy, take heed of them: 19
They say, our French lack language to deny,
If they demand: beware of being captives,
Before you serve.
  Both Lords. Our hearts receive your warnings.
  King. Farewell.—Come hither to me.
    [Exit, attended.
  First Lord. O my sweet lord, that you will stay behind us!
  Par. 'Tis not his fault, the spark.
  Sec. Lord. O, 'tis brave wars!
  Par. Most admirable: I have seen those wars.
  Ber. I am commanded here,\(^2\) and kept a coil with,\(^3\)—
    "Too young," and "the next year," and "it is too early."
  Par. An thy mind stand to, boy, steal away bravely.
  Ber. I shall stay here the forehorse to a smock,\(^4\)
Creaking my shoes on the plain masonry,
Till honour be bought up,\(^5\) and no sword worn
But one to dance with! By heaven, I'll steal away.
  First Lord. There's honour in the theft.
  Par. Commit it, count.
  Sec. Lord. I am your accessory; and so, farewell.
  Ber. I grow to you, and our parting is a tortured body.
  First Lord. Farewell, captain.
  Sec. Lord. Sweet Monsieur Parolles! 39
  Par. Noble heroes, my sword and yours are kin. Good sparks and lustrous, a word, good metals—you shall find in the regiment of the Spinii one Captain Spurio, with his cicatrice, an emblem of war, here on his sinister cheek; it was this very sword entrenched it: say to him, I live; and observe his reports for me.\(^6\)
  Sec. Lord. We shall, noble captain.
    [Exeunt Lords.
  Par. Mars dote on you for his novices!
what will ye do?
  Ber. Stay; the king!
    Re-enter King. Bertram and Parolles retire.
  Par. [To Ber.] Use a more spacious ceremony to the noble lords; you have restrained yourself within the list\(^7\) of too cold an adieu: be more expressive to them: for they wear themselves in the cap of the time, there do muster true gait, eat, speak, and move under the influence of the most received star; and though the devil lead the measure, such are to be followed: after them, and take a more dilated farewell.
  Ber. And I will do so.
  Par. Worthy fellows; and like to prove most sinewy sword-men.
    [Exeunt Bertram and Parolles.

Enter Lafeu.
  Laf. [Kneeling] Pardon, my lord, for me and for my tidings.
  King. I'll fee thee to stand up.
  Laf. [Rising] Then here's a man stands that has brought his pardon.
I would you had kneel'd, my lord, to ask me mercy;
And that, at my bidding, you could so stand up.
  King. I would I had; so I had broke thy pate,
And ask'd thee mercy for't.
  Laf. Good faith, across: but, my good lord, 'tis thus: 70
Will you be cur'd of your infirmity?
  King. No.
  Laf. O, will you eat no grapes, my royal fox?
Yes, but you will my noble grapes, an if My royal fox could reach them: I've seen a medicine.\(^8\)

---

\(^1\) Questant, seeker, aspirant.
\(^2\) I am commanded here, i.e. to remain here.
\(^3\) Kept a coil with, made a fuss about.
\(^4\) A smock, used contemptuously for a woman.
\(^5\) Till honour be bought up, and therefore there is no more left to be gained.
\(^6\) For me, concerning me.
\(^7\) List, boundary, limit.
\(^8\) Medicine, physician.
That's able to breathe life into a stone,
Quicken a rock, and make you dance canary,1
With sprightly fire and motion; whose simple touch
Is powerful to raise King Pepin, nay,
To give great Charlemain a pen in's hand, 80
And write to her a love-line.
King. What "her" is this?

Laf. Why, Doctor She: my lord, there's one
arriv'd,
If you will see her:—now, by my faith and
honour,
If seriously I may convey my thoughts
In this my light deliverance, I have spoke
With one that, in her sex, her years, profession,
Wisdom, and constancy, hath amaz'd me more

King. We thank you, maiden;
But may not be so credulous of cure.—(Act II. i. 117, 118.)

Than I dare blame my weakness: will you see her,—
For that is her demand,—and know her business?
That done, laugh well at me.
King. Now, good Lafeu,
Bring in the admiration; that we with thee
May spend our wonder too, or take off thine
By wondering how thou took'st it.
Laf. Nay, I'll fit you,
And not be all day neither. [Exit.

King. Thus he his special nothing ever prologues.

Re-enter LAFEU, with HELENA.

Laf. Nay, come your ways.
King. This haste hath wings indeed.
Laf. Nay, come your ways;
This is his majesty, say your mind to him: 98
A traitor you do look like; but such traitors
His majesty seldom fears: I'm Cressid's uncle,
That dare leave two together; fare you well.

[Exit.

1 Canary, a lively dance. 2 Deliverance, utterance.

2 Profession, what she professes to be able to do.
King. Now, fair one, does your business follow us? 102
Hel. Ay, my good lord.
Gerard de Narbon was my father;
In what he did profess, well found.
King. I knew him.
Hel. The rather will I spare my praises towards him;
Knowing him is enough. On 's bed of death
Many receipts he gave me; chiefly one,
Which, as the dearest issue of his practice,
And of his old experience th' only darling, 110
He bade me store up, as a triple eye,
Safer than mine own two, more dear: I have so:
And, hearing your high majesty is touch'd
With that malignant cause, wherein the honour
Of my dear father's gift stands chief in power,
I come to tender it, and my appliance,
With all bound humbleness.
King. We thank you, maiden;
But may not be so credulous of cure,
When our most learned doctors leave us, and
The congregated college have concluded 120
That labouring art can never ransom nature
From her inable estate,—I say we must not
So stain our judgment, or corrupt our hope,
To prostitute our past-cure malady
To empirics; or to disserver so
Our great self and our credit, to esteem
A senseless help, when help past sense we deem.
Hel. My duty, then, shall pay me for my pains:
I will no more enforce mine office on you;
Humbly entreating from your royal thoughts
A modest one, to bear me back again. 131
King. I cannot give thee less, to be call'd grateful:
Thou thought'st to help me; and such thanks
I give
As one near death to those that wish him live:
But, what at full I know, thou know'st no part;
I knowing all my peril, thou no art.
Hel. What I can do can do no hurt to try,
Since you set up your rest 1 'gainst remedy.
He that of greatest works is finisher
Oft does them by the weakest minister: 140
So holy writ 2 in babes hath judgment shown,
When judges have been babes; great floods have flown 142
From simple sources; 3 and great seas have dried,
When miracles have by the greatest been denied: 4
Oft expectation fails, and most oft there
Where most it promises; and oft it bites
Where hope is coldest, and despair most fits.
King. I must not hear thee; fare thee well, kind maid; 148
Thy pains, not us'd, must by thyself be paid:
Profers not took reap thanks for their reward.
Hel. Inspired merit so by breath is barr'd: 5
It is not so with Him that all things knows,
As 'tis with us that square our guess by shows;
But most it is presumption in us when
The help of heaven we count the act of men.
Dear sir, to my endeavours give consent;
Of heaven, not me, make an experiment.
I am not an impostor, that proclaim
Myself against the level of mine aim; 150
But know I think, and think I know most sure,
My art is not past power, nor you past cure.
King. Art thou so confident? within what space
Hop'st thou my cure?
Hel. The great'st grace lending grace,
Ere twice the horses of the sun shall bring
Their fiery torcher 6 his diurnal ring;
Ere twice in murk and occidental damp
Moist Hesperus hath quench'd his sleepy lamp;
Or four and twenty times the pilot's glass
Hath told the thievish minutes how they pass;
What is inform from your sound parts shall fly,
Health shall live free, and sickness freely die.
King. Upon thy certainty and confidence
What dar'st thou venture?
Hel. 7 Tax 7 of impudence,— 172
A strumpet's boldness, a divulged shame,— Traduc'd by odious ballads; my maiden's name
Sear'd otherwise; nay, worse—if worse—extended
With vilest torture let my life be ended.
King. Methinks in thee some blessed spirit doth speak

---

1 Set up your rest, are resolved.
2 Holy writ, Matthew xi. 35, or Daniel i. 17 and ii. 43, 49.
3 Great floods, &c., Exod. xvii. 6.
4 Great seas, &c., Exod. xiv. 21.
5 Barr'd, prevented, put at a disadvantage.
6 Torcher, light-giver.
7 Tax, reproach.
His powerful sound within an organ weak:
And what impossibility would slay
In common sense, sense saves another way.
Thy life is dear; for all, that life can rate
Worth name of life, in thee hath estimate,—
Youth, beauty, wisdom, courage, all
That happiness and prime first can happy call:
Thou this to hazard, needs must intimate
Skill infinite or monstrous desperate.
Sweet practiser, thy physic I will try,
That minister's thine own death, if I die.

Hel. If I break time, or finch in property
Of what I spoke, unpitied let me die;
And well serv'd: not helping, death's my fee;
But, if I help, what do you promise me?

King. Make thy demand.

Hel. But will you make it even?
King. Ay, by my sceptre and my hopes of heaven.

Hel. Then shalt thou give me with thy kingly hand
What husband in thy power I will command:
Exempted be from me the arrogance
To choose from forth the royal blood of France,
My low and humble name to propagate
With any branch or image of thy state;
But such a one, thy vassal, whom I know
Is free for me to ask, thee to bestow.

King. Here is my hand; the premises observ'd,
Thy will by my performance shall be serv'd:
So make the choice of thy own time; for I,
Thy résolv'd patient, on thee still rely.
More should I question thee, and more I must,— Though more to know could not be more to trust,—
From whence thou cam' st, how tended on:
but rest
Unquestion'd welcome, and undoubted blest.—
Give me some help here, ho!—If thou proceed
As high as word, my deed shall match thy deed.  [Flourish. Exeunt.

---

\textsuperscript{1} Prime, flower of life.
\textsuperscript{2} Intimate, suggest the idea of.
\textsuperscript{3} Property, the particular quality, that which is proper to it.
\textsuperscript{4} Well serv'd, having deserved well to die.
will be a fool in question, hoping to be the wiser by your answer. I pray you, sir, are you a courtier?

Clo. "O Lord, sir!"—there's a simple putting off.—More, more, a hundred of them.

Count. Sir, I am a poor friend of yours that loves you.

Clo. "O Lord, sir!"—Thick, thick, spare not me.

Count. I think, sir, you can eat none of this homely meat.

Clo. "O Lord, sir!"—Nay, put me to 't, I warrant you.

Count. You were lately whipped, sir, as I think.

Clo. "O Lord, sir!"—Spare not me.

Count. Do you cry, "O Lord, sir!" at your whipping, and "Spare not me"? Indeed, your "O Lord, sir!" is very sequent to your whipping: you would answer very well to a whipping, if you were but bound to 't.1

Clo. I ne'er had worse luck in my life in my "O Lord, sir!" I see things may serve long, but not serve ever.

Count. I play the noble housewife with the time,

To entertain 't so merrily with a fool.

Clo. "O Lord, sir!"—why, there 't serves well again.

Count. An end, sir: to your business. Give Helen this,

And urge her to a present answer back:

Commend me to my kinsmen and my son:

This is not much.

Clo. Not much commendation to them.

Count. Not much employment for you: you understand me?

Clo. Most fruitfully: I am there before my leges.

Count. Haste you again. [Exeunt severally.]

Enter Bertram, Lafeu, and Parolles.

Laf. They say miracles are past; and we have our philosophical persons, to make moderm2 and familiar, things supernatural and causeless.3 Hence is it that we make trifles of terrors; ensconcing ourselves into seeming knowledge, when we should submit ourselves to an unknown fear.4

Par. Why, 'tis the rarest argument of wonder that hath shot out in our latter times.

Ber. And so 'tis.

Laf. To be relinquished of the artists,—

Par. So I say.

Laf. Both of Galen and Paracelsus.

Par. So I say.

Laf. Of all the learned and authentic fellows,—

Par. Right; so I say.

Laf. That gave him out incurable,—

Par. Why, there 't is; so say I too.

Laf. Not to be helped,—

Par. Right; as 't were a man assured of a—

Laf. Uncertain life, and sure death.20

Par. Just, you say well; so would I have said.

Laf. I may truly say, it is a novelty to the world.

Par. It is, indeed: if you will have it in showing, you shall read it in—what do ye call there?

Laf. A showing of a heavenly effect in an earthly actor.

Par. That's it; I would have said the very same.

Laf. Why, your dolphin is not lustier: 'fore me, I speak in respect—

Par. Nay, 't is strange, 't is very strange, that is the brief and the tedious of it; and he's of a most facinorous spirit that will not acknowledge it to be the—

Laf. Very hand of heaven—

Par. Ay, so I say.

[Laf. In a most weak—[pausing] and debile minister great power, great transcendence:5 which should, indeed, give us a further use to be made than alone the recovery of the king, as to be—[pausing] generally6 thankful.

Par. I would have said it;] you say well.—

Here comes the king.
Enter King, Helena, and Attendants. Lafeu and Parolles retire.

Laf. Lustig, as the Dutchman says: I'll like a maid the better, whilst I have a tooth in my head: why, he's able to lead her a coranto.²

Par. Mort du vinaigre! is not this Helen? ³

Laf. 'Fore God, I think so. ⁴

King. Go, call before me all the lords in court.—[Exit an Attendant.

Sit, my preserver, by thy patient's side;
And with this healthful hand, whose banish'd sense
Thou hast repeal'd, a second time receive
The confirmation of my promis'd gift,
Which but attends thy naming.

Enter three or four Lords.

Fair maid, send forth thine eye: this youthfull parcel
Of noble bachelors stand at my bestowing,
O'er whom both sovereign power and father's voice
I have to use: thy frank election make;
Thou'st power to choose, and they none to forsake.

Hel. To each of you one fair and virtuous mistress
Fall, when Love please!—marry, to each, but one!

Laf. I'd give bay Curtal⁴ and his furniture,
My mouth no more were broken than these boys,
And writ as little beard.

King. Peruse them well:
Not one of those but had a noble father.

Hel. Gentlemen,
Heaven hath, through me, restor'd the king to health.

All. We understand it, and thank heaven for you.

Hel. I am a simple maid; and therein wealthiest,
That I protest I simply am a maid.—
Please it your majesty, I've done already:
The blushes in my cheeks thus whisper me,
ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL

ACT II. Scene 3.

King. Why, then, young Bertram, take her; 118
she's thy wife
Ber. My wife, my liege! I shall beseech your highness,
In such a business give me leave to use
The help of mine own eyes.
King. Know'st thou not, Bertram,
What she has done for me?
Ber. Yes, my good lord;
But never hope to know why I should marry
her.
King. Thou know'st she has rais'd me from my sickly bed.
Ber. But follows it, my lord, to bring me down 119
Must answer for your raising? I know her well:
She had her breeding at my father's charge.
A poor physician's daughter my wife!—Disdain
Rather corrupt me ever!
King. 'T is only title thou disdain'st in her,
the which
I can build up. Strange is it that our bloods,
Of colour, weight, and heat, pour'd all together,
Would quite confound distinction, yet stand off
In differences so mighty. If she be
All that is virtuous,—save what thou dislik'st,
A poor physician's daughter,—thou dislik'st
Of virtue for the name: but do not so: 131
From lowest place when virtuous things proceed,
The place is dignified by the doer's deed:
Where great additions swell's, and virtue
none,
It is a dropsied honour: good alone
Is good without a name. Vileness is so:
The property by what it should go,
Not by the title.] She is young, wise, fair;
In these to nature she's immediate heir;
And these breed honour: that is honour's scorn,
Which challenges itself as honour's born, 141
And is not like the sire: honours thrive,
When rather from our acts we them derive
Than our foregoers: the mere word's a slave,
Deboosh'd on every tomb, on every grave

A lying trophy; and as oft is dumb
Where dust and damn'd oblivion is the tomb
Of honour'd bones indeed. What should be said?
If thou canst like this creature as a maid,
I can create the rest: virtue and she 150
Is her own dowry; honour and wealth from me.
Ber. I cannot love her, nor will strive to do't.
King. Thou wrong'st thyself, if thou shouldst strive to choose.
Hel. That you are well restor'd, my lord,
I'm glad:
Let the rest go.
King. My honour's at the stake; which to defeat,
I must produce my power. Here, take her hand,
 Proud scornful boy, unworthy this good gift;
That dost in vile misprisison* shackles up
My love and her desert; [that canst not dream,
We, poising us in her defective scale, 161
Shall weigh thee to the beam; that wilt not know,
It is in us to plant thine honour where
We please to have it grow.] Check thy contempt:
Obey our will, which travails in thy good:
[Believe not thy disdain, but presently
Do thine own fortunes that obedient right
Which both thy duty owes and our power claims;]
Or I will throw thee from my care for ever
Into the staggers* and the careless lapse* 170
Of youth and ignorance; both my revenge and hate
Loosing upon thee, in the name of justice, Without all terms of pity. Speak; thine answer.

Ber. Pardon, my gracious lord; for I submit
My fancy to your eyes: when I consider
What great creation and what dole of honour Flies where you bid it, I find that she, which late
Was in my nobler thoughts most base, is now
The praised of the king; who, so ennobled,
Is, as 't were, born so.

King. Take her by the hand, 180

---

* Disdain: overweening pride of my own.
* Corrupt: deprave.
* Stand off: keep at a distance from each other.
* Swell's: swell us.
* Deboosh'd: debased.

* Misprisison: contempt.
* Staggers: perplexity, bewilderment.
* Careless lapse: uncared-for falling away from right.
And tell her she is thine: to whom I promise
A counterpoise, if not to thy estate
A balance more replete.

Ber. I take her hand.

King. Good fortune and the favour of the king
Smile upon this contract; whose ceremony
Shall seem expedient on the now-born brief,

And be perform'd to-night; the solemn feast,
Shall more attend upon the coming space,
Expecting absent friends.] As thou lov'st her,
Thy love's to me religious; ¹ else, does err.

[Exeunt King, Bertram, Helena, Lords, and Attendants.

Laf. [To Parolles, who is strutting by him] Do you hear, monsieur? a word with you.

Par. My lord, you do me most insupportable vexation.—(Act II. 3. 263.)

Par. Your pleasure, sir?

Laf. Your lord and master did well to make his recantation.

Par. Recantation!—My lord! my master!

Laf. Ay; is it not a language I speak?

Par. A most harsh one, and not to be unstood without bloody succeeding. My master!

Laf. Are you companion to the Count Rousillon?

Par. To any count,—to all counts,—to what is man.

Laf. To what is count's man: count's master is of another style.

Par. You are too old, sir; let it satisfy you,
you are too old. [Walks insolently by him.

Laf. I must tell thee, sirrah, I write man;
to which title age cannot bring thee. ⁰⁹

Par. What I dare too well do, I dare not do.

Laf. I did think thee, for two ordinaries,² to be a pretty wise fellow; thou didst make tolerable vent of thy travel; it might pass:
yet the scarfs and the bannerets about thee
did manifoldly dissuade me from believing

¹ Thy love's to me religious, thy love to me is conscientiously fulfilled.

² Ordinaries, meals. thee a vessel of too great a burden. I have now found thee; when I lose thee again, I care not:
yet art thou good for nothing but taking up;†
and that thou'rt scarce worth.
Par. Hadst thou not the privilege of antiquity upon thee,—
Laf. Do not plunge thyself too far in anger, est thou hasten thy trial; which if—Lord have mercy on thee for a hen! So, my good window of lattice, fare thee well: thy casement I need not open, for I look through thee.
Give me thy hand.
Par. My lord, you give me most egregious indignity.
Laf. Ay, with all my heart; and thou art worthy of it.
Par. I have not, my lord, deserved it.
Laf. Yes, good faith, every dram of it; and I will not bate thee a scruple.
Par. Well, I shall be wiser—
Laf. E'en as soon as thou canst, for thou hast to pull at a smack o' the contrary. [If ever thou be'st bound in thy scarf and beaten, shou shalt find what it is to be proud of thy bondage.] I have a desire to hold my acquaintance with thee, or rather my knowledge, that I may say, in the default,² he is a man I
know.
Par. My lord, you do me most insupportable vexation.
Laf. I would it were hell-pains for thy sake, and my poor doing eternal: [for doing I am past; as I will by thee,³ in what motion age will give me leave.] [Exit.
Par. Well, thou hast a son shall take this disgrace off me; scurvy, old, filthy, scurvy lord!—Well, I must be patient; there is no fettering of authority. I'll beat him, by my life, if I can meet him with any convenience, an he were double and double a lord. I'll have no more pity of his age than I would have of—I'll beat him, an if I could but meet him again.

Re-enter LAFEU.
Laf. Sirrah, your lord and master's married;
there's news for you: you have a new mistres.

† Taking up, rebuking, contradicting.
² In the default, at a need.
³ As I will by thee, i.e. as I will pass by thee.
[ He wears his honour in a box unseen,
That hugs his kicky-wicky\(^1\) here at home,
Spending his manly marrow in her arms,
Which should sustain the bound and high curvet
Of Mars's fiery steed. ] To other regions! 300
France is a stable! we that dwell in't jades;
Therefore, to the war!

Ber. It shall be so: I'll send her to my house,
Acquaint my mother with my hate to her, 304
And wherefore I am fled; write to the king
That which I durst not speak; [his present gift
Shall furnish me to those Italian fields,
Where noble fellows strike: ] war is no strife
To the dark house and the detested wife.
Par. Will this capriccio\(^2\) hold in thee, art sure?

---

\(^1\) Kicky-wicky, a playful term for a wife.

---

Accept Helena with a letter, and Clown.

Hel. My mother greets me kindly: is she well?
Clo. She is not well; but yet she has her health: she's very merry; but yet she is not well:
but thanks be given, she's very well, and wants nothing in the world; but yet she is not well.
Hel. If she be very well, what does she ail, that she's not very well?]

\(^2\) Capriccio, properly an Italian word = fancy.

29
ACT II. Scene 4.

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

ACT II. Scene 5.

Clo. Truly, she's very well indeed, but for two things.

Hel. What two things? 10

Clo. One, that she's not in heaven, whither God send her quickly! the other, that she's in earth, from whence God send her quickly!

Enter Parolles.

Par. Bless you, my fortunate lady!

Hel. I hope, sir, I have your good will to have mine own good fortunes.

Par. You had my prayers to lead them on; and to keep them on, have them still.—O, my knave,—how does my old lady?

Clo. So that you had her wrinkles, and her money, I would she did as you say. 21

Par. Why, I say nothing.

Clo. Marry, you are the wiser man; for many a man's tongue shakes out his master's undoing: to say nothing, to do nothing, to know nothing, and to have nothing, is to be a great part of your title; which is within a very little of nothing.

Par. Away! thou'rt a knave. 28

Clo. You should have said, sir, before a knave thou'rt a knave; that's, before me thou'rt a knave: this had been truth, sir.

Par. Go to, thou art a witty fool; I have found thee.

Clo. Did you find me in yourself, sir? or were you taught to find me? The search, sir, was profitable; and much fool may you find in you, even to the world's pleasure, and the increase of laughter.

Par. A good knave, i'th faith, and well fed.—Madam, my lord will go away to-night; 40 A very serious business calls on him.

[The great prerogative and rite of love,
Which, as your due, time claims, he does acknowledge;
But puts it off to a compell'd restraint:1
Whose want, and whose delay, is strew'd with sweets,
Which they distil now in the curbed time,2
To make the coming hour o'erflow with joy,
And pleasure drown the brim.]

Hel. What's his will else?

Par. That you will take your instant leave o' the king,
And make this haste as your own good proceeding,
Strengthen'd with what apology you think
May make it probable need.3

Hel. What more commands he?
Par. That, having this obtain'd, you presently Attend his further pleasure.

Hel. In everything I wait upon his will.
Par. I shall report it so.
Hel. I pray you. [Exit Par.] Come, sirrah. 50 [Exeunt.

SCENE V. Paris. Another apartment in the palace.

Enter Lafew and Bertram.

Laf. But I hope your lordship thinks not him a soldier.
Ber. Yes, my lord, and of very valiant approof.

Laf. You have it from his own deliverance.
Ber. And by other warranted testimony.

Laf. Then my dial4 goes not true: I took this lark for a bunting.

[Ber. I do assure you, my lord, he is very great in knowledge, and accordingly valiant: I have, then, sinned against his experience, and transgressed against his valour; and my state that way is dangerous, since I cannot yet find in my heart to repent.] Here he comes: I pray you, make us friends; I will pursue the amity.

Enter Parolles.

Par. [To Bertram] These things shall be done, sir.

[Lafl. Pray you, sir, who's his tailor?
Par. Sir?

Laf. O, I know him well, I, sir; he, sir, 's a good workman, a very good tailor.] 21

Ber. [Aside to Par.] Is she gone to the king?
Par. [Aside to Ber.] She is.

Ber. [Aside to Par.] Will she away to-night?
Par. [Aside to Ber.] As you'll have her.

Ber. [Aside to Par.] I've writ my letters, casked my treasure,

1 To a compell'd restraint, by referring to a compulsory abstinence.
2 The curbed time, the time of restraint.

3 Probable need, a specious appearance of necessity.
4 Dial, watch.
Given order for our horses; and to-night,
When I should take possession of the bride,
End ere I do begin.

Laf. [A good traveller is something at the latter end of a dinner,1 but one that lies three-thirds, and uses a known truth to pass a thousand nothings with, should be once heard, and thrice beaten.—] God save you, captain.

Ber. Is there any between us?
that my lord and you, monsieur?

Par. I know not how I have deserved to run into my lord's displeasure.

Laf. You have made shift to run into 't, boots and spurs and all, like him that leaped into the custard; and out of it you'll run again, rather than suffer question for your residence.

Ber. It may be you have mistaken him, my lord.

Laf. And shall do so ever, though I took him at's prayers. Fare you well, my lord; and believe this of me, there can be no kernel in this light nut; the soul of this man is his clothes: [trust him not in matter of heavy consequence; I have kept of them tame, and know their natures.—Farewell, monsieur: I have spoken better of you than you have or will to deserve at my hand; but we must do good against evil.]

[Exit.]

Par. An idle lord, I swear.

Ber. I think so.

Par. Why, do you not know him?

Ber. Yes, I do know him well; and common speech
Gives him a worthy pass.—Here comes my clog.

Enter Helena.

Hel. I have, sir, as I was commanded from
you,
Spoke with the king, and have procur'd his leave
For present parting;2 only he desires
Some private speech with you.

Ber. I shall obey his will.
You must not marvel, Helen, at my course,
[Which holds not colour with the time, nor does
The ministration and required office
On my particular. Prepar'd I was not

For such a business; therefore am I found
So much unsettled: this drives me to entreat
you,
That presently you take your way for home,
And rather muse3 than ask why I entreat you;
For my respects4 are better than they seem,
And my appointments5 have in them a need
Greater than shows itself, at the first view,
To you that know them not. This to my mother: [Giving a letter.

'T will be two days ere I shall see you; so,
I leave you to your wisdom.

Hel. Sir, I can nothing say,
But that I am your most obedient servant.

Ber. Come, come, no more of that.

Hel. And ever shall
With true observance seek to eke out that Wherein toward me my homely stars have fail'd

To equal my great fortune.

Ber. Let that go:

My haste is very great: farewell; hie home.

Hel. Pray, sir, your pardon.

Ber. Well, what would you say?

Hel. I am not worthy of the wealth I owe;
Nor dare I say 't is mine,—and yet it is;
But, like a timorous thief, most fain would steal
What law does vouch mine own.

Ber. What would you have?

Hel. Something; and scarce so much:—nothing, indeed.—
I would not tell you what I would, my lord:—
Faith, yes;—
Strangers and foes do sunder, and not kiss.

Ber. I pray you, stay not, but in haste to horse.

Hel. I shall not break your bidding, good my lord.

Ber. Where are my other men, monsieur?—

Farewell. [Exit Helena.

Go thou toward home; where I will never come, Whilst I can shake my sword, or hear the drum.—
Away, and for our flight.

Par. Bravely, coraggio! [Exeunt.
ACT III.

Flourish. Enter the Duke of Florence, attended; the two Frenchmen with a troop of Soldiers.

Duke. So that, from point to point, now have you heard
The fundamental reasons of this war;
Whose great decision hath much blood let forth,
And more thirsts after.

First Lord. Holy seems the quarrel
Upon your grace’s part; black and fearful
On the opposer.

Duke. Therefore we marvel much our cousin France
Would, in so just a business, shut his bosom
Against our borrowing prayers.

Sec. Lord. Good my lord,
The reasons of our state I cannot yield,
But like a common and an outward man,
That the great figure of a council frames
By self unable motion; therefore dare not Say what I think of it, since I have found Myself in my inconstant grounds to fail
As often as I guess’d.

Duke. Be it his pleasure.

First Lord. But I am sure the younger of our nature,
That surfeit on their ease, will day by day
Come here for physic.

Duke. Welcome shall they be;
And all the honours that can fly from us shall on them settle. You know your places well;
When better fall, for your avails they fell:
To-morrow to the field. [Flourish. Exeunt.]

Scene II. Rouillon. The hall of the Countess’s house.

Enter Countess with letter, and Clown.

Count. [Having read Helena’s letter] It hath happened all as I would have had it, save that he comes not along with her.

Clo. By my troth, I take my young lord to be a very melancholy man.

Count. By what observance, I pray you?

Clo. Why, he will look upon his boot, and sing; mend the ruff, and sing; ask questions, and sing; pick his teeth, and sing. I know a man that had this trick of melancholy sold a goodly manor for a song.

Count. Let me see what he writes, and when he means to come. [Opening a letter.

Clo. I have no mind to Isbel, since I was at court; [our old ling and our Isbels’ o’ the country are nothing like your old ling and your Isbels’ o’ the court:] the brains of my Cupid’s knocked out; and I begin to love, as an old man loves money, with no stomach.

Count. What have we here? 19

Clo. E’en that you have there. [Exit.

Count. [Reads] “I have sent you a daughter-in-law: she hath recovered the king, and undone me. I have wedded her, not bedded her; and sworn to make the not eternal. You shall hear I am run away: know it before the report come. If there be breadth enough in the world, I will hold a long distance. My duty to you. Your unfortunate son, BERTRAM.”

This is not well, rash and unbridled boy, To fly the favours of so good a king; To pluck his indignation on thy head By the misprizing of a maid too virtuous For the contempt of empire.

Re-enter Clown.

Clo. O madam, yonder is heavy news within between two soldiers and my young lady!

Count. What is the matter?

Clo. Nay, there is some comfort in the news, some comfort; your son will not be killed so soon as I thought he would.

Count. Why should he be killed?

Clo. So say I, madam, if he run away, as I hear he does: [the danger is in standing to ‘t; that’s the loss of men, though it be the getting of children.] Here they come will tell you more: for my part, I only hear your son was run away. [Exit.

* Ling, a fish (Gadus morhua).
Enter Helena with a letter, and two Gentlemen.

First Gent. Save you, good madam.

Hel. Madam, my lord is gone, for ever gone.

Sec. Gent. Do not say so.

Count. Think upon patience.—Pray you, gentlemen,—I've felt so many quirks of joy and grief, That the first face of neither, on the start, Can woman me unto't:—where is my son, I pray you?

Sec. Gent. Madam, he's gone to serve the Duke of Florence:

[We met him thitherward; for thence we came, And, after some dispatch in hand at court, Thither we bend again.]

Hel. Look on his letter, madam; here's my passport.

[Reads] "When thou canst get the ring upon my finger which never shall come off, [and show me a child begotten of thy body that I am father to,] then call me husband: but in such a then I write a never."

This is a dreadful sentence.

Count. Brought you this letter, gentlemen? First Gent. Ay, madam; And, for the contents' sake, are sorry for our pains.

Count. I prithee, lady, have a better cheer; If thou engrossest all the griefs are thine, Thou robbest me of a moiety: he was my son; But I do wash his name out of my blood, And thou art all my child.—Towards Florence is he?

Sec. Gent. Ay, madam.

Count. And to be a soldier?

Sec. Gent. Such is his noble purpose: and, believe 't.

The duke will lay upon him all the honour That good convenience claims.

Count. Return you thither?

First Gent. Ay, madam, with the swiftest wing of speed.

Hel. [Reads] "Till I have no wife, I have nothing in France."

T is bitter.

Count. Find you that there?

Hel. Ay, madam.

[First Gent. 'Tis but the boldness of his hand, haply, which his heart was not consenting to.]

Count. Nothing in France, until he have no wife!

There's nothing here that is too good for him, But only she; and she deserves a lord, That twenty such rude boys might tend upon,

And call her hourly mistress.—Who was with him?

First Gent. A servant only, and a gentleman Which I have some time known.

Count. Parolles, was't not?

First Gent. Ay, my good lady, he.

Count. A very tainted fellow, and full of wickedness.

My son corrupts a well-derived nature With his inducement.²

[First Gent. Indeed, good lady, The fellow has a deal of that too much, Which holds him much to have.

Count.] Y' are welcome, gentlemen. I will entreat you, when you see my son, To tell him that his sword can never win The honour that he loses: more I'll entreat you Written to bear along.

Sec. Gent. We serve you, madam, In that and all your worthiest affairs.

Count. Not so, but as we change our courtesies.

Will you draw near?

[Exeunt Countess and Gentlemen.

Hel. "Till I have no wife, I have nothing in France."

Nothing in France, until he has no wife! Thou shalt have none, Roussillon, none in France;

Then hast thou all again. Poor lord! is't I That chase thee from thy country, and expose Those tender limbs of thine to the event Of the none-sparing war? and is it I That drive thee from the sportive court, where thou

Wast shot at with fair eyes, to be the mark Of smoky muskets? [O you leaden messengers, That ride upon the violent speed of fire,]

---

¹ Quirks, humours.
² Convenience, propriety.
ALL’S WELL THAT ENDS WELL

ACT III. Scene 2.

[Fly with false aim; move the still-piercing air,
That sings with piercing; do not touch my lord!]

Whoever shoots at him, I set him there;
Whoever charges on his forward breast,
I am the caiff that do hold him to ’t;
And, though I kill him not, I am the cause

As oft it loses all: I will be gone;
My being here it is that holds thee hence:
Shall I stay here to do ’t? no, no, although
The air of paradise did fan the house,
And angels offic’d all: I will be gone,
That pitiful rumour may report my flight, 130
To console thine ear. Come, night; end, day!
For with the dark, poor thief, I’ll steal away.
[Exit.

Duke. The general of our horse thou art; and we,
Great in our hope, lay our best love and credence
Upon thy promising fortune.

Ber. Sir, it is
A charge too heavy for my strength; but yet
We’ll strive to bear it, for your worthy sake,
To th’ extreme edge of hazard.

Duke. Then go thou forth;
And Fortune play upon thy prosperous helm,
As thy auspicious mistress!

Ber. This very day,
Great Mars, I put myself into thy file:
Make me but like my thoughts, and I shall prove
A lover of thy drum, hater of love. [Exeunt.

Scene IV. Roussillon. Hall in the Countess’s house.

Enter Countess and Steward.

Count. Alas! and would you take the letter of her?
Might you not know she’d do as she has done,
By sending me a letter? Read it again.

Stew. [Reads]

“I am Saint Jacques’ pilgrim, thither gone:
Ambitious love hath so in me offended,
That barefoot plod I the cold ground upon,
With sainted vow my faults to have amended.
Write, write, that from the bloody course of war
My dearest master, your dear son, may live:
Bless him at home in peace, whilst I from far
His name with zealous fervour sanctify:

1 Still-piercing, closing again immediately.
2 Ravish, ravensous.
3 Whence, from there where.
ACT III. Scene 4.

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

His taken labours bid him me forgive;
I, his despiteful Juno, sent him forth
From courtly friends, with camping foes to live, Where death and danger does the heels of worth:
He is too good and fair for death and me;
Whom I myself embrace, to set him free."

Count. Ah, what sharp stings are in her mildest words!—
Rinaldo, you did never lack advice so much,
As letting her pass so: had I spoke with her,
I could have well diverted her intents,
Which thus she hath prevented.
Sext. Pardon me, madam:
If I had given you this at over-night,
She might have been o'erta'en; and yet she writes,
Pursuit would be but vain.
Count. What angel shall Bless this unworthy husband? he cannot thrive, Unless her prayers, whom heaven delights to hear,
And loves to grant, reprieve him from the wrath
Of greatest justice.—Write, write, Rinaldo,
To this unworthy husband of his wife;
Let every word weigh heavy of her worth,
That he does weigh too light: my greatest grief,
Though little he do feel it, set down sharply.
Dispatch the most convenient messenger:—
When haply he shall hear that she is gone,
He will return; and hope I may that she,
Hearing so much, will speed her foot again,
Led hither by pure love: which of them both
Is dearest to me, I've no skill in sense
To make distinction:—provide this messenger:—
My heart is heavy and mine age is weak:
Grief would have tears, and sorrow bids me speak.

[Exeunt.]

Scene V. Florence. Before the gates.
A distant march.

Enter an old Widow of Florence, Diana, Viol-enta, and Mariana, with other Citizens.

Wid. Nay, come; for if they do approach the city, we shall lose all the sight.

Dia. They say the French count has done most honourable service.

 Wid. It is reported that he has taken their greatest commander; and that with his own hand he slew the duke's brother. [Distant march.] We have lost our labour; they are gone a contrary way: hark! you may know by their trumpets.

Mar. Come, let's return again, and suffice ourselves with the report of it. Well, Diana, take heed of this French earl: the honour of a maid is her name; and no legacy is so rich as honesty.

 Wid. I have told my neighbour how you have been solicited by a gentleman his companion.

Mar. I know that knave; hang him! one Parolles: a filthy officer he is in those suggestions for the young earl.—Beware of them,
Diana; [their promises, enticements, oaths,

1 Whom, i.e. death. 2 Advice, consideration, discretion.
8 Suggestions, incitements, temptations.
tokens, and all these engines of lust, are not the things they go under: many a maid hath been seduced by them; and the misery is, example, that so terrible shows in the wreck of maidenhood, cannot for all that dissuade succession,¹ but that they are limed with the twigs that threaten them.] I hope I need not to advise you further; but I hope your own grace will keep you where you are, though there were no further danger known but the modesty which is so lost.

_Dia._ You shall not need to fear me.

_Wid._ I hope so.—Look, here comes a pilgrim: I know she will lie at my house; thither they send one another: I’ll question her.

_Elter Helena, disguised like a pilgrim._

God save you, pilgrim! whither are you bound?

_Hel._ To Saint Jaques le Grand.

Where do the palmer’s lodge, I do beseech you?

_Wid._ At the Saint Francis here, beside the port.

_Hel._ Is this the way?

_Wid._ Ay, marry, is ‘t.—Hark you! they come this way.—

[A march afur.

If you will tarry, holy pilgrim,
But till the troops come by,
I will conduct you where you shall be lodg’d;
The rather, for I think I know your hostess
As ample² as myself.

_Hel._ Is it yourself?

_Wid._ If you shall please so, pilgrim.

_Hel._ I thank you, and will stay upon your leisure.

_Wid._ You came, I think, from France?

_Hel._ I did so.

_Wid._ Here you shall see a countryman of yours

That has done worthy service.

_Hel._ His name, I pray you.

_Dia._ The Count Rousillon: know you such a one?

_Hel._ But by the ear, that hears most nobly of him:

His face I know not.

_Dia._ Whateoe’er he is,

He’s bravely taken here. He stole from France,

As ’tis reported, for the king had married him

Against his liking: think you it is so?

_Hel._ Ay, surely, mere the truth: I know his lady.

_Dia._ There is a gentleman that serves the count

Reports but coarsely of her.

_Hel._ What’s his name?

_Dia._ Monsieur Parolles.

_Hel._ O, I believe with him,

In argument of praise,³ or to⁴ the worth

Of the great count himself, she is too mean

To have her name repeated: all her deserving

Is a reserved honesty, and that

I have not heard examin’d.⁵

_Dia._ Alas, poor lady!

’Tis a hard bondage to become the wife

Of a detesting lord.

_Wid._ I war’n’t, good creature, wheresoe’er she is,

Her heart weighs sadly: this young maid might do her

A shrewd turn, if she pleas’d.

_Hel._ How do you mean?

May be the amorous count solicits her

In the unlawful purpose.

_Wid._ He does indeed;

And brokes with all that can in such a suit

Corrupt the tender honour of a maid:

But she is arm’d for him, and keeps her guard

In honestest defence.

_Mar._ The gods forbid else!

_Wid._ So, now they come:—

_Flourish of trumpets._

_Elter Bertram, Parolles, and the whole army._

[That is Antonio, the duke’s eldest son;

That, Escalus.] ²

_Hel._ Which is the Frenchman?

_Dia._ He;

That with the plume: ’tis a most gallant fellow.

---

¹ Succession, i.e. their following the example of others who have been wrecked before them.
² Ample, fully.
³ In argument of praise, as for praise.
⁴ To, in comparison with.
⁵ Examin’d, called in question.
I would he lov'd his wife: if he were honester, He were much goodlier: is't not a handsome gentleman?

_Hel._ I like him well.

_Dia._ 'Tis pity he's not honest: yond's that same knave [pointing at Parolles]
That leads him to these passes:4 were I his lady, I'd poison that vile rascal.

_Hel._ Which is he?

_Dia._ That jack-an-apes with scarfs: why is he melancholy?

_Hel._ Perchance he's hurt i' the battle.

_Par._ Lose our drum! well.

_Mar._ He's shrewdly vex'd at something: look, he has spied us.

_Wid._ Marry, hang you!

_Mar._ And your courtesy, for a ring-carrier!

[Exeunt Bertram, Parolles, and army.

_Wid._ The troop is past. Come, pilgrim, I will bring you Where you shall host:2 of enjoin'd penitents There's four or five, to Great Saint Jaques3 bound, Already at my house.

_Hel._ I humbly thank you: Please it this matron and this gentle maid To eat with us to-night, the charge and thanking Shall be for me; and, to requite you further, I will bestow some precepts of this virgin Worthy the note.

_Both._ We'll take your offer kindly.

[Exeunt.

_SCENE VI._ A room in Bertram's lodgings.

_Enter Bertram and the two French Lords._

_Sec. Lord._ Nay, good my lord, put him to 't; let him have his way.

_First Lord._ If your lordship find him not a hilding,4 hold me no more in your respect.

_Sec. Lord._ On my life, my lord, a bubble.

_Ber._ Do you think I am so far deceived in him?

_Sec. Lord._ Believe it, my lord, in mine own direct knowledge, without any malice, but to speak of him as my kinsman, he's a most notable coward, an infinite and endless liar, an hourly promise-breaker, the owner of no one good quality worthy your lordship's entertainment.5

[_First Lord._ It were fit you knew him; lest, reposing too far in his virtue, which he hath not, he might at some great and trusty business, in a main danger, fail you.]

_Ber._ I would I knew in what particular action to try him.

_First Lord._ None better than to let him fetch off his drum, which you hear him so confidently undertake to do.

_Sec. Lord._ I, with a troop of Florentines, will suddenly surprise him; such I will have, whom, I am sure, he knows not from the enemy: we will bind and hoodwink him so, that he shall suppose no other but that he is carried into the leaguer of the adversaries, when we bring him to our own tents. Be but your lordship present at his examination: if he do not, for the promise of his life, and in the highest compulsion of base fear, offer to betray you, and deliver all the intelligence in his power against you, and that with the divine forfeit of his soul upon oath, never trust my judgment in any thing.

[_First Lord._ O, for the love of laughter, let him fetch his drum; he says he has a stratagem for 't: when your lordship sees the bottom of his success in 't, and to what metal this counterfeit lump of ore will be melted, if you give him not John Drum's entertainment, your inclining cannot be removed.}_—Here he comes.

_Sec. Lord._ O, for the love of laughter, hinder not the honour of his design: let him fetch off his drum in any hand.8

_Enter Parolles._

_Ber._ How now, monsieur! this drum sticks sorely in your disposition.

_First Lord._ A pox on 't, let it go; 't is but a drum.

_Par._ But a drum! is 't but a drum? A drum so lost!—There was excellent command,—to charge in with our horse upon our own wings, and to rend our own soldiers!

---

1 Passe, course.
2 Host, lodge.
3 Jaques, dissyllable here, as in iii. 4. 4, and elsewhere.
4 Hilding, a base fellow.
5 Entertainment, service, as in iv. 1. 17.
6 In any hand, in any case.
[First Lord. That was not to be blamed in the command of the service: it was a disaster of war that Caesar himself could not have prevented, if he had been there to command.]  60

Ber. Well, we cannot greatly condemn our success: some dishonour we had in the loss of that drum; but it is not to be recovered.

Par. It might have been recovered.

Ber. It might; but it is not now.

Par. It is to be recovered: but that the merit of service is seldom attributed to the ture and exact performer, I would have that drum or another, or hic jacet. 1

Ber. Why, if you have a stomach 2 to 't, monsieur: if you think your mystery in stratagem can bring this instrument of honour again into his native quarter, be magnanimous in the-terprise, and go on; I will grace the attempt for a worthy exploit: if you speed well in it, the duke shall both speak of it, and extend to you what further becomes his greatness, even to the utmost syllable of your worthiness.

Par. By the hand of a soldier, I will undertake it.

Ber. But you must not now slumber in it.

Par. I'll about it this evening; [and I will presently pen down my dilemmas, encourage myself in my certainty, put myself into my mortal preparation; 3 ] and, by midnight, look to hear further from me.

Ber. May I be bold to acquaint his grace you are gone about it?

Par. I know not what the success will be, my lord; but the attempt I vow.

Ber. I know thou'rt valiant; and, to the possibility of thy soldiery, 4 will subscribe for thee. Farewell.

Par. I love not many words.  [Exit.

Sec. Lord. No more than a fish loves water.
—Is not this a strange fellow, my lord, that so confidently seems to undertake this business, which he knows is not to be done; damns himself to do, and dares better be damned than to do 't?

[First Lord. You do not know him, my lord, as we do: certain it is, that he will steal himself into a man's favour, and for a week escape a great deal of discoveries; but when you find him out, you have him ever after.]

Ber. Why, do you think he will make no deed at all of this, that so seriously he does address himself unto?

Sec. Lord. None in the world; but return with an invention, and clap upon you two or three probable lies: [ but we have almost embossed him, 5—you shall see his fall to-night;
for indeed he is not for your lordship's respect.]

First Lord. We'll make you some sport with the fox, ere we case 6 him. He was first smoked 7 by the old Lord Lefeu: when his disguise and he is parted, tell me what a sprat you shall find him; which you shall see this very night.

Sec. Lord. I must go look my twigs: he shall be caught.

Ber. Your brother, he shall go along with me.

Sec. Lord. As't please your lordship: I'll leave you.  [Exit.

Ber. Now will I lead you to the house, and show you

The less I spoke of.

First Lord. But you say she's honest.

Ber. That's all the fault: I spoke with her but once,

And found her wondrous cold; but I sent to her,

By this same coxcomb that we have i' the wind, 8

Tokens and letters which she did re-send;

And this is all I've done. She's a fair creature:

Will you go see her?

First Lord. With all my heart, my lord.  [Exeunt.

SCENE VII. Florence. A room in the Widow's house.

Enter HELENA and WIDOW.

Hel. If you misdoubt me that I am not she,
I know not how I shall assure you further,
But I shall lose the grounds 9 I work upon.

1 Hic jacet, here lies.
2 Stomach, inclination.
3 My mortal preparation, my preparation for death.
4 To the possibility of thy soldiery, as far as the matter depends on what thy soldiery may possibly accomplish.
5 Embossed him, inclosed him like game.
6 Case, flag, strip.
7 Smoked, smelled out, found out.
8 We have i' the wind, we have scent of.
9 Grounds, foundations.
Wid. Though my estate be fall'n, I was well born,
Nothing acquainted with these businesses;
And would not put my reputation now
In any staining act.

Hel. Nor would I wish you.
First, give me trust, the count he is my husband,

And what to your sworn counsel I have spoken
Is so from word to word; and then you cannot,
By the good aid that I of you shall borrow,
Err in bestowing it.

Wid. I should believe you;
For you have show'd me that which well approves
You're great in fortune.

Hel. If you misdoubt me that I am not she,
I know not how I shall assure you further.—(Act III. 7. 1, 2.)

Hel. Take this purse of gold,
And let me buy your friendly help thus far,
Which I will over-pay and pay again,
When I have found it. The count he woos your daughter,
Lays down his wanton siege before her beauty,
Resolv'd to carry her: let her, in fine, consent,

As we'll direct her how 'tis best to bear it;
Now his important blood will naught deny
That she'll demand: a ring the county wears,
That downward hath succeeded in his house.

From son to son, some four or five descents
Since the first father wore it: this ring he holds
In most rich choice; yet, in his idle fire,
To buy his will, it would not seem too dear,
Howe'er repented after.

Wid. Now I see
The bottom of your purpose.

Hel. You see it lawful, then: it is no more,
But that your daughter, ere she seems as won,
Desires this ring; appoints him an encounter;
In fine, delivers me to fill the time,
Herself most chastely absent: after this,

---

1 Bear, manage, execute.
2 Important, importunate.
ACT III. Scene 7.

To marry her, I'll add three thousand crowns
To what is past already.

Wid. I have yielded:
Instruct my daughter how she shall persevere,
That time and place with this deceit so lawful
May prove coherent. Every night he comes
With musics of all sorts, and songs composed
To her unworthiness: it nothing steads us 41

To chide him from our eaves; for he persists,
As if his life lay on't.

Hel. Why, then, to-night
Let us assay our plot; which, if it speed,
Is wicked meaning in a lawful deed,
And lawful meaning in a lawful act;
Where both not sin, and yet a sinful fact: 3
But let's about it. [Exeunt.

ACT IV.

Scene I. The French camp before Florence.

Enter Second French Lord, with five or six other Soldiers in ambush.

Sec. Lord. He can come no other way but by this hedge-corner. When you sally upon him, speak what terrible language you will,— though you understand it not yourselves, no matter; for we must not seem to understand him, unless some one among us, whom we must produce for an interpreter.

First Sold. Good captain, let me be the interpreter.

Sec. Lord. Art not acquainted with him? knows he not thy voice?

First Sold. No, sir, I warrant you.

Sec. Lord. But what linsey-woolsey hast thou to speak to us again?

First Sold. E'en such as you speak to me.

Sec. Lord. He must think us some band of strangers 'i the adversary's entertainment.
Now, he hath a smack of all neighbouring languages; therefore we must every one be a man of his own fancy, not to know what we speak one to another; so we seem to know, is to know straight our purpose: choughs' language, gabble enough, and good enough. As for you, interpreter, you must seem very politic.—But couch, ho! here he comes,—to beguile two hours in a sleep, and then to return and swear the lies he forges.

Enter Parolles.

Par. Ten o'clock: within these three hours
't will be time enough to go home. What shall

1 Musics, bands of musicians.
2 It nothing steads, it is of no use.

I say I have done? It must be a very plausive invention that carries it: they begin to smoke me; and disgraces have of late knocked too often at my door. I find my tongue is too foolhardy; but my heart hath the fear of Mars before it and of his creatures, not daring the reports of my tongue.

Sec. Lord. [Aside] This is the first truth that e'er thine own tongue was guilty of.

Par. What the devil should move me to undertake the recovery of this drum, being not ignorant of the impossibility, and knowing
I had no such purpose? I must give myself some hurts, and say I got them in exploit: yet slight ones will not carry it; they will say,
"Came you off with so little?" and great ones
I dare not give. Wherefore, what's the instance? 4 Tongue, I must put you into a butter-woman's mouth, and buy myself another of Bajazet's mule, if you prattle me into these perils.

Sec. Lord. [Aside] Is it possible he should know what he is, and be that he is?

Par. I would the cutting of my garments would serve the turn, or the breaking of my Spanish sword.

Sec. Lord. [Aside] We cannot afford you so.

Par. Or the baring 4 of my beard; and to say it was in stratagem.

Sec. Lord. [Aside] T would not do.

Par. Or to drown my clothes, and say I was stripped—

Par. Though I swore I leaped from the window of the citadel—

3 Fact, crime.
4 Instance, proof.
5 Baring, shaving.
Par. Thirty fathom.
Sec. Lord. [Aside] Three great oaths would scarce make that be believed.
Par. I would I had any drum of the enemy's:
I would swear I recovered it.
Sec. Lord. [Aside] You shall hear one anon.
[Drum beats without.
Par. A drum now of the enemy's!
Sec. Lord. Throca movousus, cargo, cargo, cargo.
All. Cargo, cargo, cargo, villianda par corbo, cargo.
Par. O, ransom, ransom!—do not hide mine eyes. 71
[They seize and blindfold him.
First Sold. Boskos thronulido boskos.
Par. Within these three hours 't will be time enough to go home.—(Act iv. 1. 37, 38.)

Par. I know you are the Muskos' regiment;
And I shall lose my life for want of language:
If there be here German, or Dane, low Dutch,
Italian, or French, let him speak to me;
I will discover that which shall undo
The Florentine.
First Sold. Boskos vauvado:—
I understand thee, and can speak thy tongue:—
Kerelybonto:—sir,
Bethe thee to thy faith, for seventeen poniards
Are at thy bosom.
Par. O!

First Sold. O, pray, pray, pray!—
Manka revania dulche.
Sec. Lord. Oscorbidulchos volvorco.
First Sold. The general is content to spare thee yet;
And, hoodwink'd as thou art, will lead thee on
To gather from thee: hapy thou mayst inform
Something to save thy life.
Par. O, let me live!
And all the secrets of our camp I'll show,
Their force, their purposes; nay, I'll speak that
Which you will wonder at.
First Sold. But wilt thou faithfully?
ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

Par. If I do not, damn me.

First Sold. Acordo hinta—
Come on; thou art granted space.

[Exit, with Paroles guarded by four Soldiers. Drum beats without.

Sec. Lord. Go, tell the Count Roussillon, and my brother,
We've caught the woodcock, and will keep him
muffled.

Till we do hear from them.

Sec. Sold. Captain, I will.

Sec. Lord. 'A will betray us all unto ourselves:—
Inform on that.

Sec. Sold. So I will, sir.

First Lord. Till then I'll keep him dark and safely lock'd.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II. Florence. A room in the Widow's house.

Enter Bertram and Diana.

Ber. They told me that your name was Fontibell.

Dia. No, my good lord, Diana.

Ber. Titled goddess;
And worth it, with addition! But, fair soul,
In your fine frame hath love no quality?
If the quick fire of youth light not your mind,
You are no maiden, but a monument:
When you are dead, you should be such a one
As you are now, for you are cold and stern;
And now you should be as your mother was [When your sweet self was got.

Dia. She then was honest.

Ber. So should you be.]

Dia.

No:

My mother did but duty; such, my lord,
As you owe to your wife.

Ber. No more o' that,—
I prithee, do not strive against my vows:
I was compell'd to her; but I love thee
By love's own sweet constraint, and will for ever
Do thee all rights of service.

Dia. Ay, so you serve us Till we serve you; but when you have our rooses,

You barely leave our thorns to prick ourselves,
And mock us with our bareness.

Ber. How have I sworn!
Dia. 'T is not the many oaths that make the truth,
But the plain single vow that is vow'd true.

[What is not holy, that we swear not by,
But take the High' st to witness: then, pray you,
tell me,]
If I should swear by God's great attributes,
I lov'd you dearly, would you believe my oaths,
When I did love you ill? This has no holding.
To swear by him whom I protest to love,
That I will work against him. Therefore your oaths
Are words and poor conditions, but unseal'd,
At least in my opinion.

Ber. Change it, change it;
Be not so holy-cruel: love is holy;
And my integrity ne'er knew the crafts
That you do charge men with. Stand no more off,
But give thyself unto my sick desires,
Who then recover: say thou 't mine, and ever
My love as it begins shall so persever.

Dia. I see that men make ropes in such a scarce,
That we'll forsake ourselves. Give me that ring.

Ber. I'll lend it thee, my dear; but have no power
To give it from me.

Dia. Will you not, my lord?

Ber. It is an honour longing to our house,
Bequeathed down from many ancestors;
Which were the greatest obloquy i' the world
In me to lose.

Dia. Mine honour's such a ring:
My chastity's the jewel of our house,
Bequeathed down from many ancestors;
Which were the greatest obloquy i' the world
In me to lose: thus your own proper wisdom
Brings in the champion honour on my part,
Against your vain assault.

Ber. Here, take my ring:
My house, mine honour, yea, my life, be thine,
And I'll be bid by thee.

\[Barley lease, leave bare, naked.

* Holding, binding force, validity.\]
ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

ACT IV. Scene 2.

Dia. When midnight comes, knock at my chamber-window:
I'll order take my mother shall not hear.
Now will I charge you in the band of truth,
When you have conquer'd my yet-maiden bed,
Remain there but an hour, nor speak to me:
My reasons are most strong; and you shall know them
When back again this ring shall be deliver'd:
And on your finger, in the night, I'll put 't
Another ring, that what in time proceeds
May token to the future our past deeds.
Adieu, till then; then fail not. You have won
A wife of me, though there my hope be done.
Bess. A heaven on earth I've won by wooing thee. [Exit.
Dia. For which live long to thank both heaven and me!
You may so in the end.—
My mother told me just how he would woo,
As if she sat in 's heart; she says all men 70
Have the like oaths: [he had sworn to marry me
When his wife's dead; therefore I'll lie with him
When I am buried.] Since Frenchmen are so braid,1
Marry that will, I live and die a maid:
Only, in this disguise, I think 't no sin
To cozen him that would unjustly win. [Exit.

SCENE III. The Florentine camp.

Enter the two French Lords.

First Lord. You have not given him his mother's letter?
Sec. Lord. I have delivered it an hour since: there is something in 't that stings his nature; for, on the reading it, he changed almost into another man.

First Lord. He has much worthy blame laid upon him for shaking off so good a wife and so sweet a lady.
Sec. Lord. Especially he hath incurred the everlasting displeasure of the king, who had even tuned his bounty2 to sing happiness to him. I will tell you a thing, but you shall let it dwell darkly with you.

First Lord. When you have spoken it, 't is dead, and I am the grave of it.
Sec. Lord. He hath perverted a young gentlewoman here in Florence, of a most chaste renown; [and this night he fleshes his will in the spoil of her honour: ] he hath given her his monumental3 ring, and thinks himself made in the unchaste composition.

First Lord. I have delivered it an hour since.—(Act iv. 3. 3.)

First Lord. [Now, God delay our rebellion! as we are ourselves, what things are we!
Sec. Lord. Merely our own traitors. And as in the common course of all treasons, we still see them reveal themselves, till they attain to their abhorred ends, so he that in this action contrives against his own nobility, in his proper stream o'erflows himself.

First Lord. Is it not meant dannable in us, to be trumpeters of our unlawful intents?]

1 Braid, deceitful.
2 Bounty, benevolence.
3 Monumental, memorial.
We shall not, then, have his company to-night?

Sec. Lord. Not till after midnight; [for he is disted to his hour.

First Lord. That approaches apace: I would gladly have him see his company\(^1\) anatomized, that he might take a measure of his own judgments, wherein so curiously\(^2\) he had set this counterfeit.\(^3\)

Sec. Lord. We will not meddle with him till he come; for his presence must be the whip of the other.]

First Lord. In the mean time, what hear you of these wars?

Sec. Lord. I hear there is an overture of peace.

First Lord. Nay, I assure you, a peace concluded.

Sec. Lord. What will Count Rousillon do then? will he travel higher, or return again into France?

First Lord. I perceive, by this demand, you are not altogether of his council.

Sec. Lord. Let it be forbid, sir! so should I be a great deal of his act.

First Lord. Sir, his wife, some two months since, fled from his house; her pretence is a pilgrimage to Saint Jaques le Grand; which holy undertaking, with most austere sanctimony, she accomplished; and, there residing, the tenderness of her nature became as a prey to her grief; in fine, made a groan of her last breath; and now she sings in heaven.

Sec. Lord. How is this justified?\(^4\)

First Lord. The stronger\(^5\) part of it by her own letters, which make her story true, even to the point of her death: her death itself, which could not be her office to say is come, was faithfully confirmed by the rector of the place.

Sec. Lord. Hath the count all this intelligence?

First Lord. Ay, and the particular confirmations, point from point, to the full arming of the verity.

[Sec. Lord. I am heartily sorry that he'll be glad of this.

---

\(^1\) Company, companion.  \(^2\) Curiously, carefully.  \(^3\) Counterfeit, false coin, i.e. parasites.  \(^4\) Justified, proved.  \(^5\) Stronger, more certain.
Ber. No matter; his heels have deserved it, in usurping his spurs so long. How does he carry himself? 120

Sec. Lord. I have told your lordship already,—the stocks carry him. But, to answer you as you would be understood; he weeps like a wench that had shed her milk:] he hath confessed himself to Morgan, whom he supposes to be a friar, from the time of his remembrance to this very instant disaster of his setting in the stocks: and what think you he hath confessed?

Ber. Nothing of me, has a'? 129

Sec. Lord. His confession is taken, and it shall be read to his face: if your lordship be in 't, as I believe you are, you must have the patience to hear it.

Ber. A plague upon him! [looking off]. Muffled! he can say nothing of me. —Hush, hush!

Enter the six Soldiers, bringing in Parolles blindfolded.

First Sold. He calls for the tortures: what will you say without 'em?

Par. I will confess what I know without constraint: if ye pinch me like a pasty, I can say no more. 141

First Sold. Bosko chimurcho.

First Lord. Boblibindo chicurmurco.

First Sold. You are a merciful general. —Our general bids you answer to what I shall ask you out of a note.

Par. And truly, as I hope to live.

First Sold. [Reads] "First demand of him how many horse the duke is strong." What say you to that?

Par. Five or six thousand; but very weak and unserviceable: the troops are all scattered, and the commanders very poor rogues, upon my reputation and credit, and as I hope to live.

First Sold. Shall I set down your answer so?

Par. Do: I'll take the sacrament on 't, how and which way you will.

Ber. All's one to him. What a past-saving slave is this!

—First Lord. You're deceived, my lord: this is Monsieur Parolles, the gallant militarist,—that was his own phrase,—that had the whole theoretic of war in the knot of his scarf, and the practice in the chape of his dagger.

Sec. Lord. I will never trust a man again for keeping his sword clean; nor believe he can have everything in him by wearing his apparel neatly.

First Sold. Well, that's set down. 169

Par. Five or six thousand horse, I said,—I will say true,—or thereabouts, set down,—for I'll speak truth.

First Lord. He's very near the truth in this.

—First Sold. [Reads] "Demand of him, of what strength they are a-foot." What say you to that?

Par. By my troth, sir, if I were to live this present hour, I will tell true. Let me see: [Spurio, a hundred and fifty; Sebastian, so many; Corambus, so many; Jaques, so many; Guiltian, Cosmo, Lodowick, and Gratio, two hundred fifty each; mine own company, Chitophers, Vaumond, Bentii, two hundred fifty each: so that the muster-file, rotten and sound, upon my life, amounts not to fifteen thousand poll; half of the which dare not shake the snow from off their cassocks, lest they shake themselves to pieces.

Ber. What shall be done to him?

First Lord. Nothing, but let him have thanks.—Demand of him my condition, and what credit I have with the duke.

First Sold. Well, that's set down. [Reads] "You shall demand of him, whether one Captain Dumain be i'the camp, a Frenchman; what his reputation is with the duke; what his valour, honesty, and expertness in wars; or whether he thinks it were not possible, with well-weighing sums of gold, to corrupt him to a revolt." What say you to this? what do you know of it?

Par. I beseech you, let me answer to the particular of the intergatories: demand them singly.

First Sold. Do you know this Captain Dumain? 209

---

1 Shed, upset. 2 Hoodman, Parolles blindfolded.

* Chape, the metal tip at the end of the scabbard.
* A-foot, i.e. in infantry.
* Condition, character.
ACT IV. Scene 3.

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL

Par. I know him: a' was a butcher's 'prentice in Paris, from whence he was whipped for getting the shrieve's fool with child,—a dumb innocen, that could not say him nay. 214

[First Lord (Dumain) lifts his hand as if to strike Parolles.

Ber. Nay, by your leave, hold your hands; though I know his brains are forfeit to the next tile that falls.

First Sold. Well, is this captain in the Duke of Florence's camp? 219

Par. Upon my knowledge, he is, and lousy.

First Lord. Nay, look not so upon me; we shall hear of your lordship anon.

First Sold. What is his reputation with the duke?

Par. The duke knows him for no other but a poor officer of mine; and writ to me this other day to turn him out o' the band: I think I have his letter in my pocket.

First Sold. Marry, we'll search. 229

Par. In good sadness, I do not know; either it is there, or it is upon a file, with the duke's other letters, in my tent.

First Sold. Here 'tis; here's a paper: shall I read it to you?

Par. I do not know if it be it or no.

Ber. Our interpreter does it well.

First Lord. Excellently.

First Sold. [Reads] 238

"Dian, the count's a fool, and full of gold,"

Par. That is not the duke's letter, sir; that is an advertisement to a proper maid in Florence, one Diana, to take heed of the allurement of one Count Rouillon, a foolish idle boy, but, for all that, very ruttish: I pray you, sir, put it up again. [Bertram lifts his hand as if to strike Parolles.

First Sold. Nay, I'll read it first, by your favour.

Par. My meaning in 't, I protest, was very honest in the behalf of the maid; [for I knew the young count to be a dangerous and lascivious boy, who is a whale to virginity, and devours up all the fry it finds.] 250

Ber. Dammable, both-sides rogue!

First Sold. [Reads]

"When he swears oaths, bid him drop gold, and take it; after he scores, he never pays the score:

Half won is match well made; match, and well make it;

He ne'er pays after debts, take it before;
And say a soldier, Dian, told thee this,
Men are to me! with, boys are not to kiss:
For count of this, the count's a fool, I know it,
Who pays before, but not when he does owe it.

Thine, as he vowed to thee in thine ear," 269

Parolles."

Ber. He shall be whipped through the army, with this rhyme in 's forehead.

Sec. Lord. This is your devoted friend, sir, the manifold linguist, and the armipotent soldier.

Ber. I could endure any thing before but a cat, and now he's a cat to me.

First Sold. I perceive, sir, by the general's looks, we shall be fain to hang you. 269

[First Lord whispers to the Soldier.

Par. [Falls on his knee] My life, sir, in any case: not that I am afraid to die; but that, my offences being many, I would repent out the remainder of nature: let me live, sir, in a dungeon, i' the stocks, or any where, so I may live.

First Sold. We'll see what may be done, so you confess freely; therefore, once more to this Captain Dumain: you have answered to his reputation with the duke, and to his valour: what is his honesty? 273

Par. He will steal, sir, an egg out of a cloister: for rapes and ravishments he parallels Nessus: he professes not keeping of oaths; in breaking 'em he is stronger than Hercules: he will lie, sir, with such voluptuily, that you would think truth were a fool: [drunkeness is his best virtue, for he will be swine-drunk; and in his sleep he does little harm, save to his bed-clothes about him; but they know his conditions, and lay him in straw.] I have but little more to say, sir, of his honesty: he has every thing that an honest man should not have; what an honest man should have, he has nothing. 292

First Lord. I begin to love him for this.

[Ber. For this description of thine honesty?

A pox upon him for me, he's more and more a cat.]

1 Meel, meddle.
2 Count of this, take notice of this.
ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

First Sold. What say you to his expertness in war? 298

Par. Faith, sir, has led the drum before the English tragedians,—to belie him, I will not,—and more of his soldiership I know not; except, in that country he had the honour to be the officer at a place there called Mile-end, to instruct for the doubling of files: I would do the man what honour I can, but of this I am not certain. 299

[First Lord. He hath out-villained villany so far, that the rarity redeems him.]

Bor. A pox on him, he's a cat still. 300

First Sold. His qualities being at this poor price, I need not to ask you if gold will corrupt him to revolt. 310

Par. Sir, for a cardecue he will sell the fee-simply of his salvation, the inheritance of it; and cut the entail from all remainders, and a perpetual succession for it perpetually.]

First Sold. What's his brother, the other Captain Dumain?

Sec. Lord. Why does he ask him of me?

First Sold. What's he? 319

Par. E'en a crow o' the same nest; not altogether so great as the first in goodness, but greater a great deal in evil: he excels his brother for a coward, yet his brother is reputed one of the best that is: in a retreat he outruns any lackey; marry, in coming on he has the cramp.

First Sold. If your life be saved, will you undertake to betray the Florentine?

Par. Ay, and the captain of his horse, Count Rousillon.

First Sold. I'll whisper with the general, and know his pleasure. 330

Par. [Aside] I'll no more drumming; a plague of all drums! Only to seem to deserve 47 well, and to beguile the supposition of that lascivious young boy the count, have I run into this danger: yet who would have suspected an ambush where I was taken?

First Sold. There is no remedy, sir, but you must die [Parolles groans]: the general says, you that have so traitorously discovered the secrets of your army, and made such pestiferous reports of men very nobly held, can serve the world for no honest use; therefore you must die.—Come, headsman, off with his head. 342

Par. O Lord, sir, let me live, or let me see my death!

First Sold. That shall you, and take your leave of all your friends. [Unmuffling him. So, look about you: know you any here?

[All laugh, and bow mockingly to Parolles.
Ber. Good morrow, noble captain. 349
Sec. Lord. God bless you, Captain Parolles.
First Lord. God save you, noble captain.
Sec. Lord. Captain, what greeting will you to my Lord Lafeu? I am for France.

First Lord. Good captain, will you give me a copy of the sonnet you write to Diana in behalf of the Count Rousillon? an I were not a very coward, I'd compel it of you: but fare you well. [Exeunt Bertram and Lords, laughing.

First Sold. You are undone, captain; all but your scarf, that has a knot on't yet. 359

Par. [Rising] Who cannot be crushed with a plot?

First Sold. [If you could find out a country where but women were that had received so much shame, you might begin an impudent nation.] Fare ye well, sir; I am for France too: we shall speak of you there. [Exit with Soldiers.

Par. Yet am I thankful: if my heart were great,
'T would burst at this. Captain I'll be no more;
But I will eat and drink, and sleep as soft
As captain shall: simply the thing I am
Shall make me live. Who knows himself a braggart,
Let him fear this; for it will come to pass,
That every braggart shall be found an ass.
Rust, sword! cool, blushes! and, Parolles, live
Safest in shame! being fool'd, by foolery thrive!
There's place and means for every man alive.
I'll after them. [Exit. 48

[Scene IV. Florence. Room in the Widow's house.

Enter Helena, Widow, and Diana.

Hel. That you may well perceive I have not wrong'd you,
One of the greatest in the Christian world
Shall be my surety; 'fore whose throne 'tis needful,
Ere I can perfect mine intents, to kneel:
Time was, I did him a desired office,
Dear almost as his life; which gratitude
Through flinty Tartar's bosom would peep forth,
And answer, thanks: I duly am inform'd
His grace is at Marseilles; to which place
We have convenient convoy. You must know
I am supposed dead: the army breaking, 1
My husband hies him home; where, heaven aiding,
And by the leave of my good lord the king,
We'll be before our welcome.

Wid. Gentle madam,
You never had a servant to whose trust
Your business was more welcome.

Hel. Nor you, mistress.
Ever a friend whose thoughts more truly labour
To recompense your love: doubt not but heaven
Hath brought me up to be your daughter's dow'er,
As it hath fated her to be my motive 2 20
And helper to a husband. But, O strange men!
That can such sweet use make of what they hate.
When saucy trusting of the cozen'd thoughts
Defiles the pitchy night! so lust doth play
With what it loathes, for that which is away:
But more of this hereafter.—You, Diana,
Under my poor instructions yet must suffer
Something in my behalf.

Dia. Let death and honesty
Go with your impositions, 3 I am yours
Upon your will to suffer.

Hel. Yet, I pray you: 20
But, with the word, the time will bring on.

Wid. When briers shall have leaves as well as thorns,
And be as sweet as sharp. We must away;
Our wagon is prepar'd, and time revives us:

1 Breaking, disbanding.
2 Motice, instrument.
3 Impositions, injunctions.
ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL: still the fine's the crown; Whate'er the course, the end is the renown. [Exit.]

SCENE V. Roussillon. Hall of the Countess's house.

Enter Countess, LAFEU, and Clown.

Laf. No, no, no, your son was misled with a snipt-taffeta fellow there, [whose villainous saffron would have made all the unbaked and doughy youth of a nation in his colour;] your daughter-in-law had been alive at this hour, and your son here at home, more advanced by the king than by that red-tailed humble-bee I speak of.

Count. I would I had not known him! it was the death of the most virtuous gentlewoman that ever nature had praise for creat-

Clo. The black prince, sir; alias, the prince of darkness; alias, the devil.—(Act iv. 5, 64, 65.)

Laf. They are not herbs, you knave; they are nose-herbs.

Clo. I am no great Nebuchadnezzar, sir; I have not much skill in grass.

[LAFeU. Whether dost thou profess thyself,— a knave or a fool?

Clo. A fool, sir, at a woman's service, and a knave at a man's.

Laf. Your distinction?

Clo. I would cozen the man of his wife, and do his service.

Laf. So you were a knave at this service, indeed.

1 A snipt-taffeta fellow, a fellow who wore ribbons or snippings of taffeta.—Lafeu's contemptuous allusion to Parolles' fine clothes. Compare i. 5. 18-21.

2 Herb of grace, rue.
ALL’S WELL THAT ENDS WELL

ACT IV. Scene 5.

Clo. And I would give his wife my bauble, sir, to do her service.
Laf. I will subscribe for thee, thou art both knave and fool.
Clo. At your service.
Laf. No, no, no.
Clo. Why, sir, if I cannot serve you, I can serve as great a prince as you are.
Laf. Who’s that? a Frenchman?
Clo. Faith, sir, a’ has an English name; but his fœnomy is more hotter in France than there.
Laf. What prince is that?
Clo. The black prince, sir; alias, the prince of darkness; alias, the devil.
Laf. Hold thee, there’s my purse: I give thee not this to suggest thee from thy master thou talkst of; serve him still.
Clo. I am a woodland fellow, sir, that always loved a great fire; and the master I speak of ever keeps a good fire. But, sure, he is the prince of the world, let his nobility remain in’s court. I am for the house with the narrow gate, which I take to be too little for pomp to enter: some that humble themselves may; but the many will be too chill and tender, and they’ll be for the flowery way that leads to the broad gate and the great fire.
Laf. Go thy ways, I begin to be a-weary of thee; and I tell thee so before, because I would not fall out with thee.] Go thy ways: let my horses be well looked to, without any tricks.
Clo. If I put any tricks upon ’em, sir, they shall be jades’ tricks; which are their own right by the law of nature.
[Exit.
Laf. A shrewd knave and an unhappy. [Exit.
Count. So he is. My lord that’s gone made himself much sport out of him: by his authority he remains here, which he thinks is a patent for his sauciness; and, indeed, he has no pace, but runs where he will.
Laf. I like him well; ’tis not amiss. And I was about to tell you, since I heard of the good lady’s death, and that my lord your son was upon his return home, I moved the king my master to speak in the behalf of my daughter; which, in the minority of them both, his majesty, out of a self-gracious remembrance, did first propose: his highness hath promised me to do it: and, to stop up the displeasure he hath conceived against your son, there is no fitter matter. How does your ladyship like it?
Count. With very much content, my lord; and I wish it happily effected.
Laf. His highness comes post from Marseilles, of as able body as when he numbered thirty: he will be here to-morrow, or I am deceived by him that in such intelligence hath seldom failed.
Count. It rejoices me that I hope I shall see him ere I die. I have letters that my son will be here to-night: I shall beseech your lordship to remain with me till they meet together.
Laf. Madam, I was thinking with what manners I might safely be admitted.
Count. You need but plead your honourable privilege.
Laf. Lady, of that I have made a bold charter; but, I thank my God, it holds yet.

Re-enter Clown.

Clo. O madam, yonder’s my lord your son with a patch of velvet on ’s face: whether there be a scar under’r or no, the velvet knows; but ’t is a goodly patch of velvet: [his left cheek is a cheek of two pile and a half, but his right cheek is worn bare.
Laf. A scar nobly got, or a noble scar, is a good livery of honour; so belike is that.
Clo. But it is your carbonadoed face.
Laf. Let us go see your son, I pray you: I long to talk with the young noble soldier.

[Exeunt Countess and Lafan.

Clo. Faith, there’s a dozen of ’em, with delicate fine hats, and most courteous feathers, which bow the head and nod at every man.

[Exit.

1 Suggest, seduce.
2 Unhappy, rogulous.
3 No pace, no settled, orderly habits.
4 Carbonadoed, disfigured with cuts.
ACT V.

Scene I. The coast of France, near Marseilles.

Enter Helena, Widow, and Diana, with two Attendants.

Hel. But this exceeding posting day and night
Must wear your spirits low; we cannot help it:
But, since you’ve made the days and nights as one,
To wear your gentle limbs in my affairs,
Be bold you do so grow in my requital
As nothing can unroot you.—In happy time;—

Enter a Gentleman.

This man may help me to his majesty’s ear,
If he would spend his power.—God save you, sir.

Gent. And you.

Hel. Sir, I have seen you in the court of France.

Gent. I have been sometimes there.

Hel. I do presume, sir, that you are not fall’n
From the report that goes upon your goodness;
And therefore, goaded with most sharp occasions,
Which lay nice manners by, I put you to
The use of your own virtues; for which
I shall continue thankful.

Gent. What’s your will?

Hel. That it will please you
To give this poor petition to the king;
And aid me with that store of power you have
To come into his presence.

Gent. The king’s not here.

Hel. Not here, sir!

Gent. Not, indeed:

Hel. He hence remov’d last night, and with more haste
Than is his use.

Wid. Lord, how we lose our pains!

Hel. All’s well that ends well yet,
Though time seem so adverse and means unfit—
I do beseech you, whither is he gone?

Gent. Marry, as I take it, to Rousillon;
Whither I am going.

Hel. I do beseech you, sir,

Since you are like to see the king before me,
Commend the paper to his gracious hand;
Which, I presume, shall render you no blame,
But rather make you thank your pains for it.
I will come after you with what good speed
Our means will make us means.
been better known to you, when I have held familiarity with fresher clothes; but I am now, sir; muddied in Fortune's mood, and smell somewhat strong of her strong displeasure.

Clo. Truly, Fortune's displeasure is but sluttish, if it smell so strongly as thou speakest of: I will henceforth eat no fish of Fortune's buttering. Prithhee, allow the wind.

Par. Nay, you need not to stop your nose, sir; I spake but by a metaphor.

Clo. Indeed, sir, if your metaphor stink, I will stop my nose; or against any man's metaphor. Prithhee, get thee further.

Par. Pray you, sir, deliver me this paper.

Clo. Foh, prithhee, stand away: a paper from Fortune's close-stool to give to a nobleman! Look, here he comes himself.

---

Enter Lafue.

[Here is a pur of Fortune's, sir, or of Fortune's cat,—but not a musk-cat,—that has fallen into the unclean fishpond of her displeasure, and, as he says, is muddied withal: pray you, sir, use the carp as you may; for he looks like a poor, decayed, ingenious, foolish, rascally knave. I do pity his distress in my similes of comfort, and leave him to your lordship.]

Exit.

---

1 Allow the wind, don't stop it, stand to the leeward of me.

2 Ingenious, conscious how contemptible he is.
ACT V. Scene 2. ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL ACT V. Scene 2.

Par. My name, my good lord, is Parolles.
Laf. [You beg more than "word," then.—] Cox 1 my passion! give me your hand:—how does your drum?
Par. O my good lord, you were the first that found me!
Laf. Was I, in sooth? and I was the first that lost thee.
Par. It lies in you, my lord, to bring me in some grace, for you did bring me out.
Laf. Out upon thee, knave! dost thou put upon me at once both the office of God and the devil? one brings thee in grace, and the other brings thee out. [Trumpets sound.] The king's coming; I know by his trumpets.—Sirrah, inquire further after me; I had talk of you last night: though you are a fool and a knave, you shall eat; go to, follow.
Par. I praise God for you. [Exeunt.

SCENE III. Rousillon. A room in the Countess's house.

Flourish. Enter King, Countess, Lafaye, the two French Lords, with Attendants.

King. We lost a jewel of her; and our esteem Was made much poorer by it: but your son, As mad in folly, lack'd the sense to know Her estimation home.

Count. Tis past, my liege;
And I beseech your majesty to make it Natural rebellion, done i' the blaze of youth;
When oil and fire, too strong for reason's force, Overbear it, and burns on.

King. My honour'd lady,
I have forgiven and forgotten all;
Though my revenges were high 2 bent upon him,
And watch'd the time to shoot.
Laf. This I must say,—
But first I beg my pardon,—the young lord Did to his majesty, his mother, and his lady, Offence of mighty note; but to himself The greatest wrong of all: he lost a wife, Whose beauty did astonish the survey Of richest eyes; whose words all ears took captive;

Whose dear perfection hearts that scorn'd to serve
Humbly call'd mistress.

King. Praising what is lost

Makes the remembrance dear.—Well, call him hither;—

We're reconcil'd, and the first view shall kill All repetition:—let him not ask our pardon; The nature of his great offence is dead,
And deeper than oblivion we do bury Th' incensing relics of it: let him approach, A stranger, no offender; and inform him

So's our will he should.

First Gent. I shall, my liege. [Exit. King. What says he to your daughter? have you spoke?

Laf. All that he is hath reference to your highness.

King. Then shall we have a match. I've letters sent me

That set him high in fame.

Re-enter First Lord, ushering in Bertram.

Laf. He looks well on't.

King. I am not a day of season, 3 For thou mayst see a sunshine and a hail In me at once: but to the brightest beams Distracted clouds give way; sostand thou forth, The time is fair again.

Ber. [Kneeling] My high-repent'd blames, Dear sovereign, pardon to me.

King. All is whole;

[Bertram rises.

Not one word more of the consumed time. Let's take the instant by the forward top; For we are old, and on our quick'st decrees Th' inaudible and noiseless foot of Time 41 Steals ere we can effect them. You remember The daughter of this lord?

Ber. Admiringly, my liege: at first I stuck my choice upon her, ere my heart Durst make too bold a herald of my tongue: [Where the impression of mine eye infixing, Contempt hiss cornful perspective 4 did lend me, Which warp'd the line of every other favour; Scorn'd a fair colour, or express'd it stol'n; 50 Extended or contracted all proportions

1 Cox, God's (disguised form of the word).
2 High, violently.
3 A day of season, a seasonable day.
4 Perspective, an optical glass. 5 Favour, features.
ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

ACT V. Scene 3.

To a most hideous object: thence it came
That she whom all men praise'd, and whom myself,
Since I have lost, have lov'd, was in mine eye
The dust that did offend it.

King. Well excuse'd:
That thou didst love her, strikes some scores away
From the great compt: but love that comes,
'too late,
Like a remorseful pardon slowly carried,
To the great sender turns a sour offence,
Crying, "That's good that's gone." [Our rash faults

Make trivial price of serious things we have,
Not knowing them until we know their grave:
Oft our displeasures, to ourselves unjust,
Destroy our friends, and after weep their dust:
Our own love waking cries to see what's done,
While shameful hate sleeps out the afternoon.]
Be this sweet Helen's knell, and now forget her.

Send forth your amorous token for fair Maudlin:
The main consents are had; and here we'll stay
To see our widower's second marriage-day. 70

Count. Which better than the first, O dear heaven, bless!
Or, ere they meet, in me, O nature, cesse! 2

Laf. Come on, my son, in whom my house's name
Must be digested, give a favour from you,
To sparkle in the spirits of my daughter,
That she may quickly come.—

[Bertram gives Lafeu a ring.]

By my old beard,
And every hair that's on't, Helen, that's dead,
Was a sweet creature: such a ring as this,
The last that e'er I took her leave at court,
I saw upon her finger.

Ber. Hers it was not. 80

King. Now, pray you, let me see it; for mine eye,
While I was speaking, oft was fasten'd to't.—
This ring was mine; and, when I gave it Helen,
I bade her, if her fortunes ever stood
Necessitated to help, that by this token

† Displeasures, dislikes.
‡ Cesse, cease.
§ Digested, i.e. and so reduced to nothing, and lost.
And yet I know not:—thou didst hate her deadly,
And she is dead; which nothing, but to close
Her eyes myself, could win me to believe,
More than to see this ring. — Take him away.
   [Guards seize Bertram.]
[My fore-past proofs, how'er the matter fall,
Shall tax my fears of little vanity,
Having vainly fear'd too little.—Away with
   him!—]
We'll sift this matter further.

Ber.
This ring was ever hers, you shall as easily
Prove that I husbanded her bed in Florence,
Where yet she never was.  [Exit, guarded.
    King. I am wrapp'd in dismal thinking.

Enter a Gentleman.

Gent.
Gracious sovereign,
Whether I've been to blame or no, I know not:
   [Presenting a letter to the King.
Here's a petition from a Florentine,
Who hath for four or five removes¹ come short
To tender it herself. I undertook it,
Vanquish'd thereto by the fair grace and speech
Of the poor suppliants, who by this, I know,
Is here attending: her business looks in her
With an importing² visage; and she told me,
   In a sweet verbal brief, it did concern
'Your highness with herself.']
   King. [Reads] "Upon his many protestations to marry me when his wife was dead, I blush to say it, he won me. Now is the Count Rouillon a widower: his vows are forfeited to me, and my honour's paid to him. He stole from Florence, taking no leave, and I follow him to his country for justice:
grant it me, O king! in you it best lies; otherwise a seducer flourishes, and a poor maid is undone.

DIANA CAPELET."

Laf. I will buy me a son-in-law in a fair, and toll³ for this:
I'll none of him.
    King. The heavens have thought well on thee, Lafeu,
To bring forth this discovery.—Seek these suitors:—
Go speedily and bring again the count.
   [Exeunt Gentleman and some Attendants.

¹ Removes, stages of her journey; for she failed to overtake the king.
² Importing, significant.
³ Toll, pay toll.

I am afraid the life of Helen, lady,
Was foully snatch'd.
Count. Now, justice on the doers!

Re-enter Bertram, guarded.

King. I wonder, sir, sith wives are monsters to you,
And that you fly them as you swear them lordship,
Yet you desire to marry.

Re-enter Gentleman, with Widow and Diana.

What woman's that?

Dia. I am, my lord, a wretched Florentine,
Derived from the ancient Capulet:

My suit, as I do understand, you know,
And therefore know how far I may be pitied.
Wid. I am her mother, sir, whose age and honour
Both suffer under this complaint we bring;
And both shall cease,⁴ without your remedy.
    King. Come hither, count: do you know these women?
Ber. My lord, I neither can nor will deny
But that I know them: do they charge me further?

Dia. Why do you look so strange upon your wife?
Ber. She's none of mine, my lord.
Dia.
If you shall marry,
You give away this hand, and that is mine;
You give away heaven's vows, and those are mine;
You give away myself, which is known mine;
For I by vow am so embodied yours,
That she which marries you must marry me,—
Either both or none.
Laf. [To Bertram] Your reputation comes too short for my daughter; you are no husband for her.
    Ber. My lord, this is a fond and desperate creature,
Whom sometime I have laugh'd with: let your highness
Lay a more noble thought upon mine honour
Than for to think that I would sink it here.

⁴ Cease, come to an end, perish.
"King. Sir, for my thoughts, you have them ill to friend 182
Till your deeds gain them: fairer prove your honour
Than in my thought it lies!
Dia. [Good my lord, Ask him upon his oath, if he does think
He had not my virginity.]
King. What say'st thou to her?
Ber. She's impudent, my lord, And was a common gamester to the camp.
Dia. He does me wrong, my lord; if I were so, He might have bought me at a common price: Do not believe him: O, behold this ring, 191 [Showing it to the King and Countess. Whose high respect and rich validity Did lack a parallel; yet, for all that, He gave it to a commoner o' the camp, If I be one.
Count. He blushes, and 'tis is it:
Of six preceding ancestors, that gem, Conferr'd by testament to the sequent issue, Hath it been ow'd and worn. This is his wife; That ring's a thousand proofs.
King. Methought you said You saw one here in court could witness it. 200 Dia. I did, my lord, but loth am to produce So bad an instrument: his name's Parolles.
Laf. I saw the man to-day, if man he be.
King. Find him, and bring him hither. [Exit Laf.]
Ber. What of him? He's quoted for a most perfidious slave, With all the spots o' the world tax'd and debosh'd, 2 Whose nature sickens but to speak a truth. Am I or that or this for what he'll utter, That will speak any thing?
King. She hath that ring of yours.
Ber. I think she has: certain it is I lik'd her, And boarded her i' the wanton way of youth: She knew her distance, and did angle for me, Madding my eagerness with her restraint, As all impediments in fancy's course Are motives of more fancy; and, in fine, Her own suit, coming with her modern grace, Subdu'd me to her rate: she got the ring;"

And I had that which any inferior might At market-price have bought."
Dia. I must be patient:
You, that have turn'd off a first so noble wife, May justly diet me. I pray you yet,— 221 Since you lack virtue, I will lose a husband,— Send for your ring, I will return it home, And give me mine again.
Ber. I have it not.
King. What ring was yours, I pray you?
Dia. Sir, much like
The same upon your finger.
King. Know you this ring? this ring was his of late.
Dia. And this was it I gave him, being a-bed.
King. The story, then, goes false, you threw it him 229 Out of a casement.
Dia. I have spoke the truth.
Ber. My lord, I do confess the ring was hers.
King. You boggle shrewdly, every feather starts you.—

Re-enter LAFEU with PAROLLES.

Is this the man you speak of?
Dia. Ay, my lord.
King. Tell me, sirrah,—but tell me true, I charge you, Not fearing the displeasure of your master, Which, on your just proceeding, I'll keep off,— By him and by this woman here what know you?
Par. So please your majesty, my master hath been an honourable gentleman: tricks he hath had in him, which gentlemen have.
King. Come, come, to the purpose: did he love this woman? Par. Faith, sir, he did love her; but how?
King. How, I pray you?
Par. He did love her, sir, as a gentleman loves a woman.
King. How is that?
Par. He loved her, sir, and loved her not.
King. As thou art a knave, and no knave.— What an equivocal companion is this! 250 Par. I am a poor man, and at your majesty's command.

1 Validity, value. 2 Debosh'd, debased.
3 Modern, modish.
Laf. He's a good drum, my lord, but a naughty\(^1\) orator.

Dia. Do you know he promised me marriage?

Par. Faith, I know more than I'll speak.

King. But wilt thou not speak all thou knowest? 227

Par. Yes, so please your majesty. I did go between them, as I said; but more than that, he loved her, — for, indeed, he was mad for her, and talked of Satan, and of Limbo, and of Furies, and I know not what: yet I was in that credit with them at that time, that I knew [of their going to bed; and of other motions, as promising her marriage, and] things which would derive me ill will to speak of; therefore I will not speak what I know.

King. Thou hast spoken all already, unless thou canst say they are married: but thou art too fine\(^2\) in thy evidence; therefore stand aside.— 270

This ring, you say, was yours?

Dia. Ay, my good lord.

King. Where did you buy it? or who gave it you?

Dia. It was not given me, nor I did not buy it.

King. Who lent it you?

Dia. It was not lent me neither.

King. Where did you find it, then?

Dia. I found it not.

King. If it were yours by none of all these ways,

How could you give it him?

Dia. I never gave 't him.

Laf. This woman's an easy glove, my lord; she goes off and on at pleasure.

King. This ring was mine; I gave it his first wife.

Dia. It might be yours or hers, for aught I know.

King. Take her away; I do not like her now; To prison with her: and away with him.— Unless thou tell'st me where thou hast this ring,

Thou diest within this hour.

Dia. I'll never tell you.

King. Take her away.

Dia. I'll put in bail, my liege.

King. I think thee now some common customer.

Dia. By Jove, if ever I knew man, 't was you.

King. Wherefore hast thou accus'd him all this while?

Dia. Because he's guilty, and he is not guilty:

He knows I am no maid, and he'll swear to 't;
I'll swear I am a maid, and he knows not.

Great king, I am no strumpet, by my life;
I'm either maid, or else this old man's wife.]

King. She does abuse our ears: to prison with her.

Dia. Good mother, fetch my bail. [She gives Widow the ring.]—Stay, royal sir:

[Exit Widow.

The jeweller that owes the ring is sent for,
And he shall surety me. But for this lord,
Who hath abus'd me, as he knows himself,
Though yet he never harm'd me, here I quit him:

He knows himself my bed he hath defil'd;
And at that time he got his wife with child:
Dead though she be, she feels her young one kick:]

So there's my riddle,—One that's dead is quick:
And now behold the meaning.

Re-enter Widow, with HELENA.

King. Is there no exorcist

Beguiles the truer office of mine eyes?

Is't real that I see?

Hel. No, my good lord;
'T is but the shadow of a wife you see,
The name, and not the thing.

Ber. Both, both.—O, pardon!

Hel. [O my good lord, when I was like this maid,

I found you wondrous kind.] There is your ring;
And, look you, here's your letter; this it says:
"When from my finger you can get this ring,
And are by me with child, &c." This is done:
Will you be mine, now you are doubly won?

Ber. If she, my liege, can make me know this clearly,

I'll love her dearly, ever, ever dearly.

57

\(^1\) Naughty, good-for-nothing. \(^2\) Fine, subtle.
ACT V. Scene 3.

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

Thou keepest a wife herself, thyself a maid.—
Of that, and all the progress, more and less,
Resolvedly¹ more leisure shall express: 332
All yet seems well; and if it end so meet,
The bitter past, more welcome is the sweet.

[FLOURISH.

EPILOGUE.

[The king's a beggar, now the play is done:]
All is well ended, if this suit be won,
That you express content; which we will pay,
With strife to please you, day exceeding day;
Ours be your patience then, and yours our parts;
Your gentle hands lend us, and take our hearts.

[Exit.

¹ Resolvedly, clearly.
NOTES TO ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

1. DRAMATIS PERSONAE. The Dramatis Personae of this play have been left, either through oversight or through the haste with which the play was written, in a very confused and unsatisfactory condition as far as the naming of them goes. We have at least four important speaking characters who have no names at all, viz. the First and Second Lord, the First Soldier, and the Gentleman attached to the French court who aids Helena in her suit to the king (v. 1): besides these we have Two Gentlemen belonging to the French army (ili. 2.), and the usual quantity of nameless lords and gentlemen. In the case of the French lords who accompany Bertram to the war, the omission seems the more singular, because from iv. 3.

199–324 we learn that they were two brothers, and that their names were Dumain. In the edition which Kemble prepared for the stage we find no less than five additional Dramatis Personae named: Dumain, Lewis – First and Second Lords, who take an important part in act iv. scene 3; Jacques and Biron, belonging to the French army, and friends, apparently, of Bertram; and Tousville, a gentleman belonging to the French court, who appears in act v. It would certainly be far more convenient to adopt some names for the First and Second Lord, if not for all these characters; but there is no internal evidence in the play on which we can assign to any of these nameless characters any name except Dumain to the First Lord, and Dumas, jun., to his brother; the latter's Christian name not being mentioned. The First Soldier, who plays the part of the Interpreter, is generally known by that title, as appears from the notices of the performance of this play. We have therefore given a somewhat fuller description of the Dramatis Personae than that usually given; and though we have not ventured to go so far as to adapt into the list of Dramatis Personae the names to be found in Kemble's acting edition, yet it would be a very great convenience if, as far as concerns the First and Second Lord, editors were to agree to adopt the names of Dumas and Lewis, for the first of which, as we have already said, there is a justification in the text.—F. A. M.

ACT I. SCENE 1.

2. Line 5: to whom I am now in ward.—Wardship was one of the feudal incidents. In virtue of it the lord had the care of his tenant's person during his minority, and enjoyed the profits of his estate. By another "incident," that of marriage, the lord had the right of tendering a husband to his female wards, or a wife to his male wards: a refusal involving the forfeit of the value of the marriage, that is, the sum that any one would give the lord for such an alliance. These customs prevailed in England and in some parts of Germany, but in no province of France with the exception of Normandy. Shakespeare, however, is not responsible for whatever error there may be in making the French king impose a wife upon Bertram, as he only followed the original story. See Hallam, Middle Ages, vol. 1, p. 177, ed. 1853.

3. Lines 10-12: whose worthiness would stir it up where it wanted, rather than lack it where there is such abundance.—So worthy a gentleman as Bertram would be more likely to arouse kindly feelings in a man of defective sympathies, than fail to win them from so generous a heart as that of the King of France. Warburton altered lack to slack, which, says Capell, "is the very term the place calls for; and so natural a correction, that he who does not embrace it, must be under the influence of some great possession."

4. Lines 47-48: where an unclean mind carries virtuous qualities, there commendations go with pity.—They are virtues and traitors too.—While we commend his virtues we naturally feel pity for the man in whom they are but bright spots in a nature otherwise vicious; but why are these virtues called traitors? Surely not, as Johnson thought, because they betray his too confiding friends into evil courses, but because they are false to, inconsistent with, the rest of his character.

5. Line 59: liveliness.—Liveliness; not used by Shakespeare in its modern sense. Compare:

With this she seizeth on his sweating palm,
The precedent of pith and liveliness.

—Venus and Ad. 25, 36.

6. Line 61: than to have it.—F. 1 reads "then to have."—The reading in the text is due to Dyce. For the insertion of to in the second member of the comparison Abbot (Shakespearean Grammar, 410) quotes Bacon (Essays, 108): "In a word, a man were better relate himself to a Statue or Picture, than to suffer his thoughts to pass in smother." Capell printed: "than have it."

7. Lines 65, 66: If the living be enemy to the grief, the excess makes it soon mortal.—If grief in any shape is the enemy of the living, excessive indulgence in it must soon make of it a fatal or deadly enemy. It is to this sentiment that Lafoue refers (l. 65): "How understand we that?"

8. Line 68: The best wishes, &c.—Since Rowe the whole of this speech has been given as spoken to Helena. On the suggestion of Dr. Brinley Nicholson (Shakespeareana, vol. 1, p. 64) I have assumed the first part of it: "The best wishes that can be forged in your thoughts be servants to you"—to be addressed to the countess.

9. Lines 91, 92:

These great tears grace his remembrance more
Than those I shed for him.

Not, as Johnson supposed, the tears shed by great people, the King and Countess, but, as Monck Mason says, "the big and copious tears she then shed herself, which were caused in reality by Bertram's departure, though attributed by Lafoue and the Countess to the loss of her father; and from this misapprehension of theirs graced his remembrance more than those she actually shed for him."

10. Line 100: sphere.—The sphere of a star is the orbit in which it moves; and this is generally the sense in which Shakespeare uses the word; he rarely applies it to the star itself, as in the following:—

all kind of natures

That labour on the bosom of this sphere.—Timon, i. 2. 65, 66.

11. Line 106: In our heart's table.—The table is the material on which the picture is drawn; compare:

Mine eye hath play'd the painter and hath stel'd
Thy beauty's form in table of my heart.—Sonn. xxiv.

12. Lines 114-116:

That they take place, when virtue's steelly bones
Look bleak & the cold wind: withal, full oft we see Cold wisdom waiting on superfluous folly.

The vices of Parolles suit him so well that they enable him to take precedence over men of unattractive, unyielding virtue; he is received into good society when they are left out in the cold, and wisdom starves while folly has more than enough.

For this use of "superfluous" compare:

Let the superfluous and last-dieted man,
That slave your ordinance, that will not see
Because he doth not feel, feel your power quickly.

—Lear, ii. 1. 70-72.

13. Line 150: He that hangs himself, &c.—He that hangs himself and a virgin are, in this circumstance, alike; they are both self-destroyers.—Malone.

14. Line 160: within ten years it will make itself ten.—F. 1 reads "within ten yeare it will make it selfe two;" which is clearly wrong. The correction is due to Sir Thomas Hanmer.

15. Line 171: which wear not now.—F. 1 reads "which were not now." The correction is Rowe's.

16. Line 179: Not my virginitie yet.—This speech has caused much perplexity to the commentator. Johnson says: "The whole speech is abrupt, unconnected and obscure;" and Warburton is persuaded that "the eight lines following friend (L. 181) is the nonsense of some foolish conceited player," who, finding a thousand loves mentioned and only three enumerated, added a few more of his own. The obscurity, however, is not so great as appears at first sight. The chief difficulty is the occurrence of the word there, without anything being mentioned to which it could refer: "There shall your master have a thousand loves" (L. 180). From l. 181: 'The court’s a learning-place;' it is clear that, with possibly a secret undercurrent of reference to herself (Boile), the place in Helena’s mind is the court, where Bertram would be entangled in all those thousand love affairs. Nevertheless the transition from the short line ‘not my virginity yet’ is abrupt, and perhaps intentionally so. Sir Philip Perring (Hard Knots in Shakespeare, 1886, p. 151) says: "A short line here is surely not out of place, where the subject is cut short — where there is a break, a pause—perhaps a silent wish, a secret sigh; where at any rate there is a marked crisis in the conversation, and Helena has to extemporize another more appropriate but not less engaging topic." If this explanation does not satisfy us, we must take refuge in the supposition that some words have been lost, the recovery of which will complete the sense; and accordingly Hamner reads:
NOTES TO ALL’S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

Not my virginity yet. — You’re for the court.
There shall your master, &c.

This reading was adopted by Capell, while Malone suggested that the omission is in Parolles’s speech, and that after the words "it is a withered pear" we should read, "I am now bound for the court; will you anything with it? (i.e. the court)." It may be noticed that the Folio has only a colon at yet, a fact which, so far as it is of any value at all, tends to show that the line is incomplete. As they stand the words "Not my virginity yet" are a reply to Parolles’s question, "Will you anything with it?" and mean "I will nothing with my virginity yet."

17. Line 181: A mother, and a mistress, &c.—These are the names Helena applies to the various mistresses who will captivate Bertram at court; for instance, a rare and matchless dame would be a phænic, and one who commands him and his affections, a captain.

18. Line 188: christendoms.—Christian names—the only time Shakespeare uses the word in this sense. Malone quotes Nash, Four Letters Confuted (1608): "But for an author to renounce his christendoms to write in his owne commendation, to refuse the name which his Godfathers and Godmothers gave him in his baptism." &c.

19. Line 218: a virtue of a good wing.—The meaning of this passage appears to be this: "If your valour will suffer you to go backward for advantage, and your fear for the same reason will make you run away, the composition that your valour and fear make in you, must be a virtue that will fly far and swiftly." A bird of a good wing is a bird of swift and strong flight.—Monck Mason.

20. Line 227: when thou hast done, remember thy friends.— Dyce quotes W. W. Williams (The Parthenon, Nov. 1, 1882, p. 448), who proposed to read: "when thou hast money, remember thy friends."

21. Lines 237, 238:

The mightiest space in fortune nature brings
To join like likes, and kis like native things.

Malone correctly gives the meaning: "The affections given us by nature often unite persons between whom fortune or accident has placed the greatest distance or disparity; and cause them to join like likes (instar parium), like persons in the same situation or rank of life." Space will then be put for spaces, according to the metrical usage, by which "the plural and possessive cases of nouns in which the singular ends in s, as, ce, and ge are frequently written . . . without the additional syllable" (Abbott, Sh. Gram. § 471). See also W. S. Walker, Shakespeare’s Verstication, art. l. p. 245, where a large number of examples are quoted. For "native" in the sense of congenial, kindred compare:

'tis often seen
Adoption strives with nature; and choice breeds
A native slip to us from foreign seeds.—Act i. 3. 150-152.

and

The head is not more native to the heart.—Hamlet, i. 2. 47.

22. Line 241: What hath beene cannot be.—Hammer suggested: "What hath not been can’t be;" and so Dyce; but I agree with Sir Philip Perring (Hard Knots, p. 153) in thinking the change unnecessary. These timid ventured as impossible what, in spite of their obstinate refusal to believe it, has actually taken place.

ACT I. SCENE 2.

23. Line 1: Senora.—The Senores, as they are termed by Boccace. Painter, who translates him, calls them Senois. They were the people of a small republic, of which the capital was Sienna. The Florentines were at perpetual variance with them.—Steevens.

24. Line 11: He hath arm’d our answer.—He hath furnish’d us with a ready and fit answer.

25. Line 18: Count Rousillon.—The Folio, which here has Count Rosignoll, usually spells the word Rousillon. Painter has Rossiglione.

26. Lines 33-36:

but they may jest,
Till their own scorn return to them unnoted
Ere they can hide their levity in honour:
So like a courtier, &c.

The punctuation is that of the Folio. Sir William Blackstone (approved by Capell, Steevens, and Dyce) proposed to punctuate:

Ere they can hide their levity in honour,
So like a courtier.

But the original punctuation gives the better sense: "The young lords of the present day," says the king, "may go on with their mockeries till no one pays any attention to them, and without that power of keeping their folly within the bounds required by self-respect which Bertram’s father had. He was so much all that a courteous gentleman ought to be that his pride was without contempt, and his sharpness without bitterness, unless in deed it was his equal who had roused him; his sense of honour was a perfectly regulated clock, of which his tongue was the hammer, and ever struck the note of disapproval when the hand pointed to the right moment, and then only." The Globe editors mark line 36 as corrupt.

27. Line 46: In their poor praise he humbled. — Sir Phillip Perring seems to me very happy in his interpretation of these words: "In the sentence 'he humbled' I catch the ipseitasima serba of the humble poor—their own poor way of expressing their appreciation of the great man's condescension" (Hard Knots, p. 156). He humbled, then, is in the phrase of "creatures of another place," "he made himself humble." Malone explains it, "he being humbled in their poor praise," i.e. humbling himself by accepting their praises. The Globe editors mark the line as corrupt.

28. Lines 50, 51:

So in APPROOF lives not his epitaph

As in your royal speech.

Approof, as in III. 5. 8: "of very valiant approof," is the state of being approved; and the lines mean, as Dr. Schmidt explains, after Heath and Malone, "His epitaph receives by nothing such confirmation and living truth as by your speech."

29. Lines 59, 60:

After my flame lacks oil, to be the SNUFF

Of younger spirits.

Snuff is the burnt wick, and used metaphorically for a feeble and expiring old age, and the words mean "to be called a snuff by younger spirits." Compare:

My snuff and loathed part of nature should Burn itself out.

—Lear, iv. 6. 39. 40.

30. Lines 61, 62:

whose judgments are

Mere fathers of their garments.

Johnson explains this: "Who have no other use of their faculties than to invent new modes of dress."

ACT I. SCENE 3.

31. —Steevens calls attention to some verses by William Cartwright prefixed to the folio Beaumont & Fletcher, 1647, which may have reference to this dialogue between the Countess and the Clown, or to that between Olivia and the Clown in Twelfth Night, act i. sc. 5.:

Shakespeare to thee was dull, whose best jest was I"th Ladies questions, and the Fool's replies;
Old fashion'd wit, which walk'd from town to townIn turn'd Hose, which our fathers call'd the Crown;Whose wit our nice times would obscuremease call,And which made Bawdry passe for Comical.

—Ed. 1647, sig. d 2 b.

32. Line 5: Madam, the care I have had to EVEN your content, &c.—"It ill becomes me to publish my deserts myself; I would have you look in the record of my deeds, to discover the trouble I have taken to act up to your satisfaction." For the verb even in this sense compare:

There's more to be considered; but we'll even
All that good time will give us (and so make the most of it).

—Cymbeline, ill. 4. 184, 185.
honesty like mine, though not very precise or puritanical, will do no mischief; it will bear itself humbly, and do my lady's bidding, though all the while secretly priding itself on its own excellence." The Puritans, as everybody knows, took violent offence at the surplus, and their "big hearts" would brook nothing more ornamental than the black gown. The surplus might be styled a surplus of humility when worn in humble submission to the orders of the church. Steevens quotes A Match at Midnight, 1683 (Dodgley, ed. Hazlitt, vol. xii. p. 14): "H' has turned his stomach for all the world like a Puritan's at the sight of a surplus;" and The Hollander, 1640: "A puritan who, because he saw a surplus in the church would needs hang himself in the bell-ropes."

For "no puritan" Tyrwhitt proposed a puritan; "though honesty be a puritan, i.e. strictly moral, it will not stand out obstinately against the injunctions of the church, but will humbly submit itself to them." This conjecture had the approval of Malone, but the original reading gives sufficiently good sense.

43. Line 118: Love no god that would not extend his might, only where qualities were level.—Only, as Schmidt points out, is used as if the sentence were not negative, but affirmative—"that would extend it only where, etc."

44. Line 119: Dian no queen of virginas.—The words Dian no were inserted by Theobald. The Folio has "lesell, Queen of Virginas, that," etc. For the word knight, applied to a female, compare: Pardon, goddess of the night, Those that slew thy virgin knight.

45. Line 120: that would suffer her poor knight surprised.—Rowe unnecessarily inserted "to be" before "surprised."—Dyce quotes:

And suffer not their mouths shut up, oh Lord, Which still thy name with praises do record.

—Drayton's Harmonie of the Church, 1591, sig. F 2.

46. Lines 157, 158:

That this dissembler's messenger of love,
The many-colour'd Iris, rounds thine eye!

Referring, says Henley, to "that suffusion of colours which glimmers around the sight when the eye-lashes are wet with tears," he compares:

And round about her tear-distained eye
Blue circles stream'd like rainbows in the sky.

—Rape of Lucrece, 1594, 1597.

47. Line 177: The mystery of your LONELINESS.—Theobald's correction for the loneliness of the Folio.

48. Line 183: 'tis one to th' other. F. 1 has "'torn tooth to th' other," a manifest printer's error.

49. Line 184: The plural behavouris is here, as often elsewhere, used in the sense of "gestures," "manners," e.g. "one man, seeing how much another man is a fool when he dedicates his behavouris to love" (Much Ado, ii. 3. 7).

50. Line 194: bond.—For this word in the sense of obligation, compare "you make my bonds still greater," i.e. my obligations to you (Measure for Measure, v. 1. 8); and:

To build his fortune I will strain a little
For 'tis a bond in men.

—Timon of Athens, i. 2. 143-144.

51. Line 197: approach'd.—For this sense of approach'd = informed against, compare:

were he twenty times my son.
I would approach him.

—Rich. II. v. 2. 101, 102.

52. Line 206: this CAPTIOUS and INTEMBLE sivus.—Farmer supposed captious to be a contraction of capacious; Malone thought it only signified "capable of receiving what was put into it." No other instance of the word is known. Intemible is the reading of F. 2; F. 1 has intemible.

53. Line 210: And lack not to love still.—If, like the daughters of Danans, she still kept on pouring water into a sive, though the supply never failed, she lost it all. Her love failed not, but since it never was rewarded it was thrown away.

54. Lines 218, 219:

Wish chastely, and love dearly, that your Dian
Was both herself and love.

Malone proposed to read:

Love dearly, and wish chastely, that, &c., but the separation of the dependent clause from "wish" by another verb is but the result of rapid composition. The words of course mean: "If you ever entertained an honest passion which implies the union of chastity and desire, of Diana and Venus, then pity me."

55. Line 226: I will tell truth.—So F. 1; F. 2 has "I will tell true."

57. Lines 232, 233:

As notes, whose faculties inclusive were
More than they were in note.

"As prescriptions which were really more powerful than they were reputed to be." They were in note = so far as note has been taken of them. [Schmidt explains inclusive: "full of force and import;" but does not more inclusive mean "including more qualities," i.e. "more comprehensive"] F. A. X.

58. Lines 248-251:

There's something IN T

That his good receipt
Shall for my legacy, be sanctified.

For isn't Hamner unnecessarily substituted hims, which, besides, is not used elsewhere by Shakespeare as a verb. That is, as very often, used to introduce a fact supposed to be in connection with what precedes — "it being the case that." The following passages will illustrate this use:

What foul play had we, that we came from thence?

—Tempest, i. 2. 60.
I doubt he be not well, that he comes not home.

—Merry Wives, i. 4. 43.
ACT II. SCENE 1.

60. Line 1: 30. INTO thy attempt.—Into is frequently equivalent to unto; compare:—

for his sake
Did I expose myself, pure for his love,
Into the danger of this adverse town.

—Twelfth Night, v. 2. 85.

ACT II. SCENE 1.

60. Lines 1, 2:

Farewell, young lords; these warlike principles
Do not throw from you:—and you, my lords, farewell.

It appears from act 1. 2. 13-15—

Yet, for our gentlemen that mean to see
The Tuscan service, freely have they leave
To stand on either part;

that the young lords had leave from the king to espouse either side in the Tuscan quarrel. Hence we may conclude, with the Cambridge editors, that there are two parties of lords taking leave of the king here,—the party who were going to join the Florentines, and the party who were going to join the Senoys, and the king turns first to the one and then to the other.

61. Lines 3-5:

Share the advice betwixt you; if both gain, all
The gift doth stretch itself as 't is received,
And is enough for both.

If both parties of young lords endeavour to profit by it, and make it their own, the good advice the king has given them will be a gift ample enough for both.

62. Line 6: After well enter'd soldiers.—The meaning of this passage is: "After our being well entered, initiated, as soldiers"—a Latinism; compare such a phrase as post urbem conditam. Latinisms in construction, though common in learned writers such as Bacon and Ben Jonson, are very rare in Shakespeare. Milton uses the one in question:—

Nor delay'd
The winged saint after his charge received.

—P. L. v. 248.

and

He, after five sedent unmindful sunk
Into the wood fast by.

—1b. 33a.

—Quoted by Abbott, Sh. Gr. § 416.

63. Lines 12-14:

let HIGH Italy—

Those rated that inherit but the fall
Of the last monarchy—see that you come, &c.

The Folio read higher Italy. I have ventured to print Schmidt's conjecture High (i.e. "great," "exalted") Italy;
the passage then becomes fairly intelligible.

If we take rated to mean "beaten down," "subdued," as in—

These griefs and losses have so rated me,
That I shall hardly spare a pound of flesh
To-morrow to my bloody creditor.

—Merch. of Ven. Ill. 3. 39-34.

The sense will be, "Let great Italy witness your valour, exhibited, as it will be, in subduing those upstart states which have been formed out of the ruins of the Roman empire, the last of the four great monarchies of the world." One of these states would be Sienna, with whom the Florentines were now "by the ears." It is very improbable that Shakespeare was thinking of any particular quarrel between these two states—such as that of 1495
mentioned by Staunton. For the framework of the play he was simply following Painter's story, without any historical specifications whatever. Thus the King of France is simply King of France, and not Charles VIII., who invaded Italy in 1494 and made an alliance with the Florentine, or any other individual king. Of those who retain the original reading, "Higher Italy," some give it a geographical signification: "the side next to the Adriatic," says Hamner, "was denominated the higher Italy, and the other side the lower;" but both Florence and Sienna are on the lower side, and Capell accordingly says that
"the poet has made a little mistake, using 'higher' where he should have said 'lower;' but this is of no moment:"— while Johnson explains it to mean merely upper Italy.
Warburton, on the other hand, thought it had a moral sense and meant higher in rank and dignity than France—a most forced interpretation. For bated Hamner printed bantards, the bastards of Italy being opposed to the sons of France. The Globe marks the line as corrupt.

64. Line 30: I shall stay here the FURTHER Horse to a smock.

—The forehorse of a team was gaily ornamented with tufs, and ribbons, and bells. Bertram complains that, beldized like one of these animals, he will have to square ladies at the court instead of achieving honour in the war.—Staunton.

65. Lines 32, 33:

But one to dance with.

and no sword worn

Light swords were worn for dancing. Douce (Illustrations, ed. 1839, p. 194) quotes: "I think wee were as much dread or more of our enemies, when our Gentlemens went simply, and our Servaunngs plainly, without Cuts or gards, bearing their heavy Swordes and Buckelers on their thighs, in stede of cuts and Gards and light dam-ing Swordes; and when they rode carrying good Spears in their hands, in stede of white rods, which they now, more like ladies or gentlewomen then men; all which delicatees maketh our men cleane effeminate and without strength" (W. Stafford. A Compendium or briefe exanimation of certayne ordinary complaints. 1651, p. 65, of the New Shakspere Society's reprint). Compare also be [Octavius] at Philipol kept
His sword e'en like a dancer; while I struck
The lean and wrinkled Cassius.

—Ant. and Cleop. III. 11. 35.

i.e. Octavius did not draw his sword.

65. Line 37: I grow to you, and our parting is a tortured body.—As they grow together, the tearing them asunder was torturing a body.—Menn Mason.

67. Line 42: one Captain Spurio, with his siccatrice.

Theobald's correction for "one Captains Spurio his sica-trice, with" of the Folio.

68. Line 54: they wear themselves in the cap of the time,
&c.—The language of Parolles is affected and sententious throughout, like that of Don Armado in Love's Labour's Lost. Hence its occasional obscurity. "These young men," he says, "are the ornaments in the cap of fashion, and there they muster, or arrange, the correct modes of
NOTES TO ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

WALKING, EATING, AND SPEAKING, ALL UNDER THE INFLUENCE OF THE MOST POPULAR LEADER OF FASHION.

69. Line 64: I'LL FEE thee to stand up.—Fee is Theobald's correction for see of the Folio. Staunton (comparing Richard II. v. 3. 120, 130):

Being. Good aunt, stand up.

Duch. I do not see to stand;

Pardon is all the suit I have in hand.)

reads sue. "The afflicted king mindful of his own debility remarks, 'Instead of your begging permission of me to rise I'll sue thee for the same grace.'"

70. Line 70: Good faith, across; i.e. "I would you had broken it across;" for in tilting it was thought awkward and disgraceful to break the spear across the body of the adversary, instead of by a direct thrust. Staunton thinks the allusion is "to some game where certain successes entitle the achiever to mark a cross."

71. Line 75: I've seen a MEDECINE.—For medicine in this sense (French, médecin), compare:

Camillo,

Preserver of my father, now of me,

The medicine of our house, how shall we do?

—Wint. Tale, lv. 596-598.

and

Meet we the medicine of the sickly vein,

And with him pour we in our country's purge

Each drop of us.

—Macbeth, v. 2. 97-99.

73. Line 80: To give great Charlemain a pen in his hand.—Charlemain late in life vainly attempted to learn to write.—Dyce.

74. Lines 87, 88:

hath amazed me more

Than I dare blame my weakness.

i.e. more than I like to confess, the confession involving a confession of weakness.

75. Line 138: Since you set up your rest 'gainst remedy.

—In the game of primero "to set up one's rest" was to stand upon the cards you have in your hand in the hope that they may prove better than those of your adversary; hence its very common figurative use, "to take a resolution." Compare Romeo and Juliet, note 18.

76. Line 147: despair most PITS.—Fits, according to Dyce, who quotes Nicholas's Illustrations, &c., vol. ii. p. 348, is Theobald's correction for shifts of the Folio. Theobald, however, printed sits, which is Pope's emendation.

77. Lines 158, 159:

I am not an impostor, that proclaim

Myself against the level of mine aim.

I am not an impostor, pretending to have another object in view from that which I am really aiming at.

78. Lines 164, 165:

Ere twice the horses of the sun shall bring

Their fiery torches his diurnal ring.

"Ere they shall conduct him round his daily orbit." The pilot's glass in line 168 must be a two-hour glass.

VOL. V.

79. Line 167: his sleepy lamp.—The Folio have "her sleepy lamp;" corrected by Rowe.

80. Lines 175-177:

my maiden's name

Seard otherwise; nay, worse—if worse—extended

With vilest torture let my life be ended.

"May my name be otherwise branded, stigmatized as belonging to anything rather than a maiden." What follows is the reading of the Globe Shakespeare, and explains itself. The passage as it stands in the Folio is very difficult. F. I has

my maiden's name

Seard otherwise, no worse of worst extended

With vilest torture, let my life be ended.

Schmidt (Sh. Lex. s. v. extend) attempts to explain this as follows: "nor would that be an increase of ill; it would not be the worst mended by what is still worse." But ne = nor occurs nowhere else in any work attributed to Shakespeare except in the doubtful Prologue to Pericles (II. 30), and none but the most servile worshipper of the Folio will be content with this explanation. The other three Folio alter ne to no ("no worse of worst extended"), which Steevens interprets, "provided nothing worse is offered to me (meaning violation), let my life be ended with the worst of tortures." Of the various emendations suggested, the reading given in the text seems decidedly the best. Malone first suggested nay for ne.

81. Line 184: Youth, beauty, wisdom, courage, all.—To mend the metre Theobald printed: "Youth, beauty, wisdom, courage, virtue, all." But see Abbott, Sh. Gr. § 509: "Lines with four accents are found when a number of short clauses or epithets are connected together in one line, and must be pronounced slowly."

82. Line 195: Ay, by my scapito and my hopes of heaven.—The Folio have "hopes of health"—perhaps from the verb occurring twice two lines above. The correction is Thiriby's, and is one required by the rhyme.

83. Line 213: my deed shall match thy deed.—So the Folio. The Globe reads "my deed shall match thy mood."

ACT II. SCENE 2.

84. Line 24: as Tlb's rush for Tom's forefinger.—"Tib and Tom," says Douce (Illustrations, p. 196), "were names for any low and vulgar persons, and they are usually mentioned together in the same manner as Jack and Jill." Rush rings were sometimes used in the marriage ceremony, especially where the parties had cohabited previously. They were also employed as rustic gifts emblematic of marriage. Boswell quotes:

O thou great shepherd, Lobbin, how great is thy griefi

Where bense the nosesag Ne she dight for thee?

The coloured chapters wrought with a chief.

The knotted rush rings, and gilt Rocinante?

—Spenser, Shepherds Calendar, November.

ACT II. SCENE 3.

85. Lines 1-46: They say . . . Here comes the king.—I have printed this passage as it stands in the Globe ed. Johnson, who saw that "the whole merriment of the ACT II. Scene 3. NOTES TO ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

Scene consists in the pretensions of Parolles to knowledge and sentiments which he has not;" was the first to make any change in the distribution of the dialogue. The Folio distributes it as follows:

Line 11: Par. So I say both of Galen and Paracelsus.
Ol. Laf. Of all the learned and authenticks follows.
Par. Right so I say.
Line 40: Ol. Laf. In a most weak—
Par. And deede minister great power, great transcendent, which should indeed give us a further vse to be made, then alone the recovery of the king, as to bee
Old Laf. Generally thankfull.
Enter King, Helen, and attendants.
Par. I would have said it, &c.

The rest is as it appears in the text.

86. Line 29: A showing of a heavenly effect in an earthly actor.—The title of some pamphlet is here ridiculed.—Warburton.

87. Line 31: Why, your DOLPHIN is not lustier.—Steevens thought the Dauphin was intended; but Malone, followed by Dyce, rightly interpreted it of the dolphins, which is "a sportive lively fish." Compare:

his delights
Were dolphin-like; they show'd his back above
The element they liv'd in. —Ant. & Cleop. v. 2. 86-90.

88. Line 64: marry, to each, but one!—Monck Mason says: "To each, except Bertram, whose mistress she hoped to be herself." But it is much more natural to understand it, as Rolfe does, to mean "but one mistress."—

89. Line 65: My mouth no more were broken.—A broken mouth is a mouth which has lost part of its teeth.—Johnson.

90. Line 67: And writ as little beard.—From meaning "to subscribe" ("a gentleman born . . . who writes himself Armiger"), Merry Wives, i. 1. 9), to write came to mean "to claim a title," "lay claim to." Compare, "I must tell thee, sirrah, I write man" (line 208 of this scene): "and yet he'll be crowing as if he had wrt man ever since his father was a bachelor" (II. Hen. IV. i. 2. 80).

91. Line 68: a noble father.—The Folio here has the stage-direction: She addresses her to a Lord.

92. Lines 84, 85: I had rather be in this choice than throw ames-ace for my life.—It is very difficult to see what Lafeu means here. Ames-ace, formed from the old French ames as, and now called ambe-ace, is the two aces at dice. Now if this were the highest throw, the ace counting highest as in whist, the meaning would be clear; Lafeu would say that he would rather have a good chance of winning such a prize as Helena, than have the best possible luck at gaming. But unfortunately there is no proof forthcoming that ames-ace was ever counted as the highest throw; on the contrary, except in games in which all doublets counted double, and in which ames-ace was still the lowest doublet, as seis six was the highest,—it was always the lowest throw. Even in the expression of Thomas Nashe, "as you love good fellowship and amesace" ("The Induction to the Dapper Mounter Pages of the Court," prefixed to the Unfortunate Traveller, 1694; Works, ed. Grosart, v. 9), the reference is probably to the custom of throwing for wine, the lowest thrower having to pay for it; and the meaning will be, "as you love good fellowship and would rather throw for wine even if you were the loser, than spoil the sport of the company." The next point to be settled is the meaning of "for my life:" does it mean "in exchange for, as the price of, my life," or "during my whole life?" If the former, we must suppose the preservation of Lafeu's life to depend upon the remote chance of his throwing ames-ace, and the expression will not amount to more than, "I had rather be in this choice than just escape with my life." But if this is so, why should he have mentioned ames-ace rather than any other throw? The latter alternative is the more probable, that is, that the case suggested by Lafeu is his throwing ames-ace, or having bad luck during the remainder of his life. But how is this to the point, and what is the drift of the speech? Dr. Brinley Nicholson, who was kind enough to send me a very full discussion of ames-ace, answers the question as follows: —"The humorous old man [Lafeu] uses a humorous comparison, one not unknown then or now. We may call it, for want of a better term, a comparison by contraries, or if you will, an ironical comparison; but another example will best explain it. One lauding a sweet-sanged prima donna says, 'I'd rather hear her than walk an hundred miles with peas in my boots.' Literally taken this is nonsense, but taken in the spirit in which such a saying is uttered, it is seen that the greatness of his desire is to be measured by the difficulty, toll, pain, and resolution required to complete the task with which he associates that desire." And Mr. P. A. Daniel, who accepts Dr. Nicholson's interpretation, gives another known example of this mode of expression; to the effect, "I would rather have it, than a poke in the eye with a birch rod." Rolfe takes the same view: as he concisely puts it, "He ironically contrasts this ill luck [ames-ace for life] with the good luck of having a chance in the present choice."

93. Line 90: No better, if you please; i.e. I wish no better wife than you.

94. Line 106: There's one grape yet, &c.—Old Lafeu, having, upon the supposition that the lady was refused, reproached the young lords as boys of ice, throwing his eyes on Bertram, who remained, cries out, "There is one yet into whom his father put good blood—but I have known thee long enough to know thee for an ass."

95. Line 128: From lowest place when virtuous things proceed.—When is Thirlby's correction for whence of the Folio.

96. Lines 156, 157:

My honour's at the stake; which to defeat
I must produce my power.

Which often stands for which thing (Abbott, Sh. Gr. § 271). So here it is "which danger to defeat." Theobald changed defeat to defend, and so Dyce reads.

97. Line 170: Into the staggerers.—Some species of the staggerers, or the horse's apoplexy, is a raging impatience, which makes the animal dash himself with a destructive violence against posts or walls. To this the allusion, I suppose, is made.—Johnson.
ACT II. Scene 3.

NOTES TO ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

ACT III. Scene 1.

99. Lines 185, 190:

Shall seem expedient on the now-born Brief.
The brief may be, as Johnson suggests, the marriage contract; but Malone compares:

she told me,
In a sweet verbal brief, if did concern
Your highness with herself.

—Act v. 3. 136-138.

And—

To stop which scruple, let this brief suffice,
It is no jammer'd glutton we present,
Nor aged counsellor to youthful sin.

—The History of Sir John Oldcastle, Prologue 5-7.

which passages prove that brief need not always imply a written document; it may therefore mean the brief troth plight which has just taken place, and upon which the king says, it is convenient that the marriage ceremony shall forthwith follow with.

100. Line 210: I dare too well do, I dare not do.—

"I am only too ready to chastise you, but I must not. I am quite man enough to do so, but it is not expedient. You are a lord, and there is no lettering of authority" (see below, line 362).

101. Line 253: Methinks t.—The Folio have methinks t.

102. Lines 275-279: you are more savoury with lords and honourable personages than the commission of your birth and virtue gives you heraldry; i.e. more than the warrant of your birth and virtue gives you your commission to be. Hamner, with some plausibility, altered to "more than the heraldry of your birth and virtue gives you commission."

103. Line 387: That hugs his kitty-wicky here at home.

—So F. 1. The later Folios have kitty-wicky; probably a colloquial term formed from kic, and implying restiveness; here applied in an intelligible, though not very complimentary sense to a wife. Nares quotes:

Perhaps an ignis fatuus now and then
Starts up in holes, stinks, and goes out again;
Such kitty-wicky flames shew but how dear
Thy great light's resurrection would be here.

Poems subj. to R. Fletcher's Epig. [1657], p. 162.

and one of Taylor the water-poet's books is entitled, A Kickeyn-Wincey, or a lerry-come-twang: wherein John Taylor hath satirically suited 750 bad Debtors, that will not pay him for his Return of his Journey from Scotland.

104. Lines 308, 309:

There is no strife
To the dark house and the destitute wife.

The "dark house," says Johnson, "is a house made gloomy by discontent." "Destitute" is Rowe's correction for "detected" of the Folio.

105. Line 310: capriccio.—F. 1 has caprichio. This Italian word was adopted as an English one. Cotgrave gives under Caprice, "a humour, caprichio, &c."

ACT II. Scene 4.

106. Line 16: FORTUNES.—Capell's correction for fortunes of the Folio.

107. Line 35: The search, sir, was profitable.—Before these words, as at the commencement of the speech, "Did you find me," the Folio have the prefix Clo. Perhaps a short speech of Parolles—for instance, "In myself," as Dr. Brinley Nicholson suggests (Shakespeareana, vol. i. p. 55)—has fallen out here.

108. Line 44: puts it off to a compell'd restraint.—Detains it by referring to a compulsory abstinence. So:

Please it your lordship, he hath put me off (for payment)
To the succession of new days this month.

—Tim. of Ath. ii. 2. 19. 20.

109. Lines 45, 46:

Whose want, and whose delay, is strew'd with sweets,
Which they distil now in the cursed time.

The want and delay of the "the great prerogative and rite of love" is strewed with the sweets of expectation, which they (the want and delay) distil now in the time of restraint and abstinence.

ACT II. Scene 5.

110. Line 29: End ere I do begin.—The Folio have:

"And ere I doe begin." The emendation, to whomsoever it may be due, was found in the margin of Lord Ellesmere's copy of the First Folio, and is supported by a passage in The Two Gentlemen of Verona, act ii. sc. 4. 51:

I know it well, sir; you always end ere you begin.

—Staunton.

111. Line 40: like him that leaped into the custard.—

It was customary at City banquets for the City fool to leap into a large bowl of custard set for the purpose. Theobald quotes:

He may perchance, in tall of a sheriff's dinner,
Skip with a rhyme on, the table, from New-nothing,
And take his Almain leap into a custard,
Shall make my lady mayors and her sisters
Laugh all their hoods over their shoulders.

—Ben Jonson, The Devil is an Ass, l. 1. (p. 97, ed. 1631).

112. Lines 51-53: I have spoken better of you than you have or will deserve at my hand.—So F. 1. Probably some word has fallen out after here; Malone suggested qualities. F. 2 reads: "than you have or will deserve."

113. Lines 94, 95:

Ber. Where are my other men, monsieur?—

Farewell.

The Folio assign these words to Helena:—

Hel. I shall not break your bidding, good my Lord;
Where are my other men? Monsieur, farewell.

The change in distribution and punctuation is due to Theobald, who observes that "neither the Clown, nor any of her retinue are now upon the stage: Bertram observing Helen to linger fondly, and wanting to shift her off, puts on a show of haste, asks Parolles for his servants, and then gives his wife an abrupt dismissal."

ACT III. Scene 1.

114. (Stage-direction) The two Frenchmen.—These are distinguished in the Folio as "French E" and "French G," and in 1. 2 as "1 Lo. G." and "2 Lo. E." I have followed the Globe editors in styling uniformly G First.
Lord, E Second Lord, except in the last nine lines of iii. 6, where G once evidently (and so the Globe) Second Lord, and E twice First Lord. The Folio sometimes calls them “Cap. G” and “Cap. E,” and in iv. 1 E is “1 Lord E.” Capell and Malone suggested that the initials E and G stand for the names of the actors who played the parts, and in the list of actors prefixed to F. 1 we find the names William Ecclestone, Samuel Gilburne, and Robert Gough. The same actors, as Capell points out, also took the parts of the two Gentlemen in act iii. 2, who are styled in the Folio “French E” and “French G.”

115. Lines 11-12:
But like a common and an outward man,
That great figure of a council frames
By self unaided motion.

“I cannot explain state secrets, except as an ordinary outsider who frames for himself a tolerable idea of the nature of a great council, though unable to form any judgment on the weighty points there discussed.” This seems to be the general sense of this somewhat obscure passage. A “self unaided motion” is a “motion” which is itself unable to do something or other; and here apparently to discharge the functions of a counsellor. For motion in the sense of “mental sight,” “intuition,” compare this sensible warm motion to become
A kneaded clod. —Mess. for Mess. iii. 1. 130, 131.

116. Line 22: When better fall, for your avoids they fall.-The past tense is required by the rhyme; otherwise one would be tempted to read “they fail;” “when better men (i.e. men in higher posts) are slain, you will step into the places they have left vacant.”

ACT III. SCENE 2.

117. Lines 7, 8: he will look upon his boot, and sing; mend the ruff, and sing.—The ruff is probably, as most of the commentators take it to be, the top of the boot which turned over with a fringed and scalloped edge and hung loosely over the leg: this was usually called a ruff: “not having leisure to put off my silver spurs, one of the rowsel catch’d hold of the ruff of my boot, and being Spanish leather, and subject to tear, overthrows me” (Ben Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour, iv. 4, p. 149, ed. 1616).

118. Line 9: sold a goodly manor for a song.—So F. 3; F. 1 and 2 have “sold a goodly,” &c.

119. Line 14: our old Lingo and our Isles o’ the country. —So F. 2; F. 1 has “our old Lingo.”

120. Line 20: E’en that.—Theobald’s correction for “In that” of the Folio.

121. Line 21.—F. 1 inserts the heading A Letter, and omits Count [reads].

122. Line 55: Can woman me undo’t.—“Can make me weak enough to give way to it as a woman usually does.”

123. Line 68: If thou engrossest all the griefs are thine; i.e. all the griefs which are thine, the relative, as often in Shakespeare, being omitted. Rowe altered it to “all the griefs as thine,” unnecesarily weakening the passage.

124. Line 71: And thou art all my child; i.e. my only child. For all in this sense of alone, only; compare:
To this well-painted piece is Lucrce come, To find a face where all distress is staid.
Many she sees where cares have carved some, But none where all distress and solace dwell’d. —Rape of Lucrece, 1449-56.
Why have my sisters husbands, if they say They love you all (i.e. only you). —Lear, i. 1. 101, 102.
The word all of course agrees with thou, not with child.

125. Lines 92, 93:
The fellow has a deal of that too much, Which holds him much to have.
“He has a deal of that too-much (excess), which considers him to have much,” i.e. excess of vanity, which makes him fancy he has many good qualities. Rolfe, whose view of the passage this is, compares:
For goodness, growing to a plurality, Dies in his own too much. —Hamlet, iv. 7. 118, 119.

126. Lines 118, 114: move the still-pleasing air
That sings with piercing.
F. 1 has “the still-piercing air;” F. 2 the “still piercing.” “Still-pleasing air,” i.e. the air which closes again immediately, is due to Malone. “Piercing” is an Elizabethan spelling of piece (“Now good Cosario, but that piece of song,” Tw. Night, ii. 4. 2, F. 1); so that if we accept this reading we have only to alter one letter.

127. Lines 123-125:
No, come thou home, Rousillon,
Whereas honour but of danger wins a scar,
As oft it loses all.
“Come home from that place, where all that honour gets from the danger it encounters, if it gets anything, is a scar, while it often loses everything.”

ACT III. SCENE 4.

128. Lines 24, 25: and yet she writes, Pursuit would be but vain.
This must be supposed to be in a part of the letter not read aloud by the steward.

ACT III. SCENE 5.

129. Line 21: are not the things they go under.—Are not the things for which their names would make them pass. —Johnson.

130. Line 23: example . . . cannot for all that dissuade succession, but that they are limed, &c.—All these terrible examples of ruin before their eyes cannot preventmaids from doing as others have done before them. “But that they are limed” = “to prevent their being limed.” For this use of “but,” signifying “prevention,” compare: Have you no counterpart for Claudio yet, But he must die to-morrow? —Mess. for Mess. iv. 2. 95, 96.
And see Abbott, Sh. Gr. § 122.
131. Line 38: To Saint Jacques le Grand.—By St. James the Great, Shakespeare no doubt signified the apostle so called, whose celebrated shrine was at Compostella, in Spain; and Dr. Johnson rightly observes that Florence was somewhat out of the road in going thither from Romillon. There was, however, subsequently, another James, of La Marca of Ancona, a Franciscan confessor of the highest eminence for sanctity, who died at the convent of the Holy Trinity near Naples, in A.D. 1476. He was not beatified until the seventeenth century, nor canonized until 1726; but it is quite possible that his reputation was very great in connection with Italy, even at the period of this play; and that Shakespeare adopted the name without considering any other distinction.—Staunton.

132. Line 55: He's bravely taken here.—According to Schmidt, the verb "to take" is here intransitive = "to have the intended effect" (German, sich machen). Compare: yet I know A way, if it take right, in spite of fortune Will bring me off again.—Hen. VIII. iii. a. 218-220.

i.e. If it have the right effect. So here the meaning is "he has done well here," "he has behaved bravely." Compare also:
[pages and shows] Never greater Nor, I'll assure you, better taken, sir.
Hen. VIII. iv. 2. 11, 12.

i.e. better executed. If this is not the meaning we must interpret, "he is bravely taken here," i.e. "he is received as a brave fellow here."

133. Lines 69, 70:
I warnt, good creature, wherefore she is, Her heart weighs sadly.
For warnt I am indebted to Mr. B. G. Kinneir (who writes it warnt), Cruces Shakspereanae, 1883, p. 146. In Hamlet, i. 2. 248:
Ham. Perchance 't will walk again.
Her. I warrant it will.
Q. 2 has "I warnt it will. F. 1 has "I write good creature, wherefore she is," &c., which Malone and Schmidt defend. F. 2 has "I right good creature;" Rowe, "Ah! right good creature;" Capell, "Ay, right;—Good creature!" The Globe, "I warrant, good creature;" Dyce, after Williams, "I warnt, good creature."

134. Line 80: That leads him to these places.—The Folio has places. Theobald conjectured possible; passes, which Dyce prints, was suggested by Mr. W. N. Lettsom (Walker's Crit. Exam. vol. ii. p. 240), who compares: your grace, like power divine, Hath looked upon my passes.
_i.e. courses, proceedings._

135. Line 97: Where you shall host.—For host in this sense compare:
Go bear it to the Cenatour, where we host.
_Com. of Err. l. a. 9.

ACT III. SCENE 6.

136. Lines 37-41: let him fetch his drum; . . . when your lordship sees the bottom of his success in 't, and to what metal this counterfeited lump of ore will be melted.

—The Follies have "this success," corrected by Rowe. Lump of ore is Theobald's correction for lump of ours of the Folio. But why was so much importance attached to a drum? Fairholt, quoted by Rolfe, informs us that the drums of the regiments in those days were decorated with the colours of the battalion; to lose a drum was therefore to lose the colours of the regiment.

137. Lines 41-43: if you give him not John Drum's entertainment, your inclining cannot be removed.—To give a person John or Tom Drum's entertainment is to turn him forcibly out of your company. The origin of the expression is doubtful. Douce suggested that it was a metaphor borrowed from the beating of a drum, or else alluded to the drumming a man out of a regiment; while Rolfe has "no doubt that originally John Drum was merely a sportive personification of the drum, and that the entertainment was a beating, such as the drum gets; afterwards the expression came to mean other kinds abusively treated than beating." Theobald quotes Holinshed's Description of Ireland:—"no guest had ever a cold or forbidding look from any part of his [the mayor of Dublin 1561] family: so that his porter, or any other officer, durst not, for both his eares, give the simplest man that resorted to his house, Tom Drum his entertainment, which is, to hale a man in by the head, and thrust him out by both the shoulders."

138. Line 107: we have almost embossed him.—Embose was a hunting term, old French emboser, and meant to inclose (game) in a wood. So here the Second Lord means that they have almost got Paroles in their toils. There is another hunting term embossed, meaning "foaming at the mouth from fatigue," with which the above must not be confounded. "When he (the hart) is foaming at the mouth, we say that he is "embot"" (Gascoigne, Book of Hunting, 1575, p. 242, quoted in Hazlitt's Dodsley, vol. xi. p. 406). In this sense the word does not come from emboser, but is merely a technical application of the ordinary verb emboss, "to cover with bosses." Shakespeare twice uses it in this sense:

the poor cur is embossed.

—and

Taming of the Shrew, Ind. 17.

and

Than Telamon for his shield; the boar of Thessaly
Was never so embossed.

 была and Cleop. iv. 13. 3-13.

139. Line 110: We'll make you some sport with the fox. are we case Him.—Another hunting term signifying to skin the animal. Compare:

Some of 'em knew me,
Eh they had case'd me like a cog by too,
As they have done the rest, and I think rosted me,
For they began to taste me soundly.

—Beaumont and Fletcher, Love's Pilgrimage, ii. 6 (ed. 1547, p. 9).

ACT III. SCENE 7.

140. Line 19: RESOLV'D to carry her.—So Dyce and Globe. F. 1 has Resolve. F. 2 and most editors Resolves.

141. Line 21: his IMPORTANT blood.—Compare:

Therefore great France
My mourning and important tears hath pitted.

—Lear, iv. 4. 52, 53.
ACT III. Scene 7.

NOTES TO ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

ACT IV. Scene 2.

142. Line 34: after this.—This is omitted in F. 1, added in F. 2.

143. Lines 44-47:

which, if it speed,
Is wicked meaning in a lawful deed;
And lawful meaning in a lawful act;
Where both sin not, and yet sin a sinful fact.

For lawful act in line 46 Warburton substituted “wicked act,” and so Dyce; but Malone satisfactorily explains the original reading: “The first line relates to Bertram. The deed was lawful, as being the duty of marriage . . . but his meaning was wicked, because he intended to commit adultery.” The second line relates to Helena, whose meaning was lawful, in as much as she intended to reclaim her husband . . . The act or deed was lawful, for the reason already given. The subsequent line relates to them both. The fact was sinful, as far as Bertram was concerned, because he intended to commit adultery; yet neither he nor Helena actually sinned; not the wife, because both her intention and action were innocent; not the husband, because he did not accomplish his intention; he did not commit adultery."

ACT IV. Scene 1.

144. Lines 19-22: therefore we must every one be a man of his own fancy, not to know what we speak one to another; so we seem to know, is to know straight our purpose.—“We must each fancy a jargon for himself, without aiming to be understood by one another, for provided we appear to understand, that will be sufficient for the success of our project.”—Henley. Sir Philip Perring, with great pleasantness, proposes to shift the sémicolone from another to fancy.

145. Line 22: Choughs’ language.—Compare:

lords that can prate
As simply and unnecessarily
As this Gonzalo: I myself could make A chough of as deep char.
—Tennyson, ii. i. 959-966.

146. Line 43: Wherefore, what’s the instance?—According to Schmidt, instance is “motive,” “that which set him on.” So:

The instances that second marriage move
Are base respects of thrift, but none of love.

—Hamlet, iii. ii. 192, 193.

But Johnson, followed by Rolfe, with greater probability explains it as proof: Parolles is seeking for some proof of his exploit. So: “They will scarcely believe this without trial: offer them instances” (Much Ado, ii. 2. 43).

147. Line 45: and buy myself another of Bajazet’s mule.—Warburton conjectured mule, and so Dyce. A mule is doubtless used as typical of a dumb creature. Reed quotes a story of a “Philosopher” who “for thy emperor’s pleasure took upon him to make a Mule [mule] speak;” but what the allusion is in Bajazet’s mule has not yet been explained.

ACT IV. Scene 2.

148. Lines 21-31: ’T is not the many oaths that make the truth, &c.—This speech is at a first reading very perplexing, but its meaning becomes clearer on repetition. Diana’s meaning is, I think, as follows: “A mere multitude of oaths is no evidence of integrity of purpose; a single vow made conscientiously is enough, and such a vow a man takes by what he venerates most, namely, by God’s great attributes; but even were I to swear by such an awful oath as this that I loved you well, when I loved you so ill that I was trying to induce you to commit a sin, you would not believe me: in fact, an oath taken in the name of a pure and holy Being to commit an impure and unholy sin against him has no validity at all: therefore—your oaths, sworn as they are in God’s name to do him a wrong, are so many empty words and worthless stipulations, but in my opinion are unsealed, that is, are unratified, and have no binding force whatsoever.”

149. Line 25: If I should swear by God’s great attributes.
So the Globe editors; the Folio has Jones, probably in accordance with the statute to restrain the abuse of the divine name (3 James I. chap. 21).

150. Lines 38, 39:

I see that men make ropes in such a scarre,
That we’ll forsake ourselves.

This is the great crux of the play. None of the many emendations which have been proposed being really satisfactory, I have printed the words just as they stand in the Folio, except that the latter prints rope’s instead of ropes. That there is an error somewhere few will doubt, although there have been several ingenious but far-fetched attempts at explanation. All that can be affirmed with any confidence is that the words, “That we’ll forsake ourselves,” are intended to convey Diana’s pretended surrender to the proposals of Bertram, “we will prove unfaithful to our principles, we will give in;” and that the previous line must have given some sort of reason or excuse for such apparent weakness. “Diana ought, in all propriety,” says Mr. Halliwell (Phillipps) in his folio Shakespeare, “to make some excuse to Bertram (and to the audience) for the abrupt change in her feelings and conduct,—some acknowledgment of his power of persuasion, or some confession of her own improvident. Diana then abruptly demands the ring, and Bertram fancies his triumph is complete. A FARREN is a broken precipice, or, according to others, a ravine, or merely a scar (bright).

I subjoin some of the principal emendations which have been suggested:

Rowe: “make hopes in such affairs.”

Malone: “make hopes, in such a scene.”

Mitford, printed by Dyce: “make hopes, in such a case.”

Halliwell (Phillipps): “may cope’s in such a sorte.”

Stanton: “make hopes, in such a snare.”

Kinnear: “have hopes, in such a cause.”

151. Line 73: Since Frenchmen are so braid.—Steevens quotes Greene’s Never too Late, 1616 (ed. Dyce, p. 302):

Dian rose with all her mads
Bussing thus at love’s braid.

i.e. crafts, decals. The word, which is, however, here an adjective, comes from braid, to twist; what is deceitful being, metaphorically speaking, twisted and tortuous.
ACT IV. Scene 3.

152. Line 25: Now, God delay our rebellion! — "May God put off the day when our flesh shall rebel;" so where the Countess begs the King to forgive her son, in act v. 3. 4-8:

"'Tis past, my siege;
And I beseech your majesty to make it
Natural rebellion, done 'tis the blaze of youth;
When oil and fire, too strong for reason's force,
Oversees it, and burns on.

Hammer conjectured allay.

153. Lines 26-28: we still see them reveal themselves, till they attain to their abhorred ends.—They betray themselves before they attain to their abhorred ends, i.e. detestable purposes.

154. Line 39: in his proper stream o'erflows himself.—That is, "betray his own secrets in his own talk."—Johnson. He no longer confines his unlawful intents within the bounds of secrecy.

155. Line 54: for he is DIETED to his hour.—See above:

Diui. When midnight comes, knock at my chamber-window:

When you have conquer'd my yet-maiden bed,
Remain there but an hour. —Iv. 2. 54-58.

The meaning then is, "the hour of his appointment is fixed, as well as the duration of his stay." Such is the regimen to which he has to submit. This will help to explain v. 3. 219-221:

Diui. I must be patient: You, that have turn'd off a first so noble wife,
May justly diet me.

i.e. "you may prescribe rules for me, and give me just as much or as little as you please."

156. Line 55: I would gladly have him see his company anatomized.—For company in the sense of companion compare:

To seek new friends and stranger companions. —Mid. Night's Dream, l. 1. 229.

157. Line 105: ENTERTAINED my convey.—Taken into service guards, &c. For entertain compare:

Being entertained for a performer, as I was smoking a musty room. —Much Ado, l. 3. 60.

158. Line 113: this counterfeit MODULE.—Module is a variant of model. Model comes through the Italian and French from the Latin modulus, a measure; module apparently comes direct from the Latin. Parolles is a counterfeit module, because he pretended to be a soldier and was really a fool.

159. Line 135: Stage-direction: the Folio has, Enter Parolles with his Interpreter, and Inter. Int. or Interp. is prefixed to the speeches of the First Soldier.

160. Line 158: All's one to HIM.—In the Folio this concludes the preceding speech. Capell made the change. Rowe printed "All's one to me."

161. Line 191: if I were to dye this present hour; i.e. and die at the end of it. Hammer printed "live but this present hour." Dyce, following W. S. Walker, boldly prints "If I were to die." Tolet suggests that Parolles meant to say die, but fear occasioned the mistake.

ACT IV. Scene 4.

162. Line 218: getting the shrieve's fool with child.—"Female idiots were retained in families for diversion as well as male, though not so commonly" (Douce, Illustrations, p. 106).

163. Line 222: your LORDSHIP.—The Folio has Lord, without the period, but the abbreviation was no doubt intended: corrected by Pope.

164. Line 286: by the general's looks.—So F. 3; F. 1 and F. 2 have your, a mistake arising from the abbreviation y in the MS.

165. Line 290: He will steal, sir, an egg out of a cloister. —He will steal anything, however trifling, from any place, however holy. —Johnson.

166. Line 303: a place there called Mile-end.—Mile-end Green was the usual drilling ground for the London trainbands. See II. Henry IV. III. 2. 298.

167. Lines 313, 314: and cut the entail from all remainders, and a perpetual succession for it perpetually; i.e. and set free the estate from payment of all remainders, and (grant or sell) a perpetual succession for it. Dyce suspects some error. Hammer altered for it to "in it."

ACT IV. Scene 4.

168. Line 9: Marseilles. —F. 1 spells the name of this town here Marcellus, and in *Iv. 5. 85, Marcellus."

169. Line 15: Nor YOU, mistress. —So F. 4. F. 1, F. 2, and F. 3 have: "Nor your Mistress."

170. Lines 20, 21:

As it hath fated her to be my motive
And helper to a husband.

A motive is that which moves anything, so, means, instrument. Compare:

my teeth shall tear

The slavish motive of recanting fear (i.e. the tongue). —Rich. II. l. 1. 194, 195.

171. Lines 30-33:

Yet, I pray you:
But, with the word, the time will bring on summer,
When briers shall have leaves as well as thorns,
And be as sweet as sharp.

Perhaps the passage admits of this explanation. Helena has just before said:

You, Diana,
Under my poor instructions yet must suffer
Something in my behalf:

To which Diana has replied:

Let death and honesty
Go with your impositions, I am yours
Upon your will to suffer:

And Helena now continues: "Yet, I pray you," i.e. for a while I pray you BE mine to suffer: "but, with the word, the time will bring on summer," &c.; i.e. but so quickly that it may even be considered as here while we speak, the time will, &c. —Dyce. Rolfe, with greater probability, thinks that the words Yet, I pray you, merely serve to resume the thread of Helena's discourse, after Diana's impulsive interruption.
ACT IV. SCENE 5.

172. Lines 2-4: whose villainous saffron would have made all the unbaked and doughy youth of a nation in his colour.—An allusion to the fashion of wearing yellow. Warburton points out that the mention of saffron suggested the epithets unbaked and doughy, saffron being commonly used to colour pastry. So in the Winter’s Tale the shepherd’s son says: “I must have saffron to colour the warden pie” (Winter’s Tale, iv. 3. 48). Yellow starch was much used for bands and ruffs, and is said to have been invented by Mrs. Turner, an infamous woman, who was concerned in the murder of Sir Thomas Overbury, and was executed at Tyburn (1615) in a lawn ruff of her favourite colour (see Hazlitt’s Dodsley, vol. xi. p. 328). Reed quotes Heywood, If you Know not me, you Know Nobody: “many of our young married men have taken an order to wear yellow garters, points, and shootings; and tis thought yellow will grow a custom” (Heywood, Dramatic Works, vol. 1. p. 259, ed. 1874).

173. Line 19: They are not HERES.—So the Folio. Rowe printed Hath-herbs.

174. Line 22: GRASS.—So Rowe: the Folio have grace.

175. Line 32: my bauble.—The fool’s bauble was a kind of baton; figures of its various shapes will be found in Douce (Illustrations, Plates II. and III.).

176. Line 41: an English name.—So Rowe; F. 1 has maine.

177. Line 67: A shred knave and an unhappy.—Compare: Ay, and a shred unhappy gallows too (speaking of Cupid).—Love’s Labour’s Lost, v. 2. 12.

Here the meaning is simply “roguish” or “mischievous;” but it often has a stronger sense, as: “O most unhappy strumpet!” (pernicious) (Com. of Err. iv. 4. 127). And: unhappy was the clock

That struck the hour!
—Cymb. v. 5. 153, 154.

178. Line 70: he has no PAGE, but runs where he will.—He observes no rule, has no settled habits, is not broken in. Hamner unnecessarily altered pace to place; and so even Dyce.

ACT V. SCENE 1.

179. Line 6: (Stage-direction) Enter a GENTLEMAN.—So Rowe, followed by most editors. F. 1 has: Enter a gentle Astrinnger; F. 2: Enter a gentle Astrarnger; F. 3: Enter a Gentleman a stranger. An astrinnger or astrarnger is, as Steevens discovered before the appearance of his second edition, a keeper of goshawks. There is, however, no apparent reason why the personage accosted by Helena should be a keeper of goshawks or of anything else, and throughout this scene the Folio prefixs “Gent” to his speeches, while in scene 3 it introduces him simply as “a Gentleman.”

ACT V. SCENE 2.

180. Line 1: Good Monsieur Lavalache.—So Dyce. F. 1 has “Good M. Luvach.”

181. Line 28: I do pity his distress in my SIMILES of comfort.—Warburton’s certain emendation for “smiles of comfort” of the Folio.

182. Line 35: under HER.—Her was added in F. 2.

183. Lines 41, 42:
Par. My name, my good lord, is Parolles.
Lat. You beg more than “word,” then.
A quibble: Parolles (paroles) in French is not “word” but “words.” F. 3 has “more than one word.”

184. Line 43: OX my passion!—Cox or cook, as in the oath “by cock and pie,” was a disguise or corruption of God.

ACT V. SCENE 3.

185. Lines 1, 2:
We lost a jewel of her; and our esteem Was made much poorer by it.

Does our esteem mean “the esteem in which we are held by others,” or “the esteem in which we hold others?” Schmidt, who explains the phrase by “we are less worth by her loss,” seems to take the former view; but surely the King is contrasting his own power of estimating and appreciating true worth with that of Bertram, for he goes on to say that Bertram “lack’d the sense to know her estimation home.” Now the King’s esteem in which he held others was all the poorer, insomuch as one estimable person so esteemed was lost; and this is much what Staunton means when he interprets our esteem by “the sum of all we hold estimable.”

186. Line 6: Natural rebellion, done is the blaze of youth.—The Folios have blade; blaze was proposed by Theobald, who, however, did not venture to admit it into his text. It was adopted by Warburton and Capell, and is rendered extremely probable by what follows:

When oil and fire, too strong for reason’s force, O’erbears it, and burns on.

Theobald quotes, in support of his conjecture:

I do know,
When the blood burns, how prodigal the soul
Lends the tongue vows; these blasèr, daughter, &c.
—Hamlet, i. 3. 115-117.

and

For Hector in his blaze of wrath subscribes
To tender objects.
—Troylus and Cr. iv. 5. 105, 106.

Sir Philip Perring (Hard Knots, p. 183) with great probability suggests blood, comparing:

the strongest oaths are straw
To the fire I’ the blood.
—Tempest, iv. 1. 59, 53.
The blood of youth burns not with such excess.
—Love’s Labour’s Lost, v. 2. 73.

and

It hath the excuse of youth and heat of blood.
—I. Henry IV. v. 2. 27.

187. Lines 16, 17:
Whose beauty did astonish the survey
Of RICHEST EYES.

Richest eyes are eyes that have seen most beauty. Compare: “to have seen much and to have nothing, is to have rich eyes and poor hands” (As You Like It, iv. 1. 23).

188. Line 48: Contempt his scornful PERSPECTIVE did lend me.—For perspective compare:
For sorrow's eye, glaze with blinding tears,
Divides one thing entire to many objects;
Like perspective, which rightly gaz'd upon
Show nothing but confusion,—ey'd away
Distinguish form.—Rich. II. ii. 16-20.
See note 150 of that play.

189. Lines 65, 66:
Our own love wak'ning cries to see what's done,
While shameful hate sleeps out the afternoon.
The Globe editors read "while shame full late," &c., but change seems objectionable, because it destroys the antithesis between "love" which wakes, and "hate" which continues to sleep; I have therefore retained the original reading, which Sir Philip Ferring explains as follows: hate, the "displeasures" of line 65, having destroyed our friends and done its work, enjoys its afternoon slumber, while love awakes, though too late, and weeps to see the havoc hate had made. This is fairly satisfactory; but I would add that "after weep their dust" seems to be connected by a kind of zeugma with the preceding verb "destroy," for it is we who weep, not our "displeasures," and that the main point of the antithesis is, that hate continues to sleep unconcerned, while love awakes to weep. The Globe marks line 65 "our own love," &c., as corrupt.

190. Lines 71, 72: Count. Which better than the first, &c.—These two lines were first given to the Countess by Theobald: in the Folios they are part of the preceding speech.

191. Line 79: The last that e'er I took her leave at court.—The last time that I ever bade her farewell at court. So the Folio, but with 'er spelt ere. Rowe printed: "The last that e'er she took her leave;" Hamner: "The last time e'er she took her leave;" Dyce: "The last time, ere she took her leave."

192. Lines 95, 96:
I stood engag'd.
The plain meaning is: When she saw me receive the ring she thought I stood engaged to her.—Johnson. This is the most natural interpretation; but the Folio happens to spell the word engag'd, which Tyrwhitt, Malone, Staunton, and Schmidt (who even calls the reading engaged postposenous) explain to mean "not engaged." En and in are, however, sometimes interchangeable even in modern spelling.

193. Line 102: the tinct and multiplying medicine.—The tincture, by which alchemists professed to turn baser metals into gold, and the philosopher's stone, which had the power of making a place of gold larger.

194. Line 114: conjectural.—So F. 2; misspelt in F. 1 connectural.
WORDS PECULIAR TO ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

WORDS OCCURRING ONLY IN ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

Note.—The addition of sub., adj., verb, adv. in brackets immediately after a word indicates that the word is used as a substantive, adjective, verb, or adverb only in the passage or passages cited.

Those compound words marked with an asterisk are printed as two separate words in F. 1.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Accessory 1 (sub.)</td>
<td>l. 1 35</td>
<td>Cardene (v.)</td>
<td>l. 3 311</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Actuely l. 1 220</td>
<td>Cased (v.)</td>
<td>l. 2 36</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Admiringly l. 1 33</td>
<td>Case 12 (verb)</td>
<td>l. 3 111</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Adoptions l. 1 188</td>
<td>Cassed (v.)</td>
<td>l. 2 119</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>A-foot 12</td>
<td>Cassocks l. 3 192</td>
<td>Causeless 14 (adj.)</td>
<td>l. 3 4</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>After-debt l. 3 255</td>
<td>Chased (v.)</td>
<td>l. 2 37</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Allurement l. 3 241</td>
<td>Chape l. 3 164</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ames-ace l. 3 85</td>
<td>Cherisher l. 3 50</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Applications l. 3 271</td>
<td>Christendom l. 3 121</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Arise l. 1 79</td>
<td>Clew l. 3 128</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Attribute 2</td>
<td>Coarsely l. 3 60</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Avail (sub.) l. 3 190</td>
<td>Coherently l. 3 79</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bannertes l. 3 214</td>
<td>Confidently l. 3 214, 94</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barely 1</td>
<td>Conged l. 3 100</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barrenness 1</td>
<td>Consolate (verb) l. 3 121</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barrifando 2 (verb) l. 1 124</td>
<td>Cox 18</td>
<td>l. 2 43</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bed-clothes l. 3 287</td>
<td>Credible l. 1 2 4</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blade l. 3 6</td>
<td>Curvet (sub.) l. 3 260</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blow-upers l. 1 132</td>
<td>Custard l. 3 270</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Boggle l. 3 232</td>
<td>Default l. 3 241</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Both-sides 4</td>
<td>Discipled l. 3 248</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Braid (adj.) l. 3 273</td>
<td>Dog-hole l. 3 241</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>*Brawny-witl l. 2 19</td>
<td>Dogholt l. 3 291</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bubble 3</td>
<td>Double-meaning l. 4 114</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bunting l. 3 7</td>
<td>Doughy l. 4 4</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Camping 10 (Intrans.) l. 3 14</td>
<td>Droped l. 3 195</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Canury 11 (sub.) l. 1 77</td>
<td>Dryly l. 1 175</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Capriccio 12</td>
<td>Eagerness l. 3 213</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Captious l. 3 210</td>
<td>Earth 19 (intrans.) l. 1 175</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

1 Lucrce, 528; Sonn. XXY. 18.
2 In infancy; used frequently in the ordinary sense.
3 As a sub., used repeatedly.
4 In a bare or naked condition; it occurs three times—only.
5 Nakedness here and in Sonn. v. 8; act. 4. In I. Henry IV. iv. 2, 77, the word occurs in the sense of "leanness."
6 Used elsewhere as a sub.
8 Used adverbially.
9 Used figuratively—a cheat; occurs frequently in ordinary

10 Used transitively in Ant and Cleo. iv. 2, 32.
11 A dance; and so used as a verb in Love's Labour's Lost. ll. 1: 12.
12 An Anglicized Italian word

13—too, used frequently elsewhere in various senses.
14 Venus and Adonis, 927.
15 Christian names; the word occurs frequently in its ordinary sense.
16 In expression "not my passion!"
17 In the phrase "in the default"—at a need; occurs three times in its ordinary sense.
18—learning; used elsewhere in its ordinary sense.
19 Used in expression "it eateth deeply."
20—inclosed; used elsewhere in other senses.
21—exhausted, emptied; in figurative sense; it occurs in its

22—doubled. Occurs frequently in other senses.
23 Lucrce, Arg. 1.
24 Used—warlike adventure.
25—Parishes' equivalent for merrity, which latter word does

26—having the power of fate; used elsewhere—destined.
27 i.e. for papers; used elsewhere in various other senses.
28 The Clown's form of physiognomy.
29—Christens, or gives as a sponsor; used elsewhere tranislatively

30—hawk-like.
31—used in a peculiar sense—comprehensive; occurs in Richard 32—merely.

33—contempt; it occurs several times—mistake.
34—rites; it is used once again in Pericles, ii. ProL 8—anything small.
35—morris-dance. Morris (a game) occurs in Mid. Night's Dream. ll. 1: 60; and morris-dance in Henry V. ii. 4, 93.
36—sailed; used, figuratively, in Hamlet, iv. 1: 31.
37 Used with human—professional experience; occurs frequently in its more usual senses.
38 Used figuratively—estimation; occurs frequently elsewhere in various other senses.
WORDS PECULIAR TO ALL 'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

Act Sc. Line
---
Past-cure (adj.) ii. 1 124
Past-saving (adj.) iv. 3 156
Persecuted..... i. 1 16
Personages 1. ii. 3 276
Philosophical... ii. 3 2
"Pin-buttlock... ii. 2 218
Prejudices..... i. 2 8
Prologues (verb) ii. 1 96
Prophesier..... iv. 3 114
Quatch-buttlock ii. 2 18
Questant..... ii. 1 16
---
Rational 2..... i. 1 129
Ravin (adj.)..... iii. 2 120
Ravishments 4 iv. 3 281
Recantation..... ii. 3 194, 195
Rector......... iv. 3 68
Red-tailed..... iv. 5 6
Relinquished... iii. 3 10

Reminders 4..... iv. 3 313
Removes 6..... v. 3 321
Re-send..... iii. 6 123
Resolvedly..... v. 3 322
"Riddle-like..... i. 3 223
Ring-carrier..... iii. 5 96
"Ruttish.... iv. 3 243
Sally (verb)..... iv. 1 2
Scarcely.... iv. 2 28
Schools (sub.) i. 3 246
Seducer..... v. 3 144
Self-gracious..... iv. 5 77
Shot (verb intr.) ii. 3 8
Shriek..... iv. 3 213
Shrove-Tuesday ii. 2 25
Sithence (conj.) i. 3 135
Smack 10..... iv. 1 18
---
5 Used here in legal sense; the word occurs elsewhere frequently in the ordinary sense.
6 Used in its acadaical sense — schools of art or science; it occurs frequently in the ordinary sense.
7 Occurs in a corrupt passage.
8 Used in a corrupt passage.
9 In the phrase "shot out" — spouted; occurs frequently in other senses.
10 A smattering; occurs in this play i. 3. 267 and ii. Henry IV. i. 2. 111.—taste.

Original Emendations Adopted.
None

Original Emendation Suggested.

Note
196. v. 3. 216: Her onset, coming.

75
JULIUS CAESAR.

NOTES AND INTRODUCTION

BY

OSCAR FAY ADAMS AND F. A. MARSHALL.
DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

JULIUS CAESAR.
OCTAVIUS CAESAR.
MARCUS ANTONIUS.
M. ÀEMILIUS LEPIDUS,
CICERO,
PUBLIUS, PAPIRUS.
MARCUS BRUTUS, CASSIUS,
CASCO, TREBONIUS,
LIGARIUS, DECIUS BRUTUS,
METELLUS CIMBER,
CINNA, FLAVIUS, MARULLUS,
ARTEMIDORUS, a Sophist of Chidos.

Triumvirs, after the death of Julius Caesar.

Senators.

Friends to Brutus and Cassius.

Servants to Brutus.

Wife to Caesar.

Wife to Brutus.

Senators, Citizens, Guards, Attendants, &c.

SCENE, during a great part of the Play, at Rome; afterwards at Sardis, and near Philippi.

HISTORIC PERIOD: From March 15th, B.C. 44, to November 27th, B.C. 43.

TIME OF ACTION.

Six days represented on the stage, with intervals:—

Day 1: Act I. Scenes 1 and 2.—Interval, one month.
Day 2: Act I. Scene 3.

Day 4: Act IV. Scene 1.—Interval.
Day 5: Act IV. Scenes 2 and 3.—Interval, one day at least.
Day 6: Act V.

except in l. 2. 288, where it is spelt Murrillius. Theobald corrected this name to the form given in North's Plutarch, Marullus.

Calpurnia, wife to Caesar, is uniformly called Calphurnia in the Folio; and so she is called in North's Plutarch, at any rate in the early editions of that work. Many editors retain the spelling Calphurnia.

1 Rowe was the first to give the list of Dramatis Personae imperfectly. Theobald supplied some of the omissions. Decius Brutus should be Decimus Brutus, strictly speaking, but this mistake came from North's Plutarch, and indeed is found both in the early French translation and in the Greek text of the original (edn. 1572). The name Marullus is throughout spelt Murrillius in Pl.
JULIUS CAESAR.

INTRODUCTION.

LITERARY HISTORY.

This play was first published, so far as we know, in the Folio of 1623, where it occupies pages 109–130 in the division of "Tragedies." At the beginning of the play, and at the head of each page, it is entitled "The Tragedie of Julius Cesar;" but in the Table of Contents (or, as it is called, "A Catalogue of the Several Comedies, Histories, and Tragedies contained in this Volume") it is set down as "The Life and Death of Julius Caesar." No play in the Folio is printed with greater accuracy, and none presents fewer textual difficulties for the editor or critic.

The date of composition has been the subject of considerable discussion. Malone believed that the play "could not have appeared before 1607;" and Chalmers, Drake, and the earlier commentators generally, were unanimous in accepting his conclusions. There was a natural disposition at first to associate it chronologically with the other Roman plays, neither of which can be placed earlier than 1607; but, though Knight considers it "one of the latest works of Shakespeare," the great majority of recent editors are inclined to put it five years or more earlier than Antony and Cleopatra. Collier argues that it must have been performed before 1603; and Gervinus also decides that it "was composed before 1603, about the same time as Hamlet." He adds that this is "confirmed not only by the frequent external references to Cesar which we find in Hamlet, but still more by the inner relations of the two plays." Halliwell, in his folio edition, 1865, takes the ground that it was written "in or before the year 1601." This is evident, he says, "from the following lines in Weever's Mirror of Martyrs, printed in that year—lines which unquestionably are to be traced to a recollection of Shakespeare's drama, not to that of the history as given by Plutarch:

The many-headed multitude were drawne
By Brutus' speech, that Cesar was ambitious;
When eloquent Mark Antonie had shewne
His virtues, who but Brutus then was vicious!"

I am inclined to believe that this is a reference to Shakespeare's play, though Halliwell appears to have modified his own opinion since the above was written. In his Outlines of the Life of Shakespeare (6th ed. 1886, vol. ii. p. 257) he says: "There is supposed to be a possibility, derived from an apparent reference to it in Weever's Mirror of Martyrs, that the tragedy of Julius Cesar was in existence as early as 1599; for although the former work was not published till 1601, the author distinctly tells his dedicatee that 'this poem, which I present to your learned view, some two yeares agoe was made fit for print.' The subject was then, however, a favourite one for dramatic composition, and inferences from such premises must be cautiously received. Shakespeare's was not, perhaps, the only drama of the time to which the lines of Weever were applicable; and the more this species of evidence is studied, the more is one inclined to question its efficacy. Plays on the history of Julius Cesar are mentioned in Goess's Schoole of Abuse, 1579; the Third Blast of Retraite from Piaies, 1580; Henslowe's Diary, 1594, 1602; Mirrour of Policie, 1598; Hamlet, 1603; Heywood's Apology for Actors, 1612. There was a French tragedy on the subject published at Paris in 1578, and a Latin one was performed at Christ Church, Oxford, in 1582. Tarlton, who died in 1588, had appeared as Cesar, perhaps on some unauthorized occasion, a circumstance alluded to in the Ourania, 1606."

The allusion in Weever's book does not fit any of the other plays on the story of Cæsar that have come down to our day; and it does fit Shakespeare's play so exactly that, since it was first pointed out, the editors have unanimously accepted Halliwell's original view of it. It does not follow necessarily that Julius Cæsar must have been written as early as 1599. Even if the Mirror of Martyrs was written then, an allusion like this may have been inserted just before it went to press two years later. The date 1599, however, may not be too early. The internal evidence of metre and style is not inconsistent with that date. Frey (Chronicle History of Shakespeare, 1886, p. 214) makes it 1600; "at any rate Cæsar must be anterior to the Quarto Hamlet which was produced in 1601." Stokes (Chronological Order of Shakespeare's Plays, 1878, p. 88), after a careful discussion of all the evidence, sums up the matter thus: "The great similarity of style between this play and Hamlet and Henry V. has been pointed out by Gervinus, Spedding, Dowden, Hales, and others, and, I suppose, must have been felt by nearly every reader. It is not only shown by the many allusions to Cæsar in these plays [allusions, by the by, which show a co-ordinate estimation of his character], but by the 'minor relations' of these plays. This point is so strong that, taking into consideration some of the references mentioned above, there can scarcely be any doubt that the original production of this play must be placed in 1599–1600. It may have been revised afterwards, and the appearance of several works bearing similar titles in 1607 suggests, as Mr. Frey says, its reproduction at that date."

It is not necessary, however, to suppose, as Frey does, that the play was revised by Ben Jonson. He lays considerable stress on "the spelling of Antony without an A: this name occurs in eight of Shakespeare's plays, and in every instance but this invariably is spelled Anthony." But if the scholarly Ben had made this orthographical correction, it is likely that he would have permitted the impossible Latin form Calphurnia to stand? Or would he have retained the Decius Brutus for Decimus Brutus, or such palpable anachronisms as striking clocks and the like? It is as absurd to suppose that Jonson could have overlooked these things as that Bacon could have originated them. To the latter, as to the former, Decius Brutus for Decimus Brutus would have been like Sly's "Richard Conqueror" for the well-known William.

It may be mentioned here, as a curious instance of judicial blindness, that Judge Holmes, by far the ablest of the advocates of the Baconian lunacy, in his Authorship of Shakespeare (3rd ed. 1886, vol. i, p. 289), quotes Bacon's Essay on Friendship as a parallel to the second act of the play (and one by which, "if there be a lingering doubt in any mind" as to Bacon's authorship of the latter, that doubt "must be removed"); and yet in the very passage quoted Bacon has "Decimus Brutus" and "Calpurnia," instead of the "Decius Brutus" and "Calphurnia" of the drama. The judge does not see that he is himself furnishing indisputable evidence that the philosopher was perfectly familiar with what the dramatist was palpably ignorant of.

We have no reason to suppose that Shakespeare was indebted to any of the earlier plays on the same subject. The only source from which he appears to have drawn his material was Sir Thomas North's version of Plutarch's Lives, translated from the French of Bishop Amyot, and first published in 1579. He has followed North closely, almost slavishly, as the illustrative extracts given in the notes will show. As Gervinus says: "The component parts of the drama are borrowed from the biographies of Brutus and Cæsar in such a manner that not only the historical action in its ordinary course, but also the single characteristic traits in incidents and speeches, nay, even single expressions and words, are taken from Plutarch; even such as are not anecdotal or of an epigrammatic nature, even such as one unacquainted with Plutarch would consider in form and manner to be quite Shakespearian, and which have not unfrequently been quoted as his peculiar property, testifying to the poet's deep knowledge of human nature. From the triumph over Pompey (or rather over his sons), the silencing of the two tribunes, and the crown offered at the Lupercalian feast, until Cæsar's murder, and from thence to the battle of Philippi and the closing words of Antony, which are in part exactly as they were delivered, all in this play is essentially Plutarch. The omens of Cæsar's death, the warnings of the augur and of Artemidorus, the absence of the heart in the animal sacrificed, Calphurnia's dream; the peculiar traits of Cæsar's character, his superstition regarding the touch of barren women in the course, his remarks about thin people like Cassius; all the circumstances about the conspiracy where no oath was taken, the character of Ligarius, the withdrawal of Cicero; the whole relation of Portia to Brutus, her words, his reply, her subsequent anxiety and death; the circumstances of Cæsar's death, the very arts and means of Decius Brutus to induce him to leave home, all the minutest particulars of his murder, the behaviour of Antony and its result, the murder of the poet Cinna; further on, the contention between the republican friends respecting Lucius Pella and the refusal of the money, the dissension of the two concerning the decisive battle, their conversation about suicide, the appearance of Brutus's evil genius, the mistakes in the battle, its double issue, its repetition, the suicide of both friends, and Cassius's death by the same sword with which he killed Cæsar—all is taken from Plutarch's narrative, from which the poet had only to omit whatever destroyed the unity of the action."
INTRODUCTION.

Archbishop Trench, in his Lectures on Plutarch, in referring to North's translation of the Lives, remarks:

"But the highest title to honour which this version possesses has not hitherto been mentioned, namely, the use which Shakespeare was content to make of it. Whatever Latin Shakespeare may have had, he certainly knew no Greek, and thus it was only through Sir Thomas North's translation that the rich treasure-house of Plutarch's Lives was accessible to him... It is hardly an exaggeration to say that the whole play—and the same stands good of Coriolanus no less—is to be found in Plutarch. Shakespeare indeed has thrown a rich mantle of poetry over all, which is often wholly his own; but of the incident there is almost nothing which he does not owe to Plutarch, even as continually he owes the very wording to Sir Thomas North."

STAGE HISTORY.

Julius Cæsar always seems to have been one of the most popular of Shakespeare's plays on the stage, in spite of its want of any female interest, and of the fact that Cæsar, who is virtually the hero, is killed in the middle of the play. We find that on the 20th May, 1613, Lord Treasurer Stanhope paid John Heminges "for presentinge before the Princes Highness the Lady Elizabeth and the Prince Pallatyne Elector fowerteeene several plays," of which "Cæsar's Tragedye" was one. When Thomas Killigrew, after the Restoration, established the King's Company, and opened a new theatre at Drury Lane, 1665, Julius Cæsar was one of the stock pieces of the company. Downes gives us the cast as follows: "Julius Cæsar, Mr. Bell, Cassius Major Mohun, Brutus, Mr. Hart, Anthony Mr. Kynaston, Calphurnia,1 Mrs. Marshal, Portia, Mrs. Corbet." The only other plays of Shakespeare, which were included in the fifteen stock plays of which Downes gives the casts, are "The Moor of Venice" (Othello), and King Henry the Fourth; while amongst the other plays, of which he gives merely the names, are included The Merry Wives of Windsor and Titus Andronicus; so that however much we may decry Julius Cæsar as an acting play, it had the honour of being one of the four—for we cannot include Titus Andronicus—which helped to keep alive Shakespeare's fame at a time when his rivals, Beaumont and Fletcher and Ben Jonson, were held to be his superiors by the general public. During the reigns of Charles II. and James II. Julius Cæsar seems to have been frequently played. In 1682, at the Theatre Royal, it was again acted with identically the same cast as in the above-mentioned performance. In 1684 Killigrew's and Davenant's companies coalesced, and, under the title of the King's Company, removed to the Theatre

---

1 This name is spelt Calpurnia, as in F.1, both in Downes and Genest throughout, and I have not thought it necessary to alter the spelling, though Calpurnia is the correct form.
Royal, Drury Lane; some time in that year they presented this play, Betterton appearing—for the first time apparently—as Brutus, supported by William Smith as Cassius, Goodman as Julius Cæsar, Mrs. Cooke as Portia, and Lady Slingby as Calphurnia. Langbaine (p. 453) says that this play was printed in Quarto, London, 1684; and he adds: “There is an Excellent Prologue to it, printed in Covent Garden Drollery, p. 3.” Genest says this edition “differs very little from the original play, except that the part of Marullus is given to Casca, and that of Cicero to Trebonius” (vol. i. p. 423). Lowndes mentions a Quarto of Julius Cæsar with the title-page “a Tragedy, as it is now acted at the Theatre Royal, Lond. n. d. (1680) 4to. On the reverse of the title is a List of Actors, in which Betterton is set down for acting Brutus.” He also mentions two Quartos printed in 1684 and 1696 respectively, and another n. d. (1696); so that evidently, during this period, the play was popular among readers as well as among playgoers.

It would appear that Julius Cæsar was not again represented till February 14th, 1704, when it was played at Lincoln’s Inn Fields. The cast is not given. This, as will be seen, is nearly twenty years from the last recorded performance. It is most probable that it was represented in the interval more than once, though there is no record of its revival. Betterton was still acting, so he probably played his old part of Brutus. On October 30th, 1705, the company removed to the Haymarket Theatre from Lincoln’s Inn Fields, and Julius Cæsar was revived on March 14th, 1706. No particulars are given, but the cast must have been a strong one; for Betterton, Booth, Verbruggen, Bowman, as well as Mrs. Barry and Mrs. Bracegirdle, were included in the company. The next performance was on January 14th, 1707, at the Haymarket Theatre, when Genest says it was performed “For the encouragement of the Comedians acting in the Haymarket, and to enable them to keep the diversion of plays under a separate interest from Operas—By Subscription” (vol. ii. p. 363).

The cast was, Brutus = Betterton; Cassius = Verbruggen; Antony = Wilks; Julius Cæsar = Booth; Octavius = Mills; Casca = Keen; Calphurnia = Mrs. Barry; Portia = Mrs. Bracegirdle. The minor parts were also played by well-known actors, viz. “Plebeians” = Johnson, Bullock, Norris and Cross. It would appear that “Lord Halifax proposed a subscription for reviving 3 plays of the best authors with the full strength of the company” (ut supra). The next play of this series, King and no King, was given on January 21st; and on February 4th the third, Marriage a la Mode, or the Comical Lovers; a compound manufactured by Cibber out of two of Dryden’s plays, Marriage a la Mode and Secret Love. Cibber in his Apology (edn. 1740) says: “not only the Actors, (several of which were handsomely advanced, in their Sallaries) were duly paid, but the Manager himself too, at the Foot of his Account stood a considerable Gainer” (p. 185).

On April 1st of the same year Julius Cæsar was revived for the benefit of Keen, probably with much the same cast. On December 22nd, 1708, at Drury Lane, Booth appeared as Brutus, Powell as Cassius, with Mrs. Knight as Calphurnia. A new prologue and epilogue were spoken by Keen and Mrs. Bradshaw, who represented respectively Julius Cæsar and Portia. On March 16th, 1713, at Drury Lane, Mills played the part of Julius Cæsar for his benefit, Brutus being played by Booth, Antony by Wilks, Cassius by Powell, Casca by Keen. It may be noted that on this, as on many other occasions, such actors as Johnson, Pinkethman, Bullock, Norris, Cross, and Leigh took the parts of the “Plebeians,” that is, of the Citizens; the play

---

1 Downes does not mention this performance, and Genest does not give the day or the month on which it took place.

2 This actress appears to have acted many principal parts; among others, Queen Margaret in Crowne’s Henry VI., Began in Tate’s mutilation of Lear, and Creeps in Dryden’s Troilus and Cressida. She affords the only instance of any titled actress to be found in the playbills of this period; though many of them had a sort of left-handed claim to such a distinction. Downes mentions her among the persons who joined the Duke’s Company in 1670 as Mrs. Aldridge and Mrs. Lee, afterwards Lady Slingby. She is generally spoken of as Mrs. Mary Lee, and appears to have been no relation to poor mad Nat Lee. According to Genest “Dame Mary Slingby was buried at Pancras 1688, 4” (Genest, vol. i. p. 446).
INTRODUCTION.

was repeated on the 6th of April. By this time it seems to have become an established favourite. Booth chose it for his benefit March 22nd, 1716. It seems to have been acted at least two or three times every season at Drury Lane up to 1727–28; then it seems to have been put on the shelf as far as that theatre was concerned.

During the period from 1720–28 inclusive, Julius Caesar was played at the Lincoln's Inn Fields Theatre about half a dozen times. On October 18th, 1722, we find in the cast that Quin played Brutus, Boheme Cassius, Walker Antony, Leigh Julius Caesar. It would appear, according to Genest, that the "comic characters" were played by Bullock and others (vol. iii. p. 116). These were the Citizens, whom, as has been pointed out, actors of considerable importance were content to represent. At Goodman's Fields, December 1st, 1732, Julius Caesar was produced and played for twelve consecutive nights. On September 19th, 1736, there was a performance of this play at Drury Lane, with the following cast: Brutus, Quin; Cassius, Milward; Wright, Antony; W. Mills, Julius Caesar; Casca, Cibber, jun.; "Citizens," Johnson, Miller, Harper, and Griffin, with Portia, Mrs. Furnival, and Calphurnia, Mrs. Butler. Davies says that the part of Casca was "enlarged" by "adding to it what belongs to Titinius;" and he observes, "if I remember right, was acted by a principal comedian. Above five and forty years since, Winstone was selected for that character, when Quin acted Brutus, and the elder Mills Cassius, Milward M. Antony, and W. Mills Julius Caesar." He praises Winstone very much, of whom he says: "The assumed doggedness and souerness of Casca sat well upon Winstone;" and adds: "The four principal parts have not since that time been equally presented." (Dramatic Miscellanies, vol. ii. p. 212). Davies praises Milward very much in Antony, although it would appear that this actor played Cassius far more frequently, and compares him in this character with Wilks and Barry: he also says that William Mills succeeded better in Caesar than in any other part. But the most interesting thing that the gossiping biographer of Garrick tells us about this play is, that the great "little Davy" once had a mind to have tried his skill in the part of Cassius; but either from a fear that Quin in Brutus would completely outshine him, or for some other reason, he gave up the idea; and this play was never revived during his management. On April 28th, 1738, there was a performance at Drury Lane for the fund for erecting a monument to the memory of Shakespeare, when Julius Caesar was played; Mrs. Porter being the Portia. In the season 1742, 1743, Quin was engaged at Covent Garden, where he was playing as a counter-attraction to Garrick at Drury Lane; and, as might be expected, we find Julius Caesar revived at that theatre and strongly cast, with Hale as Antony, Ryan as Cassius, Bridgewater as Cesar, and with such actors as Hippisley, Chapman, and Woodward in the small parts of the "Plebeians." This was on November 20th, 1742. On March 18th, 1744, Sheridan took his benefit at Covent Garden in the part of Brutus. At this theatre Mrs. Pritchard appeared as Portia on October 31st, 1744. On March 28th, 1747, we find a solitary performance of Julius Caesar for Sparks's benefit, who played Cassius to the Brutus of Delane and the Antony of Barry. The play was repeated on April 30th, when Gifford was Antony; Barry only appears to have played the part twice that season. On November 24th, 1748, Quin had rather a remarkable cast to support him in his favourite part. It included Delane as Antony, Ryan as Cassius, Sparks as Casca, Mrs. Horton as Calphurnia, and Mrs. Woffington as Portia. Three representations of this play were given in November, 1750, at which Barry was the Antony to Quin's Brutus; and so successful was he in the part that he played it seven times during this season.

On January 31st, 1766, Genest records a performance of this play at Covent Garden "not acted eight years," the cast of which was not very remarkable, except for the fact that Mrs. Bellamy played Portia. Apropos of this performance Genest notices that an edition of Julius Caesar was printed in 1719, "as altered by Davenant and Dryden." This must have been a mistake, however, because Julius Cæsar was one of the plays assigned to Killigrew; and therefore Davenant could not play it at his theatre. Walker, who played Brutus on this and subsequent occasions at Covent Garden, used to speak the following lines at the end of the fourth act:

Sure they have rais'd some devil to their aid,
And think to frighten Brutus with a shade:
But ere the night closes this fatal day,
I'll send more ghosts this visit to repay.

These lines are not found in the edition printed in 1682 "as acted at the Theatre Royal;" but they are given in Bell's edition printed from the Prompter's Book at Covent Garden, 1773. The author of these touching and poetical verses is apparently unknown; but, as Genest points out, it is clear that they must have been received into what he calls "that Sink of corruption—the Prompt Book" after 1682.

We pass over some performances of no particular interest till we come to the first appearance of John Kemble in the character of Brutus. Boaden says: "On the 29th of February, 1812, Mr. Kemble revived the tragedy of Julius Cæsar; he had, as usual, made some very judicious alterations and arrangements in the piece, and in his own performance of Brutus exhibited all that purity of patriotism and philosophy, which has been, not without some hesitation, attributed to that illustrious name" (Life of Kemble, vol. ii. p. 543). There can be little doubt that this performance of the play, with Young as Cassius and Charles Kemble as Antony, must have been most effective, as Brutus was one of the characters in which the elder Kemble was supreme. Macready played both Cassius and Brutus, but in his own opinion he chiefly excelled in the latter. It is a pity that this great actor did not adopt the plan which, according to Mrs. Garrick, her husband followed, of writing his own criticisms, or rather of publishing them; for he did write them apparently in his own diary. Perhaps, if he could have seen such criticisms as the following in print during his lifetime, it might have reconciled him to that profession by means of which he gained a position, which he could scarcely have achieved even in the pulpit, after which he appears sometimes to have hankered, but which profession, nevertheless, he would seem always to have been abusing, and to have regarded as a degradation while he remained in it. In his diary, under date January 24th, 1851, he says: "Acted Brutus as I never—no, never—acted it before, in regard to dignified familiarity of dialogue, or enthusiastic inspiration of lofty purpose. The distance, the reluctance to deeds of violence, the instinctive abhorrence of tyranny, the open simplicity of heart, and natural grandeur of soul I never so perfectly, so consciously portrayed before. I think the audience felt it" (vol. ii. p. 365). Let us hope that the audience did feel all this, or, at any rate, some of it. It is, however, satisfactory to know that among the many mortifications which this great artist had to endure, self-deprecation was not one. In another part of his diary Macready says, with indisputable good sense, that Brutus "is one of those characters that requires peculiar care, which only repetition can give, but it never can be a part that can inspire a person with an eager desire to go to a theatre to see represented." It was in the season 1818–19 that he first played Cassius to Young's Brutus at Covent Garden, apparently on the occasion of the latter's benefit. According to his own account Macready played this part to oblige Young; but he seems to have taken great pleasure in it, and to have repeated it again in 1822, at Covent Garden, to Young's Brutus; Marc Antony being then Charles Kemble and Casca Fawcett. This revival was very successful, there being as much as £600 (?) taken at the first performance.1

Edmund Kean, apparently, never played in Julius Cæsar at all. Phelps closed his second season on May 5th, 1846, with this play, which, however, never seems to have been a great favourite with him. In our own time this play has never been represented with greater effect than it was by the celebrated German company of the Theatre Royal, Meiningen, at Drury Lane Theatre, in 1881. The completeness in every detail, and the admir-

1 See Macready's Reminiscences, vol. i. p. 285. I have ventured to query the sum mentioned, as I do not believe Covent Garden Theatre could have held so much money at that time, and at the then existing prices.
INTRODUCTION.

able stage-management, especially in the arrangement of the crowds, rendered these performances some of the most successful ever given by a foreign company in this country.
—F. A. M.

CRITICAL REMARKS.

Julius Caesar has been condemned, from a dramatic point of view, for its lack of unity. It is like two plays in one, the former being concerned with the death of Caesar, the latter with the revenge of that deed. The nominal hero disappears at the end of the third act, and only his ghost is seen thereafter. But the ghost is a connecting link between the two parts of the drama. "O Julius Caesar, thou art mighty yet!" exclaims Brutus, when he comes upon the dead bodies of Cassius and Titius; and Cassius, as he killed himself, had cried:

Cæsar, thou art reveng'd,
   Even with the sword that kill'd thee.

(v. 3. 45, 46.)

It is not without purpose that the dramatist introduces these significant utterances. Caesar is dead, indeed, but we must not forget that his spirit ranging for revenge,
   With Até by his side come hot from hell,

(iii. 1. 271, 272.)

has "let slip the dogs of war" against his butchers. The eloquent prophecy of Antony over his bleeding corpse is fulfilled.

The treatment of the living Caesar by the poet, however, has been a puzzle to many of the critics. It is evident from the many allusions to the great Roman in the other plays, that his character and history had made a deep impression on Shakespeare. Craik, after quoting the references to Caesar in As You Like It, II. Henry IV., Henry V., the three parts of Henry VI., Richard III., Hamlet, Antony and Cleopatra, and Cymbeline, remarks that these passages "will probably be thought to afford a considerably more comprehensive representation of the mighty Julius than the play which bears his name." "We have," he adds, "a distinct exhibition of little else beyond his vanity and arrogance, relieved and set off by his good-nature or affability. . . . It might almost be suspected that the complete and full-length Caesar had been carefully reserved for another drama." Hazlitt remarks that the hero of the play "makes several vapouring and rather pedantic speeches, and does nothing; indeed, he has nothing to do." Hudson says: "Cæsar is far from being himself in these scenes; hardly one of the speeches put into his mouth can be regarded as historically characteristic; taken all together they are little short of a downright caricature." He is in doubt whether to explain this by supposing that Caesar was too great for the hero of a drama, "since his greatness, if brought forward in full measure, would leave no room for anything else," or whether it was not the poet's plan "to represent Caesar, not as he was indeed, but as he must have appeared to the conspirators; to make us see him as they saw him; in order that they too might have fair and equal judgment at our hands." He is disposed to rest on the latter explanation, but to me it seems very clearly a wrong one. What the conspirators thought of Caesar is evident enough from what they themselves say of him. It was not necessary to distort or belittle the character to make us see how they saw him; and to have done it to make us see him as they saw him would have been a gross injustice to the foremost man of all this world of which we cannot imagine Shakespeare guilty. As to its being necessary in order that we may do justice to the conspirators, if it leads us to justify their course in killing him, does it not make the fate that afterwards befalls them appear most undeserved? Does it not enlist our sympathies too exclusively on their side?

On the whole I am disposed to think that the poet meant to represent Caesar as Plutarch represents him—as having become ambitious for kingly power, somewhat spoiled by victory, jealous and fearful of his enemies in the state, and superstitious withal, yet hiding his fears and misgivings under an arrogant and haughty demeanour. He is shown, moreover, by the dramatist at a critical point in his career, hesitating between his ambition for the crown (which we need not suppose to have been of a merely selfish sort, for he may well have believed that as king he could do more for his country's good than in any other capacity) and his doubt whether the time had come for him to accept the crown. It may be a question whether even Cæsar could be truly himself just then; whether even he might not, at such a crisis in his fortunes, show something of the weakness of inferior natures.
JULIUS CAESAR.

It must be remembered, too, that, as Hazlitt has said, Cæsar does nothing in the play, has nothing to do, except to play the part of the victim in the assassination. So far as any opportunities of showing what he really is are concerned, he is at much the same disadvantage as "the man in the coffin" at a funeral—a very essential character in the performance, though in no sense an actor in it. If he is to impress us as verily "great Cæsar," it must be by what he says, not by what he does, and by what he says when there is no occasion for grand and heroic utterance. Under the circumstances a little boasting and bravado appear to be necessary to his being recognized as the Roman Dictator.

After all, there is not so very much of this boastful language put into the mouth of Cæsar; and, as Knight reminds us, some of it is evidently uttered to disguise his fear. When he says:

The gods do this in shame of cowardice;
Cæsar should be a beast without a heart,
If he should stay at home to-day for fear,

(ii. 2. 41-48.)

he is speaking to the servant who has brought the message from the augurers. "Before him he could show no fear," but, the moment the servant has gone (he is doubtless intended to leave the stage), he tells Calpurnia that "for her humour he will stay at home," proving plainly enough that he does fear. His reply afterwards to Decius beginning

Cowards die many times before their deaths,

(ii. 2. 32.)

is directly suggested by Plutarch, who says that when his friends "did counsel him to have a guard for the safety of his person," he would not consent to it, "but said it was better to die once than always to be afraid of death." His last speech—

I do know but one
That unassailable holds on his rank,
Unshak'd of motion: and that I am he,
Let me a little show it,

(iii. 1. 68-71.)

though boastful, is not unnatural in the connection, being drawn from him by the persistent importunities of the friends of Cimber. The fact that Cæsar has so little to say has, I think, led the critics to exaggerate this characteristic of the speeches.

With regard to Brutus also the critics have had their doubts. Coleridge asks, "What character did Shakespeare mean his Brutus to be?" He is perplexed that Brutus, the stern Roman republican, should say that he would have no objection to a king, or to Cæsar as king, if he would only be as good a monarch as he now seems disposed to be; and also that, in view of all Cæsar had done—crossing the Rubicon, entering Rome as a conqueror, placing Gauls in the senate, &c.—he finds no personal cause to complain of him. He resolves to kill his friend and benefactor, not for what he has been or what he is, but for what he may become. He is no serpent, but a serpent's egg; therefore crush him in the shell.

It is curious that Coleridge should not have seen that by "personal cause," so distinctly opposed to "the general," Brutus refers to his private relations with Cæsar as a man and as a friend, not to public acts or those affecting the common weal. All those enumerated by Coleridge belong to the latter class.

That Brutus should be influenced by his speculations as to what Cæsar might become, is in thorough keeping with the character. Brutus is a scholar, a philosopher, and a patriot; but he is not a statesman. He is an idealist, and strangely wanting in practical wisdom. It is significant that Shakespeare represents him again and again with a book in his hand. He is a man of books rather than a man of the world. His theories are of the noblest, his intentions of the most patriotic and philanthropic, but they are visionary and impracticable. There are such men in every age—reformers who accomplish no reform, because their lofty dreams are incapable of being made realities in this workaday world. Such men are easily misled and made tools of by those more scrupulous than themselves; as Brutus was by Cassius and the rest. They are often inconsistent in argument, as Brutus in the speech that puzzled Coleridge. They are influenced by one-sided views of an important question, deciding it hastily, without looking at it from all sides, as they ought, and as those who are less rash and impulsive see that they ought. So Brutus sends to Cassius for money to pay his legions, because he cannot raise money by vile means; but he knows how Cassius raises the money, and has no scruples about sharing in the fruits of the "indirection." He is thinking only of paying the soldiers, and does not see that he is an accomplice after the act in what he so sharply rebukes in Cassius. He is inconsistent here as in many other cases; but the inconsistency is perfectly consistent with the character.
INTRODUCTION.

Cassius is a worse man, but a better statesman, or rather politician. He is shrewd and fertile in expedients, but not overburdened with principle or conscience. He is tricky, and believes that the end justifies the means. He can write anonymous letters to Brutus, "in several hands, as if they came from several citizens," and can put placards in the same vein "on old Brutus' statue." He is none too honest himself, but he understands the value of a good name to "the cause," and therefore wishes to secure the endorsement of one whose "countenance, like richest alchemy, will change to virtue and to worthiness" what, he says, "would appear offence in us"—the less scrupulous politicians.

We must not, however, take Cassius to be worse than he really is. As a politician he is a believer in expediency—whatever is likely to secure the end in view is right; but as a man he has many admirable traits of character. If it were not so, Brutus could not love him as he does. He has a high sense of personal honour withal. He is indignant when Brutus tells him he has "an itching palm;" but he has just told Brutus that bribery is not to be judged severely when it is necessary for political purposes. "At such a time as this it is not meet" to be overcritical of "every nice offence." There spake the politician; in the other case, the man. We must not be too hard upon him. Sundry good friends of ours in public life are his modern counterparts.

Except in the great scene in the forum, where his speech to the people is perhaps the finest piece of oratory to be found in all Shakespeare—and entirely his own, be it noted, no hint of it being given by Plutarch—Antony plays no very striking part in the drama. We see him roused by a sudden ambition from his early career of dissipation, and taking a place in the Triumvirate; and it reminds us of Prince Hal's coming to himself, like the repentant prodigal, when he comes to the throne. But Antony is, morally at least, a slighter man than Henry. His reform lacks the sincerity and depth of the latter's, and he cannot hold the higher plane to which he has temporarily risen. His fall is to be depicted in a later and greater drama, of which he is the hero and not a subordinate actor as here.

Portia is one of the noblest of Shakespeare's women. As Mrs. Jameson has said, her character "is but a softened reflection of that of her husband Brutus: in him we see an excess of natural sensibility, an almost womanish tenderness of heart, repressed by the tenets of his austere philosophy: a stoic by profession, and in reality the reverse—acting deeds against his nature by the strong force of principle and will. In Portia there is the same profound and passionate feeling, and all her sex's softness and timidity held in check by that self-discipline, that stately dignity, which she thought became a woman 'so fathered and so husbanded.' The fact of her inflicting on herself a voluntary wound to try her own fortitude is perhaps the strongest proof of this disposition. Plutarch relates that on the day on which Caesar was assassinated, Portia appeared overcome with terror, and even swooned away, but did not in her emotion utter a word which could affect the conspirators. Shakespeare has rendered this circumstance literally [in ii. 4. 1–20].

"There is another beautiful incident related by Plutarch which could not well be dramatized. When Brutus and Portia parted for the last time in the island of Nisida, she restrained all expression of grief that she might not shake his fortitude; but afterwards, in passing through a chamber in which there hung a picture of Hector and Andromache, she stopped, gazed upon it for a time with a settled sorrow, and at length burst into a passion of tears.

No critic or commentator, I believe, has thought Calpurnia worthy of notice, but the reader may be reminded to compare carefully the scene between her and Caesar with that between Portia and Brutus. The difference in the two women is not more remarkable than that in their husbands’ bearing and tone towards them. Portia with mingled pride and affection takes her stand upon her rights as a wife—“a woman that Lord Brutus took to wife”—and he feels the appeal as a man of his noble and tender nature must:

O ye gods,
Render me worthy of this noble wife!

Calpurnia is a poor creature in comparison with this true daughter of Cato, as her first words to Caesar sufficiently prove:

What mean you, Caesar? Think you to walk forth?
You shall not stir out of your house to-day.

(ii. 2. 8, 9.)

When a wife takes that tone, we know what the reply will be: “Cesar shall forth.” Later, of course, she comes down to entreaty:

Do not go forth to-day. Call it my fear
That keeps you in the house, and not your own.

(ii. 2. 50, 51.)

And Caesar, with contemptuous acquiescence in the suggestion to let Antony say he is “not well to-day,” yields to her weak importunities. When Decius comes in and urges Caesar to go, the story of her dream and her forebodings is told him with a sneer (can we imagine Brutus speaking of Portia in that manner?), and her husband, falling a victim to the shrewd flattery of Decius, departs to his death with a parting fling at her foolish fears, which he is ashamed at having for the moment yielded to. Calpurnia was Caesar’s fourth wife, and the marriage was one of convenience rather than of affection.

There are no portions of Roman history that seem so real to us as those which Shakespeare has made the subjects of his plays. History merely calls up the ghost of the dead past, and the impression it makes upon us is shadowy and unsubstantial; poetry makes it live again before our eyes, and we feel that we are looking upon men and women like ourselves, not their misty semblances. It might seem at first that the poet, by giving us fancies instead of facts, or fancies mingled with facts, only distorts and confuses our conceptions of historical verities; but, if he be a true poet, he sees the past with a clearer vision than other men, and reproduces it more truthfully as well as more vividly. He sees it indeed with the eye of imagination, not as it actually was; but there are truths of the imagination no less than of the senses and the reason. Two descriptions may be alike imaginative, but one may be true and the other false. The one, though not a statement of facts, is consistent with the facts and impresses us as the reality would impress us; the other is neither true nor in keeping with the truth, and can only deceive andmislead us. Ben Jonson wrote Roman plays which, in minute attention to the details of the manners and customs of the time, are far more scholarly and accurate than Shakespeare’s. He accompanies them with hundreds of notes giving classical quotations to illustrate the action and the language, and showing how painstaking he has been in this respect. The work evinces genuine poetic power as well as laborious research, and yet the effect is far inferior to that of Shakespeare’s less pedantic treatment of Roman subjects. The latter knows much less of classical history and antiquities, but has a deeper insight into human nature, which is the same in all ages. Jonson has given us skilfully-modelled and admirably-sculptured statues, but Shakespeare living men and women.
JULIUS CAESAR.

ACT I.

SCENE I. Rome. A street.

Enter Flavius, Marullus, meeting a rabble of Citizens.

Flav. Hence! home, you idle creatures, get you home. Is this a holiday? What! know you not, Being mechanical, you ought not walk Upon a labouring day without the sign Of your profession?—Speak, what trade art thou?

First Cit. Why, sir, a carpenter.

Mar. Where is thy leather apron, and thy rule? What dost thou with thy best apparel on?—You, sir; what trade are you?

Sec. Cit. Truly, sir, in respect of a fine workman, I am but, as you would say, a cobbler. 11

Sec. Cit. A trade, sir, that I hope I may use with a safe conscience; which is, indeed, sir, a mender of bad soles.

Mar. What trade, thou knave? thou naughty knave, what trade?

Sec. Cit. Nay, I beseech you, sir, be not out with me; yet if you be out, sir, I can mend you.

Mar. What mean'st thou by that? Mend me, thou saucy fellow?

Sec. Cit. Why, sir, cobble you.

Flav. Thou art a cobbler, art thou?

Sec. Cit. Truly, sir, all that I live by is with the awl. I meddle with no tradesman's matters, nor women's matters, but with all. I am, indeed, sir, a surgeon to old shoes; when they are in great danger, I recover them. As proper men as ever trod upon neat's leather have gone upon my handiwork.

Flav. But wherfore art not in thy shop to-day?

Why dost thou lead these men about the streets?

Sec. Cit. Truly, sir, to wear out their shoes, to get myself into more work. But, indeed, sir,

1 Mechanical, i.e. belonging to the class of mechanics, artisans.

2 Awl, an obvious pun on awl and all.

3 Recover, a quibble on re-cover.

4 Proper, handsome, well-made.
we make holiday to see Caesar, and to rejoice in his triumph.

    Mar. Wherefore rejoice? What conquest brings he home?
What tributaries follow him to Rome,
To grace in captive bonds his chariot wheels?
You blocks, you stones, you worse than senseless things!

O, you hard hearts, you cruel men of Rome,
Knew you not Pompey? Many a time and oft
Have you climb'd up to walls and battlements,
To towers and windows, yes, to chimney-tops,
Your infants in your arms, and there have sat
The livelong day, with patient expectation,
To see great Pompey pass the streets of Rome;
And, when you saw his chariot but appear,
Have you not made an universal shout,
That Tiber trembled under her banks,
To hear the replication of your sounds
Made in her concave shores?
And do you now put on your best attire?
And do you now call out a holiday?
And do you now strew flowers in his way
That comes in triumph over Pompey's blood?
Be gone!
Run to your houses, fall upon your knees,
Pray to the gods to intermit the plague
That needs must light on this ingratitude.

  Flav. Go, go, good countrymen, and, for this fault,
Assemble all the poor men of your sort;
Draw them to Tiber banks, and weep your ears
Into the channel, till the lowest stream
Do kiss the most exalted shores of all.—

    [Exeunt Citizens with a downcast air.

See whether their basest metal be not mov'd!
They vanish tongue-tied in their guiltiness.
Go you down that way towards the Capitol;
This way will I. Disrobe the images,
If you do find them deck'd with ceremonies.

    Mar. May we do so?

You know it is the feast of Lupercal.

  Flav. It is no matter; let no images
Be hung with Caesar's trophies. I'll about,
And drive away the vulgar from the streets;
So do you too, where you perceive them thick.

These growing feathers pluck'd from Caesar's wing
Will make him fly an ordinary pitch,
Who else would soar above the view of men,
And keep us all in servile fearfulness.

    [Exeunt.

Scene II. A public place.

An Altar with fire on it, by which the Soothsayer is standing; on either side a mob of citizens.
Enter, in procession with music, Caesar; Antony, for the course; Calphurnia, Portia, Decius, Cicero, Brutus, Cassius, and Casca, Priests, Senators, Standard-bearers, Lictors, Guards, &c.

  Cez. Calphurnia!
Cez. Peace, ho! Caesar speaks.

    [Music ceases.

  Cez. Calphurnia!

  Cal. Here, my lord.

  Cez. Stand you directly in Antonius' way,
When he doth run his course.—Antonius—
  Ant. Caesar, my lord!

  Cez. Forget not, in your speed, Antonius,
To touch Calphurnia; for our elders say,
The barren, touched in this holy chase,
Shake off their sterile curse.

  Ant. I shall remember;
When Caesar says "Do this," it is performed.

  Cez. Set on, and leave no ceremony out.

    [Music.

Sooth. Caesar!

  Cez. Ha! who calls?

Casca. Bid every noise be still.—Peace yet again!

    [Music ceases; the crowd opens and discovers Soothsayer.

  Cas. Who is it in the press that calls on me?
I hear a tongue, shriller than all the music,
Cry, "Caesar." Speak; Caesar is turn'd to hear.
Sooth. Beware the ides of March.

  Cez. What man is that?

  Brus. A soothsayer bids you beware the ides of March.

  Cez. Set him before me; let me see his face.

  Cez. Fellow, come from the throng; look upon Caesar.  [The Soothsayer advances.

1 That = so that.
2 Ceremonies, trophies, honorary ornaments.
3 Pitch, the height to which a falcon soars; a technical term.
4 Press, crowd.
ACT I. Scene 2.

JULIUS CAESAR.

Ces. What say'st thou to me now? Speak once again.

Sooth. Beware the ides of March.

Ces. He is a dreamer; let us leave him:

[Exit Soothsayer, Antony, and the rest.—pass. [Sennet. 1 Exeunt all but Brutus and Cassius in procession.

Cass. Will you go see the order of the course?

Bru. Not I.

Cass. I pray you, do.

Bru. I am not game'some; I do lack some part

Of that quick spirit that is in Antony.

Let me not hinder, Cassius, your desires; 50

I'll leave you. [Going—Cassius stops him.

Cass. Brutus, I do observe you now of late:

I have not from your eyes that gentleness

And show of love as I was wont to have;

You bear too stubborn and too strange a hand

Over your friend that loves you.

Bru. Cassius,

Be not deceiver'd; if I have veil'd my look,

I turn the trouble of my countenance

Merely upon myself. Vexed I am

Of late with passions of some difference; 40

Conceptions only proper to myself,

Which give some soil, perhaps, to my behavaviours;

But let not therefore my good friends be griev'd,—

Among which number, Cassius, be you one,—

Nor construe any further my neglect,

Than that poor Brutus, with himself at war,

Forgets the shows of love to other men.

Cass. Then, Brutus, I have much mistook your passion;

By means whereof this breast of mine hath buried

Thoughts of great value, worthy cogitations.

Tell me, good Brutus, can you see your face?

Bru. No, Cassius; for the eye sees not itself,

But by reflection by some other things.

Cass. Tis just;

And it is very much lamented, Brutus,

That you have no such mirrors as will turn

Your hidden worthiness into your eye,

That you might see your shadow. I have heard,

Where many of the best respect 4 in Rome,—

Except immortal Caesar,—speaking of Brutus,

And groaning underneath this age's yoke, 61

Have wish'd that noble Brutus had his eyes.

Bru. Into what dangers would you lead me,

Cassius,

That you would have me seek into myself

For that which is not in me?

Cass. Therefore, good Brutus, be prepar'd to hear;

And, since you know you cannot see yourself

So well as by reflection, I, your glass,

Will modestly discover to yourself 69

That of yourself which you yet know not of.

And be not jealous on 3 me, gentle Brutus:

Were I a common laugher, or did use

To stale 8 with ordinary oaths my love

To every new protestor; if you know

That I do fawn on men, and hug them hard,

And after scandal 7 them; or if you know

That I profess myself in banqueting

To all the rout, then hold me dangerous.

[Flourish and shout.

Bru. What means this shouting? I do fear the people

Choose Caesar for their king.

Cass. Ay, do you fear it?

Then must I think you would not have it so.

Bru. I would not, Cassius; yet I love him well.— 82

But wherefore do you hold me here so long?

What is it that you would impart to me?

If it be aught toward the general good,

Set honour in one eye, and death in the other,

And I will look on both indifferently;

For let the gods so speed me as I love

The name of honour more than I fear death.

Cass. I know that virtue to be in you, Brutus,

As well as I do know your outward favour. 9

Well, honour is the subject of my story.— 92

I cannot tell what you and other men

Think of this life; but, for my single self,

I had as lief not be as live to be

In awe of such a thing as I myself.

---

1 Sennet, a kind of flourish on the trumpet.

2 Merely. altogether, entirely.

3 Jealous on, suspicious or distrustful of.

4 Stale, make stale, or common.

5 Scandal, defame, slander.

6 Speed, favour, prosper.

7 Favour, face, personal appearance.

91
I was born free as Caesar; so were you; 97
We both have fed as well; and we can both Endure the winter's cold as well as he:
For once, upon a raw and gusty day,
The troubled Tiber chafing with her shores,
Cæsar said to me, "Dar'st thou, Cassius, now
Leap in with me into this angry flood,
And swim to yonder point?" Upon the word,
Accoutred as I was, I plunged in,
And bade him follow; so, indeed, he did.
The torrent roar'd; and we did buffet it
With lusty sinews, throwing it aside, 108
And stemming it with hearts of controversy:
But ere we could arrive the point propos'd,
Cæsar cried, "Help me, Cassius, or I sink!"
I, as Æneas, our great ancestor,

Did from the flames of Troy upon his shoulder
The old Anchises bear, so from the waves of Tiber
Did I the tired Cæsar;—and this man
Is now become a god; and Cassius is
A wretched creature, and must bend his body
If Cæsar carelessly but nod on him.
He had a fever when he was in Spain,
And when the fit was on him I did mark 120
How he did shake: 'tis true, this god did shake;
His coward lips did from their colour fly;
And that same eye whose bend\(^1\) doth awe the world
Did lose his\(^2\) lustre: I did hear him groan;
Ay, and that tongue of his, that bade the Romans

\(^1\) Bend, look.  \(^2\) His, its.

Mark him and write his speeches in their books,
Alas! it cried, "Give me some drink, Titinius,"
As a sick girl. Ye gods, it doth amaze me,
A man of such a feeble temper should
So get the start of the majestic world, 130
And bear the palm alone. [Shout. Flourish.
Bru. Another general shout!
I do believe that these applause are
For some new honours that are heap'd on Cæsar.

Cass. Why, man, he doth bestride the narrow world
Like a Colossus; and we petty men
Walk under his huge legs and peep about
To find ourselves dishonourable graves.
Men at some time are masters of their fates;
The fault, dear Brutus, is not in our stars,
But in ourselves, that we are underlings. 141
Brutus and Caesar: what should be in that
Cesar? 142
Why should that name be sounded more than
yours?
Write them together, yours is as fair a name;
Sound them, it doth become the mouth as well;
Weigh them, it is as heavy; conjure with 'em,
Brutus will start a spirit as soon as Caesar.

[Shout.
Now, in the names of all the gods at once,
Upon what meat doth this our Caesar feed,
That he is grown so great? Age, thou art sham'd! 150
Rome, thou hast lost the breed of noble bloods!
When went there by an age, since the great flood,1
But it was fam'd with more than with one man?
When could they say till now that talk'd of Rome
That her wide walls encompass'd but one man?
Now is it Rome indeed, and room enough,
When there is in it but one only man.
O, you and I have heard our fathers say,
There was a Brutus2 once that would have brook'd 159
The eternal devil to keep his state in Rome
As easily as a king!
Brut. That you do love me, I am nothing jealous;
What you would work me to, I have some aim;3
How I have thought of this, and of these times,
I shall recount hereafter; [Cassius is going to speak; checking him] for this present,
I would not, so with love I might entreat you,
Be any further mov'd. What you have said,
I will consider; what you have to say,
I will with patience hear; and find a time 169
Both meet to hear and answer such high things.

[Shouts heard nearer.
Till then, my noble friend, chew upon this:
Brutus had rather be a villager
Than to repute himself a son of Rome
Under these hard conditions as thus time
Is like to lay upon us.

1 Flood, the deluge of Deucalion.
2 Brutus, Lucius Junius Brutus, who expelled the Tarquins. 3 Aim, conjecture. 4 As=such as.

---

Cass. I am glad 175
That my weak words have struck but thus much show
Of fire from Brutus. [Music.
Bru.] The games are done, and Caesar is returning.
Cass. As they pass by, pluck Casca by the sleeve;
And he will, after his sour fashion, tell you
What hath proceeded worthy note to-day.
Bru. I will do so.—But, look you, Cassius,
The angry spot doth glow on Caesar's brow,
And all the rest look like a chidden train;
[Calpurnia's cheek is pale, and Cicero
Looks with such ferret and such fiery eyes
As we have seen him in the Capitol,
Being cross'd in conference5 by some senators.]
Cass. Casca will tell us what the matter is.
[Music. Re-enter Caesar, Antony, and the rest as before in procession.
Cass. Antonius!
Ant. Caesar?
Cass. Let me have men about me that are fat,
Sleek-headed men, and such as sleep o' nights:
Yond Cassius has a lean and hungry look;
He thinks too much: such men are dangerous.
Ant. Fear him not, Caesar; he's not dangerous.
He is a noble Roman and well given.6
Cass. Would he were fatter!—but I fear him not:
Yet if my name were liable to fear,
I do not know the man I should avoid 200
So soon as that spare Cassius. He reads much;
He is a great observer, and he looks
Quite through the deeds of men: he loves no plays,
As thou dost, Antony; he hears no music:
Seldom he smiles; and smiles in such a sort,
As if he mock'd himself, and scorn'd his spirit
That could be mov'd to smile at any thing.
Such men as he be never at heart's ease
Whiles they behold a greater than themselves;
And therefore are they very dangerous. 210
I rather tell thee what is to be fear'd
Than what I fear,—for always I am Caesar.

5 Conference, debate. 6 Given, disposed.
Come on my right hand, for this ear is deaf,
And tell me truly what thou thinkst of him.

[Antony goes to Caesar's side; Brutus crosses to Cass as he is going, and pulls his cloak. Music. Exeunt all in procession, except Cassa, Brutus, and Cassius.

Cass. You pull'd me by the cloak; would you speak with me?

Bru. Ay, Cassa; tell us what hath chanc'd to-day,
That Caesar looks so sad.

Cass. Why, you were with him, were you not?

Bru. I should not then ask Cassa what had chanc'd.

Cass. Why, there was a crown offer'd him; and, being offer'd him, he put it by with the back of his hand, thus; and then the people fell a-shouting.

Bru. What was the second noise for?

Cass. Why, for that too.

Cass. They shouted thrice; what was the last cry for?

Cass. Why, for that too.

Bru. Was the crown offer'd him thrice?

Cass. Ay, marry, was 't, and he put it by thrice, every time gentler than other; and at every putting-by mine honest neighbours shouted.

Cass. Who offer'd him the crown?

Bru. Tell us the manner of it, gentle Cassa.

Cassa. I can as well be hung as tell the manner of it; it was mere foolery, I did not mark it. I saw Mark Antony offer him a crown;—yet 't was not a crown neither, 't was one of these coronets;—and, as I told you, he put it by once; but, for all that, to my thinking, he would fain have had it. Then he offer'd it to him again; then he put it by again; but, to my thinking, he was very loath to lay his fingers off it. And then he offer'd it the third time; he put it the third time; and still as he refus'd it, the rabblement shouted, and clapp'd their chopp'd hands, and threw up their sweaty night-caps, and utter'd such a deal of stinking breath because Caesar refus'd the crown, that it had almost chok'd Caesar; for he swooned, and fell down at it.

And, for mine own part, I durst not laugh, for fear of opening my lips and receiving the bad air.

Cass. But, soft, I pray you: what, did Caesar swoon?

Cass. He fell down in the market-place, and foam'd at mouth, and was speechless.

Bru. 'Tis very like;—he hath the falling-sickness.

Cass. No, Caesar hath it not; but you and I, And honest Cassa, we have the falling-sickness.

Cass. I know not what you mean by that; but I am sure Caesar fell down. If the tag-rag people did not clap him and hiss him, according as he pleas'd and displeas'd them, as they use to do the players in the theatre, I am no true man.

Bru. What said he when he came unto himself?

Cass. Marry, before he fell down, when he perceiv'd the common herd was glad he refus'd the crown, he pluck'd me ope his doublet and offer'd them his throat to cut:—an I had been a man of any occupation, if I would not have taken him at a word, I would I might go to hell among the rogues:—and so he fell. When he came to himself again, he said, If I had done or said any thing amiss, he desir'd their worship to think it was his infirmity. Three or four wenches, where I stood, cried, "Alas, good soul!"—and forgave him with all their hearts:—but there's no heed to be taken of them; if Caesar had stabb'd their mothers, they would have done no less.

Bru. And after that, he came, thus sad, away?

Cassa. Ay.

Cass. Did Cicero say any thing?

Cass. Ay, he spoke Greek.

Cass. To what effect?

Cass. Nay, an I tell you that, I'll ne'er look you i' the face again:—but those that understood him smiled at one another and shook their heads; but, for mine own part, it was Greek to me. [I could tell you more news too: Marullus and Flavius, for pulling scarfs off Cesar's images, are put to silence.] Farewell.

---

1 Falling-sickness, epilepsy.
2 True, honest.
3 Of any occupation, a mechanic, like the plebeians about him.
you well. There was more foolery yet, if I could remember it.

Cass. Will you sup with me to-night, Cæcilius?
Cæc. No, I am promis'd forth.
Cass. Will you dine with me to-morrow?
Cæc. Ay, if I be alive, and your mind hold,
and your dinner worth the eating.
Cass. Good; I will expect you.
Cæc. Do so. Farewell both.
[Exit Cæc.
Brut. What a blunt fellow is this grown to be!
He was quick mettle\(^2\) when he went to school.

Cass. So is he now, in execution\(^3\)
Of any bold or noble enterprise,

However he puts on this tardy form.
This rudeness is a sauce to his good wit,
Which gives men stomach to digest his words
With better appetite.

Brut. And so it is. For this time I will leave you:
To-morrow if you please to speak with me,
I will come home to you; or, if you will,
Come home to me, and I will wait for you.
Cass. I will so:—till then, think of the world.—
[Exit Brut.
Well, Brutus, thou art noble; yet, I see,
Thy honourable metal may be wrought
From that\(^4\) it is dispos'd: therefore it is meet
That noble minds keep ever with their likes;
For who so firm that cannot be seduc'd?
Cæsar doth bear me hard,\(^5\) but he loves

Brutus;
If I were Brutus now, and he were Cæsius,
He should not humour me. I will this night,
In several hands,\(^6\) in at his windows throw,
As if they came from several citizens, \(^{321}\)
Writings, all tending to the great opinion
That Rome holds of his name; wherein ob-scurely
Cæsar's ambition shall be glanced at;
And after this let Cæsar set him sure;
For we will shake him, or worse days endure.
[Exit.

---

\(^{1}\) I am promised forth, i.e. I have promised to go out
(to supper).
\(^{2}\) Quick mettle, of a lively spirit.
\(^{3}\) Execution, metrically five syllables.
\(^{4}\) From that, from that to which.
\(^{5}\) Doth bear me hard, has a grudge against me.
\(^{6}\) Hand, handwritings.

---

Scene III. A street.

Thunder and lightning. Enter, from opposite sides, Cæcilius, with his sword drawn, and
* Cicero.*

[Cic. Good even, Cæcilius: brought\(^7\) you Cæsar home?
Why are you breathless? and why stare you so?
Cæc. Are not you mov'd, when all the sway\(^8\) of earth
Shakes like a thing inform'd? O Cicero,
I have seen tempests, when the scolding winds
Have riv'd the knotty oaks; and I have seen
The ambitious ocean swell and rage and foam,
To be exalted with the threatening clouds:
But never till to-night, never till now,
Did I go through a tempest dropping fire.
Either there is a civil strife in heaven,
Or else the world, too saucy with the gods,
Incenses them to send destruction.

Cic. Why, saw you any thing more wonderful?
Cæc. A common slave— you know him well by sight—
Held up his left hand, which did flame and burn
Like twenty torches join'd; and yet his hand,
Not sensible of fire, remain'd uncourch'd.
Besides,— I have not since put up my sword,—
Against\(^9\) the Capitol I met a lion,
Who glar'd upon me, and went surly by Without annoying me; and there were drawn
Upon a heap\(^10\) a hundred ghastly women
Transformed with their fear; who swore they

Men, all in fire, walk up and down the streets
And yesterday the bird of night did sit
Even at noonday upon the market-place,
Hooting and shrieking. When these prodigies
Do so conjointly meet, let not men say,
"These\(^11\) are their reasons,—they are natural;"
For, I believe, they are portentous things
Unto the climate\(^12\) that they point upon.
Cic. Indeed, it is a strange-disposed time;
But men may construe things after their

---

\(^{7}\) Brought, escorted.
\(^{8}\) Sway, balance, equilibrium.
\(^{9}\) Against, opposite.
\(^{10}\) Drawn upon a heap, crowded close together.
\(^{11}\) These, such and such.
\(^{12}\) Climate, country.
\(^{13}\) After their fashion, in their own way.
Cass. Those that have known the earth so full of faults.
For my part, I have walk'd about the streets,
Submitting me unto the perilous night;
And thus unbraced, Cassa, as you see,
Have bar'd my bosom to the thunder-stone:
And when the cross blue lightning seem'd to open
The breast of heaven, I did present myself
Even in the aim and very flash of it.
Cass. But wherfore did you so much tempt
The heavens?
It is the part of men to fear and tremble
When the most mighty gods, by tokens, send Such dreadful heralds to astonish us.
Cass. You are dull, Cassa, and those sparks of life
That should be in a Roman you do want,
Or else you use not. You look pale, and gaze,
And put on fear, and case yourself in wonder,
To see the strange impatience of the heavens;
But if you would consider the true cause,
Why all these fires, why all these gliding ghosts,
Why birds, and beasts from quality and kind;
Why old men fool, and children calculate;
Why all these things change from their ordinance,
Their natures and pre-formed faculties,
To monstrous quality,—why, you shall find
That heaven hath infus'd them with these spirits,
Tomake them instruments of fear and warning
Unto some monstrous state.
Now could I, Cassa, name to thee a man
Most like this dreadful night,
That thunders, lightens, opens graves, and roars

1 Clean from, quite away from, or contrary to.
2 Unbraced, ungirt; explained by the next line.
3 Thunder-stone, thunderbolt.
4 Cross, zigzag.
5 From quality and kind, i.e. deviate from or change their natures.
6 Fool, become fools.
7 Their ordinance, what they were ordained to be.
As doth the lion in the Capitol,—
A man no mightier than thyself or me
In personal action; yet prodigious grown,
And fearful, as these strange eruptions are.

Cæsar. 'Tis Cæsar that you mean; is it not, Cæsius?

Cass. Let it be who it is: for Romans now
Have thwes and limbs like to their ancestors,
But, woe the while! our fathers' minds are dead,
And we are govern'd with our mothers' spirits;
Our yoke and sufferance show us womanish.

Cæsar. Indeed, they say, the senators to-morrow
Mean to establish Cæsar as a king;
And he shall wear his crown by sea and land,
In every place, save here in Italy.

Cass. I know where I will wear this dagger,
then;
Cæsius from bondage will deliver Cæsius. 90
Therein, ye gods, you make the weak most strong;
Therein, ye gods, you tyrants do defeat.
Nor stony tower, nor walls of beaten brass,
Nor airless dungeon, nor strong links of iron,
Can be retentive to the strength of spirit;
But life, being weary of these worldly bars,
Never lacks power to dismiss itself.
If I know this, know all the world besides,
That part of tyranny that I do bear
I can shake off at pleasure.  [Thunder.

Cæsa. So can I; 100
So every bondman in his own hand bears
The power to cancel his captivity.

Cass. And why should Cæsar be a tyrant,
then?
Poor man! I know he would not be a wolf,
But that he sees the Romans are but sheep;
He were no lion, were not Romans hinds.
Those that with haste will make a mighty fire
Begin it with weak straws: what trash is Rome,
What rubbish, and what offal, when it serves
For the base matter to illuminate
So vile a thing as Cæsar! But, O, grief,
Where hast thou led me? I perhaps speak this Before a willing bondman; then I know
My answer must be made; but I am arm'd,
And dangers are to me indifferent. 115

Cæsa. You speak to Cæsar; and to such a man
That is no fleering tell-tale. Hold, my hand; 4
Be factious for redress of all these grievances; 6
And I will set this foot of mine as far
As he who goes farthest.

Cass. There's a bargain made.

[Grasping Cæsa's hand.
Now know you, Cæsa, I have mov'd already
Some certain of the noblest-minded Romans
To undergo with me an enterprise
Of honourable-dangerous consequence;
And I do know, by this, they stay for me
In Pompey's porch: [Thunder and lightning] for now, this fearful night,
There is no stir or walking in the streets,
And the complexion of the element 7
In favour's like the work we have in hand,
Most bloody, fiery, and most terrible. 130

Cæsa. Stand close awhile, for here comes one in haste.

Cass. 'Tis Cinna; I do know him by his gait:
He is a friend.—[Enter Cinna.] Cinna, where haste you so?

Cinna. To find out you. Who's that?  Metellus Cimber!

Cass. No, it is Cæsa; one incorporate
To our attempt. Am I not stay'd for, Cinna?

Cinna. I am glad on't.  [Thunder.] What a fearful night is this!
There's two or three of us have seen strange sights.

Cass. Am I not stay'd for? Tell me.

Cinna. Yes, you are.—

O Cassius, if you could 140
But win the noble Brutus to our party—

Cass. Be you content:—good Cinna, take this paper,
And look you lay it in the pretor's chair,
Where Brutus may but find it; and throw this
In at his window; set this up with wax
Upon old Brutus' statue: all this done,
Repair to Pompey's porch, where you shall find us.

Is Decius Brutus and Trebonius there?

---

1 Prodigious, portentious.
2 Woe the while! alas for the times!
ACT II.

I have not known when his affections sway'd
More than his reason. But 'tis a common proof
That lowliness is young ambition's ladder,
Whereeto the climber-upward turns his face;
But when he once attains the upmost round
He then unto the ladder turns his back,
Looks in the clouds, scorning the base degrees
By which he did ascend: so Caesar may.
Then, lest he may, prevent. And, since the quarrel
Will bear no colour for the thing he is,
Fashion it thus: that what he is, augmented,
Would run to these and these extremities;
And therefore think him as a serpent's egg,
Which hatch'd would, as his kind, grow mischievous,
And kill him in the shell.

Enter Lucius.

Luc. The taper burneth in your closet, sir. Searching the window for a flint, I found This paper thus seal'd up; and I am sure It did not lie there when I went to bed. [Gives him a letter.]

Bru. Get you to bed again; it is not day.
Is not to-morrow, boy, the ides of March?
Luc. I know not, sir.
Bru. Look in the calendar, and bring me word.

Luc. I will, sir. [Lightning. Exit. Bru. The exhalations, whizzing in the air,

---

1 His, hasten. 2 Conceited, conceived, judged.
3 When! an exclamation of impatience. 4 Spurn at, strike at, attack.
5 The general, the people, the community.
6 That, be that so, suppose that done.
7 Remorse, mercy, or pity.
8 Proof, experience. 9 Base degrees, lower steps.
10 As his kind, like the rest of his species.
11 Exhalations, meteors.
Give so much light that I may read by them.

[Opens the letter, holds it up, and reads.]

"Brutus, thou sleep'st; awake, and see thyself.
Shall Rome, etc. Speak, strike, redress!"

"Brutus, thou sleep'st; awake!"

Such instigations have been often dropp'd
Where I have took them up.

"Shall Rome, etc." Thus must I piece it out:
Shall Rome stand under one man's awe!
What! Rome?

My ancestors did from the streets of Rome
The Tarquin drive, when he was call'd a king.

"Speak, strike, redress!"—Am I entreated
To speak and strike? O Rome, I make thee promise,

If the redress will follow, thou receivest
Thy full petition at the hand of Brutus!

Enter Lucius.

Luc. Sir, March is wasted fifteen days.

[Knocking within.

Bru. 'Tis good. Go to the gate; somebody knocks.—

[Exit Lucius.]

Since Cassius first did whet me against Caesar
I have not slept.

Between the acting of a dreadful thing
And the first motion, all the interim is Like a phantasma and a hideous dream:
The Genius and the mortal instruments
Are then in council; and the state of man,
Like to a little kingdom, suffers then
The nature of an insurrection.

Enter Lucius.

Luc. Sir, 'tis your brother Cassius at the doors

Who doth desire to see you.

Bru. Is he alone?

Luc. No, sir; there are more with him.

Bru. Do you know them?

Luc. No, sir; their hats are pluck'd about their ears,

And half their faces buried in their cloaks,

That by no means I may discover them

By any mark of favour.

Bru.

Let 'em enter.

[Exit Lucius.

Thy are the faction. O conspiracy,

Sham'st thou to shew thy dangerous brow by night,

When evils are most free? O, then, by day

Where wilt thou find a cavern dark enough

To mask thy monstrous visage? Seek none, conspiracy;

Hide it in smiles and affability,

For, if thou path, thy native semblance on,

Not Erebus itself were dim enough

To hide thee from prevention.

Enter Cassius, followed by Casca, Decius,

Cinna, Metellus Cimber, and Trebonius, with their faces muffled in their togas.

Cass. I think we are too bold upon your rest:

Good morrow, Brutus; do we trouble you?

Bru. I have been up this hour, awake all night.

Know I these men that come along with you?

Cass. Yes, every man of them; and no man

But honours you; and every one doth wish

You had but that opinion of yourself

Which every noble Roman bears of you.—

[They all uncover their faces.

This is Trebonius.

Bru. He is welcome hither.

Cass. This, Decius Brutus.

Bru. He is welcome too.

Cass. This, Casca; this, Cinna; and this,

Metellus Cimber.

Bru. They are all welcome.—

What watchful cares do interpose themselves

Betwixt your eyes and night?

Cass. Shall I entreat a word?

[He retires with Cassius.

Dec. Here lies the east: doth not the day break here?

Casca. No.

Cinna. O, pardon, sir, it doth; and you grey

lines

That fret the clouds are messengers of day.

Casca. You shall confess that you are both deceiv'd.

Here, as I point my sword, the sun arises;

Which is a great way growing on the south,
Weighing the youthful season of the year.
Some two months hence up higher toward the north
He first presents his fire; and the high east
Stands as the Capitol, directly here.

[Brutus and Cassius come forward.

Brutus. Give me your hands all over, one by one.

Cassius. And let us swear our resolution.

Brutus. No, not an oath! If not the face of men,
The sufferance of our souls, the time's abuse,—
If these be motives weak, break off betimes,
And every man hence to his idle bed;
So let high-sighted tyranny range on,
Till each man drop by lottery. But if these,
As I am sure they do, bear fire enough
To kindle cowards, and to steel with valour
The melting spirits of women; then, countrymen,
What need we any spur but our own cause
To prick us to redress what other bond
Than secret Romans that have spoke the word,
And will not palter? and what other oath
Than honesty to honesty engage'd?
That this shall be, or we will fall for it?

Swear priests and cowards and men cautelous,
Old feeble carrions and such suffering souls
That welcome wrongs; unto bad causes swear
Such creatures as men doubt: but do not stain
The even virtue of our enterprise,
Nor the insuppressible metal of our spirits,
To think that or our cause or our performance
Did need an oath; when every drop of blood,
That every Roman bears, and nobly bears,
Is guilty of a several bastardy
If he do break the smallest particle
Of any promise that hath pass'd from him.

Cassius. But what of Cicero? Shall we sound him?

I think he will stand very strong with us.

Cinna. Let us not leave him out.

Met. O, let us have him; for his silver hairs
Will purchase us a good opinion,
And buy men's voices to commend our deeds:

It shall be said, his judgment rul'd our hands;
Our youths and wildness shall no whit appear,
But all be buried in his gravity.

Brutus. O, name him not: let us not break with him;
For he will never follow any thing
That other men begin.

Cassius. Then leave him out.

Cassius. Indeed, he is not fit.

Decius. Shall no man else be touch'd but only Cæsar?

Cassius. Decius, well urg'd:—I think it is not meet
Mark Antony, so well belov'd of Cæsar,
Should outlive Cæsar. We shall find of him
A shrewd contriver, and you know his means.

If he improve them, may well stretch so far
As to annoy us all; which to prevent,
Let Antony and Cæsar fall together.

Brutus. Our course will seem too bloody, Caius
Cassius,

To cut the head off and then hack the limbs,
Like wrath in death, and envy afterwards;
For Antony is but a limb of Cæsar;
Let us be sacrificers, but not butchers, Caius.

We all stand up against the spirit of Cæsar,
And in the spirit of men there is no blood;
O, that we then could come by Cæsar's spirit,
And not dismember Cæsar! But alas,
Cæsar must bleed for it! And, gentle friends,
Let's kill him boldly, but not wrathfully;
Let's carve him as a dish fit for the gods,
Not hew him as a carcass fit for hounds:
And let our hearts, as subtle masters do,
Stir up their servants to an act of rage,
And after seem to chide 'em. This shall make our purpose necessary and not envious;
Which so appearing to the common eyes,
We shall be call'd purgers, not murderers.
And for Mark Antony, think not of him;
For he can do no more than Cæsar's arm
When Cæsar's head is off.

Cassius. Yet I fear him;

For in the ingrafted love he bears to Cæsar—

Brutos. Alas, good Cassius, do not think of him:

1 Weighing, considering.
2 High-sighted, supercilious, haughty.
3 Palter, shuffle, equivocate.
4 Cautelous, crafty, wary.
5 Even, pure, blameless.
6 Insuppressible, irresistible.
7 Several, separate.
8 Break with him, broach it to him.
9 Shrewd, evil, mischievous.
10 Envy, malice.
11 Come by, get at.
12 Make, make to appear.
13 Envious, malicious.
14 Purgers, cleaners or healers.
If he love Caesar, all that he can do
Is to himself,—take thought and die for Caesar;
And that were much he should; for he is given
To sports, to wildness, and much company.

Treb. There is no fear in him; let him not die;
For he will live and laugh at this hereafter.

[Moment.

Bru. Peace! count the clock.

Cass. The clock has stricken three.

Treb. 'Tis time to part.

Cass. But it is doubtful yet
Whether Caesar will come forth to-day or no;
For he is superstitious grown of late;
Quite from the main opinion he held once
Of fantasy, of dreams, and ceremonies:
It may be, these apparent prodigies,
The unaccustomed terror of this night,
The persuasion of his augurers
May hold him from the Capitol to-day.

Dec. Never fear that. If he be so resolv'd,
I can o'erway him; for he loves to hear
That unicorns may be betray'd with trees,
And bears with glasses, elephants with holes,
Lions with tails, and men with flatterers:
But, when I tell him he hates flatterers,
He says he does,—being then most flattered.
Let me work;
For I can give his humour the true bent,
And I will bring him to the Capitol.

Cass. Nay, we will all of us be there to fetch him.

Bru. By the eighth hour; is that the utmost?

Cinna. Be that the utmost, and fail not then.

Met. Caius Ligarius doth bear Caesar hard,7
Who rated him for speaking well of Pompey;
I wonder none of you have thought of him.

Bru. Now, good Metellus, go along by him.8

He loves me well, and I have given him reasons;
Send him but hither, and I'll fashion him.

1 Take thought, give way to anxiety or despondency.
2 Fear, ground for fear, cause of fear.
3 From, away from, contrary to.
4 Main, strong, fixed.
5 Ceremonies, omen drawn from sacrifices, or ceremonial rites.
6 Apparent, manifest
7 Bear Caesar hard, bear him a grudge.
8 By him, by his house.

Cass. The morning comes upon's; we'll leave you, Brutus.—
And, friends, disperse yourselves; but all remember
What you have said, and show yourselves true
Romans.

Bru. Good gentlemen, look fresh and merrily.
Let not our looks put on our purposes;
But bear it as our Roman actors do,
With untir'd spirits and formal constancy:10
And so, good morrow to you every one.—

[Exeunt all but Brutus, muffling up their faces in their togas.

[Boy! Lucius!—Fast asleep? It is no matter;
Enjoy the honey-heavy dew of slumber: 280
Thou hast no figures,11 nor no fantasies,
Which busy care draws in the brains of men;
Therefore thou sleep'st so sound.]

Enter Portia.

Portia. Brutus, my lord!

Bru. Portia, what mean you? Wherefore rise you now?
It is not for your health thus to commit
Your weak condition to the raw cold morning.

Portia. Nor for yours neither. You've un-gently, Brutus,
Stole from my bed; and yesternight, at supper,
You suddenly arose and walk'd about; 290
Musing and sighing, with your arms across;
And, when I ask'd you what the matter was,
You star'd upon me with ungentle looks:
I urg'd you further; then you scratch'd your head,
And too impatiently stamp'd with your foot:
Yet I insisted, yet you answer'd not,
But with an angry wafture12 of your hand
Gave sign for me to leave you. [So I did; Fearing to strengthen that impatience
Which seemed too much enkindled; and withal
Hoping it was but an effect of humour, 299
Which sometime hath his hour with every man.
It will not let you eat, nor talk, nor sleep,
And, could it work so much upon your shape,
As it hath much prevail'd on your condition,13]
I should not know you, Brutus.]

Dear my lord,
Make me acquainted with your cause of grief.

Bru. I am not well in health, and that is all.

Of the dank \(^8\) morning? What! is Brutus sick?]

And will he steal out of his wholesome bed,
To dare the vile contagion of the night,
And tempt the rheumy \(^4\) and unpurg'd air
To add unto his sickness? No, my Brutus;
You have some sick offence \(^6\) within your mind,
Which, by the right and virtue of my place,
I ought to know of: and, upon my knees, \(^{270}\)

[Kneels.

I charm \(^6\) you, by my once commended beauty,
By all your vows of love and that great vow,
Which did incorporate and make us one,
That you unfold to me, yourself, your half,
Why you are heavy, and what men to-night
Have had resort to you; for here have been
Some six or seven, who did hide their faces
Even from darkness.

Bru. [Raising her] Kneel not, gentle Portia.

Por. I should not need, if you were gentle

Brutus.

Within the bond of marriage, tell me, Brutus,
Is it excepted I should know no secrets \(^{281}\)
That appertain to you? Am I yourself
But, as it were, in sort or limitation,
To keep with you at meals, comfort your bed,
And talk to you sometimes? Dwell I but in the suburbs

Of your good pleasure? If it be no more,

Portia is Brutus’ harlot, not his wife.

Bru. You are my true and honourable wife;

As dear to me as are the ruddy drops
That visit my sad heart. [Embraces her.

Por. If this were true, then should I know this secret.

I grant I am a woman; but withal

A woman that Lord Brutus took to wife:
I grant I am a woman; but withal

A woman well reputed, Cato’s daughter.
Think you I am no stronger than my sex,

Being so father’d and so husband’d?
Tell me your counsels; I will not disclose ’em:
I have made strong proof of my constancy,

Giving myself a voluntary wound \(^{300}\)

Here in the thigh; can I bear that with patience,

And not my husband’s secrets?

---

1. Physical, medicinal, wholesome.
2. Unbraced, ungirt.
3. Dank, damp, moist.
4. Rheumy, causing rheumatism; according to some = damp.
5. Some sick offence, something that offends and makes you sick.
6. Charm, conjure.
Julius Caesar
Act II, Scene I, Lines 25-26
Cæsar: these things are beyond all use.
And I do fear them.
ACT II. Scene 1.

JULIUS CAESAR.

Bru. O ye gods, Render me worthy of this noble wife!— [Knocking within. Hark, hark! one knocks. Portia, go in a while; And by and by thy bosom shall partake The secrets of my heart. All my engagements I will construe to thee, All the character of my sad brows: Leave me with haste.— [Exit Portia. Enter Lucius and Ligarius.

Lucius, who's that knocks?

Luc. Here is a sick man that would speak with you.

Bru. Caius Ligarius, that Metellus spake of.—

Boy, stand aside.—Caius Ligarius! how?

Lig. Vouchsafe good morrow from a feeble tongue.

Bru. O, what a time have you chose out, brave Caius, To wear a kerchief! Would you were not sick!

Lig. I am not sick, if Brutus have in hand Any exploit worthy the name of honour.

Bru. Such an exploit have I in hand, Ligarius, [Had you a healthful ear to hear of it. [Lig. By all the gods that Romans bow before, I here discard my sickness. Soul of Rome! Brave son, deriv'd from honourable loins! Thou, like an exorcist, has conjur'd up My mortified spirit. Now bid me run, And I will strive with things impossible, Yea, get the better of them. What's to do?

Bru. A piece of work that will make sick men whole.

Lig. But are not some whole that we must make sick?

Bru. That must we also. What it is, my Caius, I shall unfold to thee, as we are going, To whom it must be done.

Lig. Set on your foot; And with a heart new-fir'd I follow you, To do I know not what; but it sufficeth That Brutus leads me on.

Bru. Follow me, then. [Exeunt.

ACT II. Scene 2.

Scene II. A room in Caesar's palace.

Thunder and lightning. Enter Caesar in his night-gown.

Caes. Nor heaven nor earth have been at peace to-night; Thrice hath Calpurnia in her sleep cried out, "Help, ho! they murder Caesar!"—Who's within?

Enter a Servant.

Serv. My lord!

Caes. Go bid the priests do present sacrifice, And bring me their opinions of success.

Serv. I will, my lord. [Exit.

Enter Calpurnia.

Cal. What mean you, Caesar? Think you to walk forth? You shall not stir out of your house to-day.

Caes. Caesar shall forth. The things that threaten'd me Ne'er look'd but on my back; when they shall see The face of Caesar, they are vanished.

Cal. Caesar, I never stood on ceremonies, Yet now they fright me. There is one within, Besides the things that we have heard and seen, Recounts most horrid sights seen by the watch. A lioness hath whelped in the streets; And graves have yawn'd and yielded up their dead; Fierce fiery warriors fought upon the clouds, In ranks and squadrons and right form of war, Which drizzled blood upon the Capitol; The noise of battle hurl'd in the air, Horses did neigh and dying men did groan; And ghosts did shriek and squeal about the streets. O Caesar! these things are beyond all use, And I do fear them.

Caes. What can be avoided, Whose end is purposed by the mighty gods?

[Yet Caesar shall go forth; for these predictions Are to the world in general as to Caesar.

1 Characteristic, handwriting.
2 Exorcist, one who raises spirits. See note 99, II. Henry VI.
3 Mortified, deadened.
4 To whom, to him to whom.
5 Present, immediate.
6 Stood on ceremonies, laid stress on omens.
7 Hurtled, clashed.
8 Usu, what is usual.
ACT II. Scene 2.

JULIUS CAESAR.

ACT II. Scene 2.

Cal. When beggars die, there are no comets seen; 30
The heavens themselves blaze forth the death of princes.

Cæs. Cowards die many times before their deaths;
The valiant never taste of death but once.
Of all the wonders that I yet have heard,
It seems to me most strange that men should fear;
Seeing that death, a necessary end,
Will come when it will come.—

Enter a Servant.

What say the augurers?

Serv. They would not have you to stir forth to-day.

Plucking the entrails of an offering forth, 50
They could not find a heart within the beast.

Cæs. The gods do this in shame of cowardice;
Cæsar should be a beast without a heart,

[Exit Servant.

If he should stay at home to-day for fear.

No, Cæsar shall not. Danger knows full well
That Cæsar is more dangerous than he.
We are two lions litter’d in one day,
And I the elder and more terrible;—
And Cæsar shall go forth.

Cal. Alas! my lord,
Your wisdom is consum’d in confidence.
Do not go forth to-day. Call it my fear 50
That keeps you in the house, and not your own.
We’ll send Mark Antony to the senate-house,
And he shall say you are not well to-day;
Let me, upon my knees, prevail in this.

Cæs. Mark Antony shall say I am not well,
And, for thy humour, I will stay at home.

Enter Decius.

Here’s Decius Brutus, he shall tell them so.

Dec. Cæsar, all hail! Good morrow, worthy Cæsar;
I come to fetch you to the senate-house.

Cæs. And you are come in very happy time
To bear my greeting to the senators, 61
And tell them that I will not come to-day.
Cannot is false; and that I dare not, false;
I will not come to-day Tell them so, Decius.

Cal. Say, he is sick
Cæs. Shall Cæsar send a lie?
Have I in conquest stretch’d mine arm so far,
ACT II. Scene 2.

JULIUS CAESAR.

Cæs. How foolish do your fears seem now, Calpurnia! I am ashamed I did yield to them.—[Give me my robe, for I will go.—]

Enter Publius, Brutus, Ligarius, Metellus, Casca, Trebonius, and Cinna.

And look where Publius is come to fetch me.

[Exit Calpurnia.

Pub. Good morrow, Cæsar.

Cæs. Welcome, Publius.—What, Brutus, are you stirr'd so early too?—[Good morrow, Cæsa.—Cæsarius Ligarius, Cæsar was ne'er so much your enemy As that same ague which hath made you lean.—What is 't o'clock? Bru. Cæsar, 't is strucken eight.

Cæs. I thank you for your pains and courtesy.

Enter Antony.

See! Antony, that revels long o' nights, Is notwithstanding up.—Good morrow, Antony.

Ant. So to most noble Cæsar.

Cæs. Bid them prepare within.—I am to blame to be thus waited for.—Now, Cinna:—Now, Metellus:—what, Trebonius!

I have an hour's talk in store for you. Remember that you call on me to-day; Be near me, that I may remember you.

Tre. Cæsar, I will:—[aside] and so near will I be

That your best friends shall wish I had been further.

Cæs. Good friends, go in, and taste some wine with me; And we, like friends, will straightway go together.

[Exit Cæsar and Antony, Casca and Decius, Cinna and Metellus, and Trebonius.

Bru. That every like is not the same,¹ O Cæsar, The heart of Brutus yearns² to think upon! [Exit.

¹ That every like is not the same, that the semblance is not always the reality (the same as it seems).
² Yearns, grieves.
SCENE III. A street near the Capitol.

Enter Artemidorus, reading a paper.

Art. "Cesar, beware of Brutus; take heed of Cassius; come not near Cassa; have an eye to Cinna; trust not Brutus; mark well Metellus Cimber; Decius Brutus loves thee not; thou hast wrong'd Caius Ligarius. There is but one mind in all these men, and it is bent against Cesar. If thou boast not immortal, look about you; security gives way to conspiracy. The mighty gods defend thee! Thy lover, ARTEMIDORUS."

Here will I stand till Cesar pass along, And as a suit will I give him this. My heart laments that virtue cannot live Out of the teeth of emulation. If thou read this, O Cesar, thou mayst live; If not, the fates with traitors do contrive.

[Exit.

SCENE IV. Another part of the same street, before the house of Brutus.

Enter Portia and Lucius.

Por. I prithee, boy, run to the senate-house; Stay not to answer me, but get thee gone: Why dost thou stay?

Luc. To know my errand, madam.

Por. I would have had thee there, and here again,

Ere I can tell thee what thou shouldst do there.—

[Aside] O constancy, be strong upon my side!

Set a huge mountain 'tween my heart and tongue!

I have a man's mind, but a woman's might. How hard it is for women to keep counsel!—

Art thou here yet?

Luc. Madam, what should I do?

Run to the Capitol, and nothing else? And so return to you, and nothing else?

Por. Yes, bring me word, boy, if thy lord look well,
For he went sickly forth; and take good note

1 Security gives way, carelessness, or lack of caution, opens a way.
2 Out of, i.e. out of the reach of.
3 Emulation, envy.
4 Contrive, conspire, plot.
5 Constancy, self-possession.

What Cesar doth, what suitors press to him. Hark, boy! what noise is that?

Luc. I hear none, madam.

Por. Pray thee, listen well; I heard a bustling rumour like a fray, And the wind brings it from the Capitol.

Luc. Sooth, I hear nothing.

Por. Come hither, fellow: which way hast thou been?

Sooth. At mine own house, good lady.

Por. What is 't o'clock?

Sooth. About the ninth hour, lady.

Por. Is Cesar yet gone to the Capitol?

Sooth. Madam, not yet; I go to take my stand,
To see him pass on to the Capitol.

Por. Thou hast some suit to Cesar, hast thou not?

Sooth. That I have, lady; if it will please Cesar
To be so good to Cesar as to hear me,
I shall beseech him to befriend himself.

Por. Why, know'st thou any harm's intended towards him?

Sooth. None that I know will be, much that I fear may chance.

Good morrow to you.—Here the street is narrow;
The throng that follows Cesar at the heels, Of senators, of pretors, common suitors, Will crowd a feeble man almost to death: I'll get me to a place more void, and there Speak to great Cesar as he comes along.

[Exit.

Por. I must go in.—Ay me, how weak a thing

The heart of woman is! O Brutus,
The heavens speed thee in thine enterprise!—Sure, the boy heard me.—Brutus hath a suit, That Cesar will not grant.—O, I grow faint!—Run, Lucius, and commend me to my lord; Say I am merry: come to me again, And bring me word what he doth say to thee.

[Exeunt severally.
ACT III.

Scene I. The Capitol; the Senate sitting.

A crowd of people in the street leading to the Capitol; among them Artemidorus and the Soothsayer. Flourish. Enter Caesar, Brutus, Cassius, Casca, Decius, Metellus, Trebonius, Cinna, Antony, Lepidus, Popilius, Publius, and others.

Cas. The idea of March are come.
Soth. Ay, Caesar; but not gone.

Art. Hail, Caesar! Read this schedule.

Dec. Trebonius doth desire you to o'er-read,
At your best leisure, this his humble suit.

Art. O, Caesar, read mine first; for mine's a suit
That touches Caesar nearer: read it, great Caesar.

Cas. What touches us ourself shall be last serv'd.

Per. Why, know'st thou any harm's intended towards him?—(Act II. 4. 81.)

Art. Delay not, Caesar; read it instantly.

Ces. What! is the fellow mad?

Pub. Sirrah, give place.

[Forcing the Soothsayer off.

Cass. What! urge you your petitions in the street?

Come to the Capitol.

Caesar enters the Capitol, the rest following. All the Senators rise. Caesar sits in state chair.

Pop. [To Cassius] I wish your enterprise to-day may thrive.

Cass. What enterprise, Popilius?

Pop. Fare you well.

[Advances to Caesar.
ACT III. Scene 1.

JULIUS CAESAR.

Bru. What said Popilius Lena?
Cass. He wish'd to-day our enterprise might thrive.
I fear our purpose is discovered.

[Cass crosses behind to Cassius, and Decius to Cass.

Bru. Look, how he makes to Caesar; mark him.
Cass. Cass, be sudden, for we fear prevention.—

Brutus, what shall be done? If this be known, Cassius or Caesar never shall turn back,¹
For I will slay myself.

[Popilius kisses Caesar's hand.

Bru. Cassius, be constant:
Popilius Lena speaks not of our purposes;
For look, he smiles, and Caesar doth not change.²
Cass. Trebonius knows his time; for, look you, Brutus,
He draws Mark Antony out of the way.

[Antony and Trebonius cross behind state chair and exent.

Dec. [Crosses to Brutus] Where is Metellus Cicero? Let him go
And presently prefer his suit to Caesar.

[Metellus advances to Caesar's chair.

Bru. He is address'd;³ press near and second him.

Cinna. Cassa, you are the first that rears your hand.

Cass. Are we all ready?

[Goes to side of Caesar's chair.

Cass. What is now amiss
That Caesar and his senate must redress?
Met. Most high, most mighty, and most puissant Caesar, Metullus Cicero throws before thy seat
An humble heart.—

[Kneeling.

Cass. I must prevent thee, Cicero.
These cupings, and these lowly courtesies
Might fire the blood of ordinary men,
And turn pre-ordinance and first decree
Into the law of children. Be not fond;⁴
To think that Caesar bears such rebel blood
That will be thaw'd from the true quality.⁶
With that which melteth fools,—I mean sweet words,

¹ Turn back, return home.
² Change, change colour or expression.
³ Address'd, prepared, ready.
⁴ Fond, foolish.
⁵ With, by.
⁶ Repealing, recalling (from exile).
⁷ Pray to move, resort to prayers in order to move others.
⁸ Apprehensive, endowed with apprehension, intelligent.
JULIUS CAESAR

ACT III. Scene 1.

Cas. Speak, hands, for me.

[Metellus lays hold on Caesar's robe;—Casca stabs Caesar in the neck. Caesar catches hold of his arm. He then is stabbed by several other Conspirators, and at last by Marcus Brutus.

Cas. Et tu, Brute!—Then, fall, Caesar.

[Flaees dead at the foot of Pompey's statue. The Senators and People retire in confusion.

[ Cinna. Liberty! Freedom! Tyranny is dead!—

Run hence, proclaim, cry it about the streets.

Cas. Some to the common pulpits, and cry out,

"Liberty, freedom, and enfranchisement!"

Bru. People, and senators! be not affrighted; Fly not; stand still:—ambition’s debt is paid.

Cas. Go to the pulpit, Brutus.

Dec. And Cassius too.

Bru. Where’s Publius?

Cinna. Here, quite confounded with this mutiny.

Met. Stand fast together, lest some friend of Caesar’s Should chance—

Bru. Talk not of standing.—Publius, good cheer;—

There is no harm intended to your person, Nor to no Roman else: so tell them, Publius.

Cas. And leave us, Publius; lest that the people Rushing on us should do your awesome mischief. Bru. Do so;—and let no man abide this deed, But we the doers.

Enter Trebonius.

Cas. Where is Antony?

Tre. Fled to his house amaz’d.

Men, wives, and children stare, cry out, and run, As it were doomsday.

Bru. Fates! we will know your pleasures:—

That we shall die, we know; ‘tis but the time, And drawing days out, that men stand upon.

Casca. Why, he that cuts off twenty years of life

Cuts off so many years of fearing death.

1 Et tu, Brute! / And thou, Brutus!
2 Good cheer, be of good cheer, be not alarmed.
3 Abide, answer for.

Bru. Grant that, and then is death a benefit; So are we Caesar’s friends, that have abridg’d His time of fearing death.—[Stoop, Romans, stoop,

And let us bathe our hands in Caesar’s blood Up to the elbows, and besmear our swords;]

Then walk we forth, even to the market-place, And, waving our red weapons o’er our heads, Let’s all cry, “Peace! Freedom! and Liberty!”

Cas. [Stoop, then, and wash.—] How many ages hence Shall this our lofty scene be acted o’er

In states unborn and accents yet unknown!

Bru. How many times shall Caesar bleed in sport,

That now on Pompey’s basis lies along

No worthier than the dust!

Cas. So oft as that shall be,

So often shall the knot of us be call’d

The men that gave their country liberty.

Dec. What! shall we forth?

Cas. Ay, every man away;

Brutus shall lead; and we will grace his heels

With the most boldest and best hearts of Rome.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Thus, Brutus, did my master bid me kneel; [Kneeling.

Thus did Mark Antony bid me fall down;

And, being prostrate, thus he bade me say:—

Brutus is noble, wise, valiant, and honest;

Cesar was mighty, bold, royal, and loving.

Say I love Brutus and I honour him;

Say I fear’d Caesar, honour’d him, and lov’d him.

If Brutus will vouchsafe that Antony

May safely come to him and be resolv’d

How Caesar hath deserv’d to lie in death,

Mark Antony shall not love Caesar dead

So well as Brutus living; but will follow

The fortunes and affairs of noble Brutus

Thorough the hazards of this untrod state

With all true faith. So says my master Antony.

Bru. Thy master is a wise and valiant Roman;

I never thought him worse. [Servant rises.

On Pompey’s basis, i.e. at the base of Pompey’s statue.

Resolv’d, informed, satisfied.

Thorough, the original form of through.
Tell him, so please him come unto this place,
He shall be satisfied; and, by my honour, 141
Depart untouch'd.
Serv. I'll fetch him presently.
[Exit Servant.
Bru. I know that we shall have him well to friend. 1
Cass. I wish we may; but yet have I a mind
That fears him much; and my misgiving still 2
Falls shrewdly to the purpose. 3
Bru. But here comes Antony.—

Enter Antony.

Welcome, Mark Antony.
Ant. O mighty Caesar! Dost thou lie so low?
[Prostrating Caesar's body.
Are all thy conquests, glories, triumphs, spoils,
Shrunk to this little measure? Fare thee well.—
[Prostrating Caesar's body.
[Stands] I know not, gentlemen, what you intend,
Who else must be let blood, 4 who else is rank; 5
If I myself, there is no hour so fit
As Caesar's death's hour, nor no instrument
Of half that worth as those your swords, made rich
With the most noble blood of all this world.
I do beseech ye, if you bear me hard, 6
[Now, whilst your purpled hands do reek and smoke,]
Fulfil your pleasure. Live a thousand years,
I shall not find myself so apt to die; 100
No place will please me so, no mean of death,
As here by 7 Caesar and by you cut off,
The choice and master spirits of this age.
Bru. O Antony! beg not your death of us.
Though now we must appear bloody and cruel,
As, by our hands and this our present act,
You see we do, yet see you but our hands
And this the bleeding business they have done:
Our hearts you see not: they are pitiful; 109
And pity to the general wrong of Rome—
As fire drives out fire, so pity pity—
Hath done this deed on Caesar. For your part,

To you our swords have leaden points, Mark Antony;
Our arms in strength of malice, and our hearts
Of brothers' temper, do receive you in,
With all kind love, good thoughts, and reverence.
Cass. Your voice shall be as strong as any man's,
In the disposing of new dignities.
Bru. Only be patient, till we have appeas'd
The multitude, beside themselves with fear,
And then we will deliver 8 you the cause
Why I, that did love Caesar when I struck him,
Have thus proceeded.
Ant. I doubt not of your wisdom.
Let each man render me his bloody hand:
First, Marcus Brutus, will I shake with you;—
Next, Caius Cassius, do I take your hand;—
Now, Decius Brutus, yours;—now yours, Metellus;—
Your, Cinna;—and, my valiant Cassar, yours;—
Though last, not least in love, yours, good Trebonius.
Gentlemen all,—alas! what shall I say? 190
My credit now stands on such slippery ground,
That one of two bad ways you must conceit 9
me,
Either a coward or a flatterer.—
[Bending over Caesar's body.
That I did love thee, Caesar, O, 'tis true!
If then thy spirit look upon us now,
Shall it not grieve thee dearer 10 than thy death,
To see thy Antony making his peace,
Shaking the bloody fingers of thy foes,—
Most noble! in the presence of thy corse?
Had I as many eyes as thou hast wounds, 200
Weeping as fast as they stream forth thy blood,
It would become me better than to close
In terms of friendship with thine enemies.
Pardon me, Julius!—Here wast thou bay'd, 11
brave heart;
Here didst thou fall; and here thy hunters stand, Sign'd 12 in thy spoil and crimson'd in thy lethe. 13

1 To friend, for a friend.  2 Still, always.
3 Falls shrewdly to the purpose, turns out to be very much to the purpose.
4 Let blood, bled, that is, put to death.
5 Rank, too full-blooded.
6 Bear me hard, i.e. dislike me.
7 By, beside.
8 Deliver, declare to.
9 Conceit, conceive, consider.
10 Dearer, more intensely.
11 Bay'd, brought to bay.
12 Sign'd, marked, stained.
13 Lethe, metaphorically for flowing blood.
ACT III. Scene 1.

JULIUS CAESAR.

ACT III. Scene 1.

[O world! thou wast the forest to this hart;
And this, indeed, O world, the heart of thee.—
How like a deer strucken by many princes
Dost thou here lie!]

Cass. Mark Antony,—

Ant. Pardon me, Caius Cassius:
The enemies of Caesar shall say this;
Then, in a friend, it is cold modesty. 1

Cass. I blame you not for praising Caesar so;
But what compact mean you to have with us?
Will you be prick'd in number of our friends;
Or shall we on, and not depend on you?

Ant. Therefore I took your hands; but was indeed
Sway'd from the point, by looking down on
Cesar. 2

Friends am I with you all and love you all;
Upon this hope, that you shall give me reasons
Why and wherein Caesar was dangerous.

Brut. Or else were this a savage spectacle:
Our reasons are so full of good regard
That were you, Antony, the son of Cesar,
You should be satisfied.

Ant. That's all I seek;
And am moreover suitor that I may
Produce his body to the market-place,
And in the pulpit, as becomes a friend,
Speak in the order of his funeral. 3

Brut. You shall, Mark Antony.

Cass. [Taking him aside] Brutus, a word
with you:—
You know not what you do: do not consent
That Antony speak in his funeral:
Know you how much the people may be mov'd
By that which he will utter? 4

Brut. [Aside to Cassius] By your pardon;—
I will myself into the pulpit first,
And show the reason of our Caesar's death;
What Antony shall speak, I will protest
He speaks by leave and by permission;
And that we are contented Caesar shall
Have all true rites and lawful ceremonies.
It shall advantage more than do us wrong.

Cass. [Aside to Brutus] I know not what may fall; 5 I like it not.

Brut. Mark Antony, here, take you Caesar's body.

You shall not in your funeral speech blame us,
But speak all good you can devise of Caesar,
And say you don't by our permission;
Else shall you not have any hand at all
About his funeral. And you shall speak
In the same pulpit whereto I am going, 6
After my speech is ended.

Ant. Be it so;
I do desire no more.

Brut. Prepare the body then, and follow us.

[Exeunt all but Antony.

Ant. [Kneeling at the feet of Cesar's body]
O, pardon me, thou bleeding piece of earth,
That I am meek and gentle with these butchers!
Thou art the ruins of the noblest man
That ever lived in the tide of times.
Woe to the hands that shed this costly blood!
Over thy wounds now do I prophesy,—
Which, like dumb mouths, do ope their ruby lips
To beg the voice and utterance of my tongue:—
A curse shall light upon the limbs of men;
Domestic fury and fierce civil strife
Shall cumber all the parts of Italy;
Blood and destruction shall be so in use,
And dreadful objects so familiar,
That mothers shall but smile when they behold
Their infants quarter'd with the hands of war,
All pity chok'd with custom of fell deeds;
And Caesar's spirit ranging for revenge, 7
[With Até by his side come hot from hell,]
Shall in these confines with a monarch's voice
Cry "Havoc!" 8 and let slip the dogs of war;
That this foul deed shall smell above the earth
With carrion men groaning for burial.—

Enter a Servant.

You serve Octavius Cesar, do you not?

Serv. I do, Mark Antony.

Ant. Caesar did write for him to come to
Rome. 9

Serv. He did receive his letters and is coming;
And bid me say to you, by word of mouth—

[Seeing the body.

O Caesar!— [He is overcome with grief.

Ant. Thy heart is big; get thee apart and weep.

---

1 Cold modesty, cool (dispassionate) moderation.
2 Prick'd, marked, i.e. enlisted.
3 Produce, bear forth.
4 Fall, fail.
5 Havoc! the old signal that no quarter was to be given.
6 That, so that.
Passion, I see, is catching; for mine eyes,
Seeing those beads of sorrow stand in thine,
Began to water. Is thy master coming?
Serv. He lies to-night within seven leagues of Rome.
Ant. Post back with speed, and tell him what hath chance'd.
Here is a mourning Rome, a dangerous Rome,
No Rome of safety for Octavius yet; 289
Hie hence, and tell him so. Yet, stay awhile;
Thou shalt not back till I have borne this corpse
Into the market-place: there shall I try,
In my oration, how the people take
The cruel issue of these bloody men;
According to the which thou shalt discourse
To young Octavius of the state of things.
Lend me your hand.

[Exeunt with Caesar's body.

SCENE II. The Forum.

Shouts of Citizens heard within. Enter Brutus and Cassius, and a throng of Citizens.

Citizens. We will be satisfied; let us be satisfied.

Bru. Then follow me, and give me audience,
friends.—

Cassius, go you into the other street,
And part the numbers.—

Those that will hear me speak, let 'em stay here;
Those that will follow Cassius, go with him;
And public reasons shall be rendered
Of Caesar's death.

First Cit. I will hear Brutus speak.
Sec. Cit. I will hear Cassius; and compare their reasons,

When severally we hear them rendered. 10

[Exit Cassius with some of the Citizens. Brutus goes into the rostrum.

Third Cit. The noble Brutus is ascended:
silence!

Bru. Be patient till the last.

Romans, countrymen, and lovers! hear me for my cause, and be silent, that you may hear; believe me for mine honour, and have respect to mine honour, that you may believe; censure me in your wisdom, and awake your senses, that you may the better judge. If there be any in this assembly, any dear friend of Caesar's, to him I say that Brutus' love to Cesar was no less than his. If then that friend demand why Brutus rose against Caesar, this is my answer,—Not that I loved Caesar less, but that I loved Rome more. Had you rather Caesar were living, and die all slaves, than that Caesar were dead, to live all free men? As Caesar loved me, I weep for him; as he was fortunate, I rejoice at it; as he was valiant, I honour him; but as he was ambitious,
I slew him. There is tears for his love; joy for his fortune; honour for his valour; and death for his ambition. Who is here so base that would be a bondman? If any, speak; for him have I offended. Who is here so rude that would not be a Roman? If any, speak; for him have I offended. Who is here so vile that will not love his country? If any, speak, for him have I offended. I pause for a reply.

All. None, Brutus, none.

Bru. Then none have I offended. I have done no more to Caesar than you shall do to Brutus. The question of his death is enrolled in the Capitol; his glory not extenuated, wherein he was worthy; nor his offences enforced, for which he suffered death.

Enter four Guards bearing Caesar's body on a bier, Antony and others.

Here comes his body, mourned by Mark Antony, who, though he had no hand in his death, shall receive the benefit of his dying, a place in the commonwealth; as which of you shall not? With this I depart,—that, as I slew my best lover for the good of Rome, I have the same dagger for myself, when it shall please my country to need my death.

[He descends from the rostrum.

All. Live, Brutus, live! live!
First Cit. Bring him with triumph home unto his house.
Sec. Cit. Give him a statue with his ancestors.
Third Cit. Let him be Caesar.
Fourth Cit. Caesar's better parts
Shall now be crown'd in Brutus.

1 Passion, emotion. 2 Rome, a play upon room.
3 Part the numbers, divide the multitude.
4 Severally, separately. 5 Lovers, friends.

6 Censure, judge. 7 Enforced, exaggerated.
First Cit. We'll bring him to his house with shouts and clamours.

Bru. My countrymen,—
Sec. Cit. Peace! silence! Brutus speaks.
First Cit. Peace, ho!

Bru. Good countrymen, let me depart alone,
And, for my sake, stay here with Antony;
Do grace to Caesar's corpse, and grace his speech
Tending to Caesar's glories; which Mark Antony
By our permission is allow'd to make.
I do entreat you, not a man depart,
Save I alone, till Antony have spoke. [Exit.

First Cit. Stay, ho! and let us hear Mark Antony.

Third Cit. Let him go up into the public chair;[2]

We'll hear him.—Noble Antony, go up.

Ant. For Brutus' sake, I am beholding[3] to
you.
[He goes up into the rostrum.

Fourth Cit. What does he say of Brutus?
Third Cit. He says, for Brutus' sake,
He finds himself beholding to us all.

Fourth Cit. 'T were best he speak no harm of Brutus here.
First Cit. This Caesar was a tyrant.
Third Cit. Nay, that's certain;
We are blest that Rome is rid of him.
Sec. Cit. Peace! let us hear what Antony can say.

Ant. You gentle Romans,—
All. Peace, ho! let us hear him.

Ant. Friends, Romans, countrymen, lend me your ears;
I come to bury Caesar, not to praise him.
The evil that men do after them, The good is oft interred with their bones;
So let it be with Caesar. The noble Brutus
Hath told you Caesar was ambitious;
If it were so, it was a grievous fault,
And grievously hath Caesar answer'd it.
Here, under leave of Brutus and the rest,—
For Brutus is an honourable man,
So are they all, all honourable men,—
Come I to speak in Caesar's funeral.
He was my friend, faithful and just to me:
But Brutus says he was ambitious;

And Brutus is an honourable man.
He hath brought many captives home to Rome,
Whose ransom did the general coffers fill;
Did this in Caesar seem ambitious?
When that the poor have cried, Caesar hath wept;
Ambition should be made of sterner stuff.
Yet Brutus says he was ambitious;
And Brutus is an honourable man.
You all did see that on the Lupercal
I thrice presented him a kingly crown,
Which he did thrice refuse: was this ambition?
Yet Brutus says, he was ambitious;
And, sure, he is an honourable man.
I speak not to disprove what Brutus spoke,
But here I am to speak what I do know.
You all did love him once,—not without cause;
What cause withholds you then to mourn for
him?
O judgment, thou art fied to brutish beasts,
And men have lost their reason!—Bear with
me;

My heart is in the coffin there with Caesar,
And I must pause till it come back to me.

First Cit. Methinks there is much reason in his sayings.

Sec. Cit. If thou consider rightly of the matter,
Cesar hath had great wrong.

Third Cit. Has he not, masters?
I fear there will a worse come in his place.

Fourth Cit. Mark'd ye his words? He would not take the crown;
Therefore 't is certain he was not ambitious.

First Cit. If it be found so, some will dear abide it[4]

Sec. Cit. Poor soul! his eyes are red as fire with weeping.

Third Cit. There's not a nobler man in Rome than Antony.

Fourth Cit. Now mark him, he begins again
to speak.

Ant. But yesterday the word of Caesar might Have stood against the world; now lies he
there,
And none so poor to do him reverence.
O masters! if I were dispos'd to stir
Your hearts and minds to mutiny and rage,
I should do Brutus wrong and Cassius wrong,
Who, you all know, are honourable men: 129
I will not do them wrong; I rather choose
To wrong the dead, to wrong myself and you,
Than I will wrong such honourable men.
But here's a parchment, with the seal of Caesar;
I found it in his closet; 'tis his will.
Let but the commons¹ hear this testament—
Which, pardon me, I do not mean to read—

And they would go and kiss dead Caesar's wounds,
And dip their napkins² in his sacred blood,
Yes, beg a hair of him for memory,
And, dying, mention it within their wills,
Bequeathing it as a rich legacy
Unto their issue.

Fourth Cit. We'll hear the will: read it,
Mark Antony.

All. The will, the will! we will hear Caesar's will.
Ant. Have patience, gentle friends, I must not read it;
It is not meet you know how Caesar lov'd you.
You are not wood, you are not stones, but
men;
And, being men, hearing the will of Caesar,
It will inflame you, it will make you mad:
'Tis good you know not that you are his heirs;
For if you should, O, what would come of it?

Fourth Cit. Read the will! we'll hear it,
Antony!
You shall read us the will! Caesar's will!
Ant. Will you be patient? Will you stay awhile?
I have o'ershot myself, to tell you of it.
I fear I wrong the honourable men
Whose daggers have stabb'd Caesar; I do fear it.
Fourth Cit. They were traitors! honourable men!
All. The will! the testament!
Sec. Cit. They were villains, murderers!
The will! Read the will!
Ant. You will compel me, then, to read the will?

¹ Commons, common people, plebeians.
² Napkins, handkerchiefs.
Then make a ring about the corpse of Cæsar,
And let me show you him that made the will.
Shall I descend? And will you give me leave?

All. Come down.

Sec. Cit. Descend.

[He comes down from the rostrum, and goes to the head of the body.

Third Cit. You shall have leave.

Fourth Cit. A ring; stand round.

First Cit. Stand from the hearse, stand from the body.

Sec. Cit. Room for Antony! —most noble
Antony!

Ant. Nay, press not so upon me; stand far off.

All. Stand back! room! bear back!

Ant. If you have tears, prepare to shed them now.

You all do know this mantle: I remember
The first time ever Cæsar put it on;
'Twas on a summer’s evening, in his tent,
That day he overcame the Nervii:—
Look! in this place ran Cassius’ dagger through;
See what a rent the envious Casca made;
Through this the well-beloved Brutus stab’d;
And as he pluck’d his cursed steel away,
Mark how the blood of Cæsar follow’d it,
As rushing out of doors, to be resolv’d
If Brutus so unkindly knock’d, or no;
For Brutus, as you know, was Cæsar’s angel:
Judge, O you gods, how dearly Cæsar lov’d
him!

This was the most unkindest cut of all;
For, when the noble Cæsar saw him stab,
Ingratitude, more strong than traitors’ arms,
Quite vanquish’d him: then burst his mighty
heart;

And, in his mantle muffling up his face,
Even at the base of Pompey’s statua,
Which all the while ran blood, great Cæsar fell.
O, what a fall was there, my countrymen!
Then I, and you, and all of us fell mutiny,
Whilst bloody treason flourish’d over us.
O, now you weep; and I perceive you feel
The dint of pity; these are gracious drops.
Kind souls, what! weep you when you but behold

Our Cæsar’s vesture wounded? Look you here,
Here is himself, marr’d, as you see, with traitors.

First Cit. O piteous spectacle!

Sec. Cit. O noble Cæsar!

Third Cit. O woeful day!

Fourth Cit. O traitors, villains!

First Cit. O most bloody sight!

Sec. Cit. We will be reveng’d!

All. Revenge! About! Seek! Burn! Fire!

Kill! Slay! Let not a traitor live!

Ant. Stay, countrymen.

First Cit. Peace there! Hear the noble
Antony.

Sec. Cit. We’ll hear him, we’ll follow him, we’ll die with him.

Ant. Good friends, sweet friends, let me not stir you up
To such a sudden flood of mutiny.
They that have done this deed are honourable;—
What private griefs they have, alas! I know not,
That made them do it; they are wise and honourable,

And will, no doubt, with reasons answer you.
I come not, friends, to steal away your hearts:
I am no orator, as Brutus is;
But, as you know me all, a plain blunt man,
That love my friend; and that they know full well
That gave me public leave to speak of him.
For I have neither wit, nor words, nor worth,
Action, nor utterance, nor the power of speech,
To stir men’s blood: I only speak right on;
I tell you that which you yourselves do know,
Show you sweet Cæsar’s wounds, poor, poor dumb mouths,
And bid them speak for me: but, were I
Brutus,
And Brutus Antony, there were an Antony
Would ruffle up your spirits, and put a tongue
In every wound of Cæsar that should move
The stones of Rome to rise and mutiny.

All. We’ll mutiny.

First Cit. We’ll burn the house of Brutus.
Third Cit. Away, then! come, seek the conspirators.
Ant. Yet hear me, countrymen; yet hear me

1. Far, probably a contraction of farther.
2. That day, on that day when.
3. Resolv’d, satisfied.
4. Angel, darling.
5. Dint, impression.

115
ACT III. Scene 2.

JULIUS CAESAR.

All. Peace, ho! Hear Antony, most noble Antony.

Ant. Why, friends, you go to do you know not what.

Wherein hath Caesar thus deserv'd your loves?
Alas, you know not!—I must tell you, then:—
You have forgot the will I told you of.

All. Most true;—the will!—let's stay, and hear the will.

Ant. Here is the will, and under Caesar's seal:—
[Reading the scroll] To every Roman citizen he gives,
To every several man, seventy-five drachmas.¹
Sec. Crt. Most noble Caesar!—we'll revenge his death.
Third Crt. O royal Caesar!
Ant. Hear me with patience.

All. Peace, ho!
Ant. Moreover, he hath left you all his walks,
His private arbours, and new-planted orchards,²
On this side Tiber; he hath left them you,
And to your heirs for ever, common pleasures,
To walk abroad, and recreate yourselves.
Here was a Caesar! when comes such another?

First Crt. Never, never!—Come, away, away!
We'll burn his body in the holy place,
And with the brands fire³ the traitors' houses.
Take up the body.

Sec. Crt. Go, fetch fire.
Third Crt. Pluck down benches.
Fourth Crt. Pluck down forms, windows, any thing. [Exeunt Citizens, with the body.

Ant. Now let it work.—Mischief, thou art afoot,
Take thou what course thou wilt!—How now, fellow?

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Sir, Octavius is already come to Rome.
Ant. Where is he?
Serv. He and Lepidus are at Caesar's house.
Ant. And thither will I straight to visit him:
He comes upon a wish. Fortune is merry,
And in this mood will give us any thing.
Serv. I heard him say Brutus and Cassius
Are rid like madmen through the gates of Rome.
Ant. Belike⁴ they had some notice of the people,
How I had mov'd them. Bring me to Octavius.

¹ Drachmas, coins equal to about 9d. each. ² Orchards, gardens. ³ Fire, metrically a dissyllable.
⁴ Belike, probably.
ACT III. Scene 3.

[Scene III. The same. A street.

Enter Cinna the poet.

Cinna. I dream'd to-night that I did feast with Caesar,
And things unlucky charge my fantasy:
I have no will to wander forth of doors,
Yet something leads me forth.

Enter Citizens.

First Cit. What is your name?
Sec. Cit. Whither are you going?
Third Cit. Where do you dwell?
Fourth Cit. Are you a married man, or a bachelor?
Sec. Cit. Answer every man directly.
First Cit. Ay, and briefly.
Fourth Cit. Ay, and wisely.
Third Cit. Ay, and truly, you were best.
Cinna. What is my name? Whither am I going? Where do I dwell? Am I a married man, or a bachelor? Then to answer every man directly and briefly, wisely and truly:
Wisely, I say, I am a bachelor.
Sec. Cit. That's as much as to say, they are fools that marry;—you'll bear me a bang for that, I fear. Proceed; directly.

Cinna. Directly, I am going to Caesar's funeral.

First Cit. As a friend, or an enemy?
Cinna. As a friend.
Sec. Cit. That matter is answered directly.
Fourth Cit. For your dwelling,—briefly.
Cinna. Briefly, I dwell by the Capitol.
Third Cit. Your name, sir, truly.
Cinna. Truly, my name is Cinna.
First Cit. Tear him to pieces; he's a con-spirator.

Cinna. I am Cinna the poet, I am Cinna
the poet.

Fourth Cit. Tear him for his bad verses, tear him for his bad verses.
Cinna. I am not Cinna the conspirator.
Sec. Cit. It is no matter, his name's Cinna; pluck but his name out of his heart, and turn him going.

Third Cit. Tear him, tear him! Come, brands, ho! firebrands! To Brutus', to Cassius'; burn
all. Some to Decius' house, and some to Casca's;
some to Ligarius': away! go! [Exit.]

ACT IV.

[Scene I. Rome. A room in Antony's house.

Antony, Octavius, and Lepidus, seated at a table.

Ant. These many, then, shall die; their names are prick'd.
Oct. Your brother too must die: consent you, Lepidus?
Lep. I do consent—
Lep. Upon condition Publius shall not live,
Who is your sister's son, Mark Antony.
Ant. He shall not live; look, with a spot I damn him.
But, Lepidus, go you to Caesar's house;
Fetch the will hither, and we shall determine
How to cut off some charge in legacies.
Lep. What, shall I find you here?

Oct. Or here, or at the Capitol.

Oct. So you thought him;
And took his voice who should be prick'd to die
In our black sentence and proscription.

Ant. Octavius, I have seen more days than
you:
And though we lay these honours on this man,
To ease ourselves of divers slanderous loads,
He shall but bear them as the ass bears gold,
To groan and sweat under the business,
Either led or driven, as we point the way;
And having brought our treasure where we will.

1 Bear me a bang, get a blow from me.
2 Turn him going, turn him adrift, send him packing.
3 Prick'd, marked.

4 Divided, being divided, when it is divided.
5 Proscription; metrically four syllables.
6 Business; here a trisyllable.

117
Then take we down his load, and turn him off,
Like to the empty ass, to shake his ears
And graze in commons.

Oct. You may do your will;
But he's a tried and valiant soldier.

Ant. So is my horse, Octavius, and for that I do appoint him store of provender:
It is a creature that I teach to fight,
To wind, to stop, to run directly on,—
His corporal motion govern'd by my spirit.
And, in some taste, is Lepidus but so:
He must be taught, and train'd, and bid go forth;—
A barren-spirited fellow, one that feeds
On objects, arts, and imitations
Which, out of use and stal'd by other men,
Begin his fashion: do not talk of him,
But as a property.—And now, Octavius,
Listen great things:—Brutus and Cassius
Are levying powers; we must straight make head:
Therefore let our alliance be combind,
Our best friends made, and our best means stretch'd out;
And let us presently go sit in council,
How covert matters may be best disclos'd,
And open perils surest answered.

Oct. Let us do so: for we are at the stake,
And bay'd about with many enemies;
And some that smile have in their hearts, I fear
Millions of mischiefs.

[Exeunt.]

Scene II. Before the tent of Brutus, in the camp near Sardis.

Drum. Enter Brutus, Lucilius, Titinius, and Soldiers; Pindarus meeting them; Lucius at some distance.

Bru. Stand, ho!

Luc. Give the word, ho! and stand.

Bru. What now, Lucilius! is Cassius near?

Luc. He is at hand; and Pindarus is come
To do you salutation from his master.

[Enter Cassius and Soldiers.}

Bru. Stand, ho! Speak the word along.

First Sold. Stand!

Sec. Sold. Stand!

Third Sold. Stand!

Cass. Most noble brother, you have done me wrong.

---

1 Taste, measure, degree.
2 A property, a thing to be used as we please.
3 Powers, forces.
4 At the stake, like a wild beast tied to a stake, to be baited by dogs.
5 Full of regard, worthy of all regard.
6 Resolv'd, informed.
7 Familiar instances, proofs or manifestations of familiarity.
8 Hot at hand, spirited when held in.
9 Fall, let fall.
ACT IV. Scene 2.

BRU. Judge me, ye gods! Wrong I mine enemies?
And, if not so, how should I wrong a brother?
CASS. Brutus, this sober form of yours hides wrongs;
And when you do them—

BRU. Cassius, be content; speak your griefs softly,—I do know your well:—
Before the eyes of both our armies here, Which should perceive nothing but love from us,
Let us not wrangle: bid them move away;
Then in my tent, Cassius, enlarge your griefs,
And I will give you audience.

CASS. Pindarus,
Bid our commanders lead their charges off
A little from this ground.

BRU. Lucius, do you the like; and let no man
Come to our tent, till we have done our conference.

Lucilius and Titinius, guard our door.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III. Within the tent of Brutus.

Enter Brutus and Cassius.

CASS. That you have wrong'd me doth appear in this:
You have condemn'd and noted Lucius Pella
For taking bribes here of the Sardians;
Wherein my letter, praying on his side,
Because I knew the man, was slighted off.

BRU. You wrong'd yourself to write in such a case.

CASS. In such a time as this it is not meet That every nice offence should bear his comment.

BRU. Let me tell you, Cassius, you yourself Are much condemn'd to have an itching palm, To sell and mart your offices for gold To undeservers.

CASS. I an itching palm!

[Half draws his sword.

1. Content, quiet, calm.
2. Griefs, grievances.
3. Enlarge, state fully.
5. Slighted off, treated slightingly, disregarded.
7. Bear his comment, receive its criticism.
8. To have, for having.

ACT IV. Scene 3.

You know that you are Brutus that speaks this,
Or, by the gods, this speech were else your last.

BRU. The name of Cassius honours this corruption,
And chastisement doth therefore hide his head.

CASS. Chastisement!

BRU. Remember March, the ides of March remember!

Did not great Julius bleed for justice's sake? What villain touch'd his body, that did stab, And not for justice? What! shall one of us, That struck the foremost man of all this world But for supporting robbers,—shall we now Contaminate our fingers with base bribes, And sell the mighty space of our large honours For so much trash as may be grasped thus? I had rather be a dog, and bay the moon, Than such a Roman.

CASS. Brutus, bay not me; I'll not endure it: you forget yourself, To hedge me in. I am a soldier, I, Older in practice, abler than yourself To make conditions.

BRU. Go to; you are not, Cassius.

CASS. I am.

BRU. I say you are not.

CASS. Urge me no more, I shall forget myself; Have mind upon your health, tempt me no further.

BRU. Away, slight man!

CASS. Is't possible?

BRU. Hear me, for I will speak.

[Cassius advances angrily, as if going to speak.

Must I give way and room to your rash cholera? Shall I be frightened when a madman stares?

CASS. O ye gods, ye gods! [Cassius paces agitatedly to and fro.] Must I endure all this?

BRU. All this? ay, more: fret till your proud heart break;

Go show your slaves how choleric you are, And make your bondmen tremble. Must I budge? Must I observe you? Must I stand and crouch

9. Conditions, the terms on which offices are to be conferred.
10. Observe, be obsequious to.

119
Under your testy humour? [Cassius stops, restraining himself with great effort.] By the gods,
You shall digest the venom of your spleen,
Though it do split you; for, from this day forth,
I’ll use you for my mirth, yes, for my laughter,
When you are waspish.

Cass. Is it come to this?
Bru. You say you are a better soldier: 51
Let it appear so; make your vaunting true,
And it shall please me well: for mine own part,
I shall be glad to learn of noble men.

Cass. [Calmly] You wrong me every way;
you wrong me, Brutus;
I said an elder soldier, not a better:
Did I say better?

Bru. If you did, I care not.
Cass. When Caesar liv’d he durst not thus have mov’d me.
Bru. Peace, peace! you durst not so have tempted him.
Cass. I durst not?
Bru. No.
Cass. What? durst not tempt him?

Bru. For your life you durst not.
Cass. [Suppressing his anger by a great effort] Do not presume too much upon my love;
I may do that I shall be sorry for.

Bru. You have done that you should be sorry for.

There is no terror, Cassius, in your threats;
For I am arm’d so strong in honesty
That they pass by me as the idle wind
Which I respect not. I did send to you
For certain sums of gold, which you denied me:—

For I can raise no money by vile means:
By heaven, I had rather coin my heart,
And drop my blood for drachmas, than to wring
From the hard hands of peasants their vile trash
By any indirection.1—I did send
To you for gold to pay my legions,
Which you denied me. Was that done like Cassius?
Should I have answer’d Caius Cassius so?

When Marcus Brutus grows so covetous, 79
To lock such rascal counters2 from his friends,
Be ready, gods, with all your thunderbolts,
Dash him to pieces!

Cass. I denied you not.
Bru. You did.

Cass. I did not:—he was but a fool
That brought my answer back.—Brutus hath riv’d my heart;
A friend should bear a friend’s infirmities,
But Brutus makes mine greater than they are.

Bru. I do not, till you practise them on me.
Cass. You love me not.

Bru. I do not like your faults.
Cass. A friendly eye could never see such faults.

Bru. A flatterer’s would not, though they do appear
As huge as high Olympus.

Cass. Come, Antony, and young Octavius, come,
Revenge yourselves alone on Cassius!
For Cassius is a wearied of the world;
Hated by one he loves, brav’d by his brother,
Check’d3 like a bondman; all his faults observ’d,
Set in a note-book, learn’d and conn’d by rote,
To cast into my teeth. O, I could weep
My spirit from mine eyes! — There is my dagger,

And here my naked breast; within, a heart
Dearer than Plutus’s mine, richer than gold:
If that thou beest a Roman, take it forth;
I, that denied thee gold, will give my heart:
Strike, as thou didst at Caesar; for I know,
When thou didst hate him worst, thou lov’dst him better
Than ever thou lov’dst Cassius.

Bru. Sheathe your dagger:
Be angry when you will, it shall have scope;
Do what you will, diadonour shall be humour.5
O Cassius, you are yoked with a lamb, 110
That carries anger as the flint bears fire,
Who, much enforced,6 shows a hasty spark
And straight is cold again.

---

1 Indirection, dishonesty.
2 Counters, pieces of metal used in casting accounts; here used contemptuously for money.
3 Check’d, chided, reproved.
4 Plutus, the Roman god of wealth.
5 Shall be humour, shall be regarded as mere caprice.
6 Enforced, struck forcibly.
Cass. Hath Cassius liv'd
To be but mirth and laughter to his Brutus,
When grief and blood ill-temper'd vexeth him?
Brutus. When I spoke that, I was ill-temper'd too.
Cass. Do you confess so much? Give me your hand.
Brutus. [Embracing him.] And my heart too.

Cass. O Brutus!—
Brutus. What's the matter?
Cass. Have not you love enough to bear with me,
When that rash humour which my mother gave me
Makes me forgetful?

Cass. There is my dagger,
And here my naked breast.—(Act iv. 2, 100, 101.)

Brutus. Yes, Cassius; and from henceforth,
When you are over-earnest with your Brutus,
He'll think your mother chides, and leave you so.

[Noise within.
[Poet. [Within] Let me go in to see the generals:
There is some grudge between 'em; 'tis not meet
They be alone.
Lucius. [Within] You shall not come to them.
Poet. [Within] Nothing but death shall stay me.]
Enter Lucius, with a jar of wine, a goblet, and a taper.

Bru. Speak no more of her.—Give me a bowl of wine.— [Taking the goblet. In this I bury all unkindness, Cassius.

[Drinks. Cass. My heart is thirsty for that noble pledge.—100 Fill, Lucius, till the wine o’erswell the cup; I cannot drink too much of Brutus’ love.

[Drinks. Exit Lucius.

Enter Titinius, with Messala.

Bru. Come in, Titinius. —Welcome, good Messala.— Now sit we close about this taper here, And call in question⁴ our necessities.

[Titinius and Messala sit.

Cas. [Aside] Portia, art thou gone?

Bru. No more, I pray you.—

[Brutus and Cassius sit at the table. Messala, I have here received letters, That young Octavius and Mark Antony Come down upon us with a mighty power,⁵ Bending their expedition toward Philippi.

Mess. Myself have letters of the selfsame tenour. 171

Bru. With what addition?

Mess. That by proscription and bills of outlawry, Octavius, Antony, and Lepidus Have put to death an hundred senators.

Bru. Therein our letters do not well agree; Mine speak of seventy senators that died By their proscriptions, Cicero being one.

Cas. Cicero one?

Mess. Cicero is dead,
And by that order of proscription,—180 Had you your letters from your wife, my lord?

Bru. No, Messala.

Mess. Nor nothing in your letters writ of her?

Mess. That, methinks, is strange.

Bru. Why ask you? Hear you aught of her in yours?

¹ Fashion; here a trisyllable. ² Jigging, rhyming. ³ Companion; used contumeliously = fellow. ⁴ Give place, give way. ⁵ Fell distract, became distracted.
Mess. No, my lord.

Bru. Now, as you are a Roman, tell me true.

Mess. Then like a Roman bear the truth I tell;
For certain she is dead, and by strange manner.

Bru. Why, farewell, Portia. [All rise and advance.] We must die, Messala: 190
With meditating that she must die once,
I have the patience to endure it now.

Mess. Even so great men great losses should endure.

Cass. I have as much of this in art as you,
But yet my nature could not bear it so.

Bru. Well, to our work alive. What do you think
Of marching to Philippi presently?

Cass. I do not think it good.

Bru. Your reason?

Cass. This it is:
'Tis better that the enemy seek us;
So shall he waste his means, weary his soldiers, Doing himself offence; whilst we lying still
Are full of rest, defence, and nimbleness.

Bru. Good reasons must, of force, give place to better.
The people 'twixt Philippi and this ground
Do stand but in a forc'd affection;
For they have grudg'd us contribution:
The enemy, marching along by them,
By them shall make a fuller number up,
Come on refresh'd, new-added, and encourag'd;
From which advantage shall we cut him off
If at Philippi we do face him there.

These people at our back.

Cass. Hear me, good brother.

Bru. Under your pardon.—You must note beside
That we have tried the utmost of our friends,
Our legions are brim-full, our cause is ripe:
The enemy increaseth every day;
We, at the height, are ready to decline.
There is a tide in the affairs of men,
Which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune;
Omitted, all the voyage of their life
Is bound in shallows and in miseries.

On such a full sea are we now afloat;
And we must take the current when it serves,
Or lose our ventures.

Cass. Then, with your will, go on;
We'll along ourselves, and meet them at Philippi.

Bru. The deep of night is crept upon our talk,
And nature must obey necessity,
Which we will niggard with a little rest.
There is no more to say.

Cass. No more. Good night!
Early to-morrow will we rise and hence.

Bru. Lucius, my gown. —[Exit Lucius.

Farewell, good Messala!—
Good night, Titinius!—Noble, noble Cassius,
Good night, and good repose!

Cass. O my dear brother!
[Embracing Brutus.

This was an ill beginning of the night;
Never come such division 'tween our souls!
Let it not, Brutus.

Enter Lucius, with the gown.

Bru. Every thing is well.

Cass. Good night, my lord!

Bru. Good night, good brother!

Tit. Mess. Good night, Lord Brutus!

Bru. Farewell, every one!—

[Exeunt Cassius, Titinius, and Messala.

Give me the gown. Where is thy instrument?

Luc. Here, in the tent.

[Go to his lute, and returns.

Bru. What! thou speak'st drowsily? Poor knave, I blame thee not; thou art o'erwatch'd.

Call Claudius and some other of my men;
I'll have them sleep on cushions in my tent.

Luc. Varro and Claudius!

Enter Varro and Claudius.

Var. Calls my lord?

Bru. I pray you, sirs, lie in my tent and sleep;
It may be I shall raise you by and by
On business to my brother Cassius.

Var. So please you, we will stand and watch your pleasure.

7 Knave, boy.
8 O'erwatch'd, worn out with watching.
ACT IV. Scene 3.

JULIUS CAESAR.

Bru. I will not have it so: lie down, good sirs; It may be I shall otherwise bethink me.— Look, Lucius, here's the book I sought for so; I put it in the pocket of my gown. 253 [Servants lie down.

Luc. I was sure your lordship did not give it me.

Bru. Bear with me, good boy; I am much forgetful. 255 Canst thou hold up thy heavy eyes awhile, And touch thy instrument a strain or two?

Luc. Ay, my lord, an't please you.

Bru. It does, my boy; I trouble thee too much, but thou art willing.

Bru. Ha! who comes here?—(Act iv. 3. 275.)

Luc. It is my duty, sir. 260

Bru. I should not urge thy duty past thy might;
I know young bloods look for a time of rest.

Luc. I have slept, my lord, already.

Bru. It was well done, and thou shalt sleep again;
I will not hold thee long: if I do live,
I will be good to thee.—

[Lucius sits, and begins to play, but soon falls asleep.

This is a sleepy tune.—O murderous slumber, Lay'st thou thy leaden mace upon my boy, That plays thee music?—Gentle knave, good night;

I will not do thee so much wrong to wake thee: If thou dost nod, thou break'st thy instrument: I'll take it from thee [Takes lute from Lucius and lays it down]; and, good boy, good night.— 272

Let me see, let me see;—is not the leaf turn'd down Where I left reading? Here it is, I think.

[He sits down.

Enter the Ghost of Cæsar.

How ill this taper burns!—Ha! whocomeshere? I think it is the weakness of mine eyes That shapes this monstrous apparition. 2

[Ghost approaches.

1 Mace, club.

124

2 Apparition; metrically five syllables.
It comes upon me.—Art thou any thing?
Art thou some god, some angel, or some devil,
That mak'st my blood cold and my hair to stare? 11
Speak to me what thou art.
Ghost. Thy evil spirit, Brutus.
Bru. Why com'st thou?
Ghost. To tell thee thou shalt see me at Philippi.
Bru. Well; then I shall see thee again?
Ghost. Ay, at Philippi.
[Ghost vanishes.
Bru. Why, I will see thee at Philippi then.—
Now I have taken heart, thou vanishest:
Ill spirit, I would hold more talk with thee.—
Boy! Lucius!—Varro! Claudius! Sirs, awake!—
[Claudius!
Luc. The strings, my lord, are false.
Bru. He thinks he still is at his instrument.—
Lucius, awake!]
Luc. [Advancing] My lord!

ACT V.

Scene I. The plains of Philippi.

Enter Octavius, Antony, and their army.

Oct. Now, Antony, our hopes are answered.
You said the enemy would not come down,
But keep the hills and upper regions.
It proves not so: their battles 2 are at hand;
They mean to warn 3 us at Philippi here,
Answering before we do demand of them.
Ant. Tut! I am in their bosoms, 4 and I
know
Wherefore they do it: they could be content
To visit other places, and come down
With fearful bravery, 5 thinking by this face
To fasten in our minds that they have courage; 11
But 'tis not so.

---

1 Stare, stand up.
2 Set on his powers, move forward his forces.
3 Battles, battalions, forces.
4 Warn, summon, attack.
5 Bosoms, confidence.
6 With fearful bravery, with a show of courage though full of fear.
7 Face, appearance.
8 Battle, army.
9 Exigent, exigency.
Ant. No, Caesar, we will answer on their charge.
Make forth; the generals would have some words.
Oct. Stir not until the signal.
Brut. Words before blows; is it so, countrymen?
Oct. Not that we love words better, as you do.
Brut. Good words are better than bad strokes, Octavius.
Ant. In your bad strokes, Brutus, you give good words;
Witness the hole you made in Caesar's heart, Crying, "Long live! Hail, Caesar!"
Cass. Antony, The posture of your blows are yet unknown;

But for your words, they rob the Hybla bees,
And leave them honeyless.

Ant. Not stingless too.
Brut. O, yes, and soundless too;
For you have stoln their buzzing, Antony,
And very wisely threat before you sting.
Ant. Villains, you did not so when your vile daggers
Hack'd one another in the sides of Caesar;
You show'd your teeth like apes, and fawn'd like hounds,
And bow'd like bondmen, kissing Caesar's feet;
Whilst damned Casca, like a cur, behind,
Struck Caesar on the neck. O you flatterers!

Cass. Flatterers!—Now, Brutus, thank yourself;
This tongue had not offended so to-day,
If Cassius might have rul'd.
Oct. Come, come, the cause; if arguing make us sweat,
The proof of it will turn to redder drops.
Look—
I draw a sword against conspirators;
When think you that the sword goes up again?—
Never, till Caesar's three and thirty wounds
Be well aveng'd; or till another Caesar
Have added slaughter to the sword of traitors.
Bru. Caesar, thou canst not die by traitors' hands,
Unless thou bring'st them with thee.
Oct. So I hope;
I was not born to die on Brutus' sword.
Bru. O, if thou wert the noblest of thy \( e^{2}. a^{2} i^{2} n^{2} l^{2} \),
Young man, thou couldst not die more honourably.
Cass. A peevish\(^2\) schoolboy, worthless of such honour,
Join'd with a masker and a reveller!
Ant. Old Cassius still!
Oct. Come, Antony; away!—
Defiance, traitors, hurl we in your teeth:
If you dare fight to-day, come to the field;
If not, when you have stomachs.\(^3\)

[Exeunt Octavius, Antony, and their army.

Cass. Why now, blow wind, swell billow, and swim bark!
The storm is up, and all is on the hazard.
[Bru. Ho, Lucilius! hark, a word with you.
Lucil. My lord!
[Brutus and Lucilius talk apart.
Cass. Messala!
Mess. What says my general?
Cass. Messala,
This is my birthday; as this very day
Was Cassius born. Give me thy hand, Messala;
Be thou my witness that against my will,
As Pompey was,\(^4\) am I compell'd to set
Upon one battle all our liberties.
You know that I held Epicurus strong,
And his opinion; now I change my mind,
And partly credit things that do presage.
Coming from Sardis, on our former\(^6\) ensign
Two mighty eagles fell; and there they perch'd,
Gorging and feeding from our soldiers' hands;
Who to Philippi here consorted us:
This morning are they fled away and gone,
And in their steads do ravens, crows, and kites
Fly o'er our heads and downward look on us,
As we were sickly prey; their shadows seem
A canopy most fatal, under which
Our army lies, ready to give up the ghost.

---

\( ^{1} \) Strain, race, stock.  \(^{2}\) Peevish, foolish.
\( ^{3}\) Stomachs, appetites.
\( ^{4}\) As Pompey was, i.e. at Pharsalia.
\( ^{5}\) Former, foremost, forward.
ACT V. Scene 2.

JULIUS CAESAR.

ACT V. Scene 3.

[SCENE II. The field of battle.]

ALARUM. Enter Brutus and Messala.

BRU. Ride, ride, Messala, ride, and give these bills
Unto the legions on the other side.

[LOUD ALARUM.]

Let them set on at once; for I perceive
But cold demeanour in Octavius' wing,
And sudden push gives them the overthrow.

Ride, ride, Messala; let them all come down.

[Exit.]

SCENE III. Another part of the field.

ALARUM, drums, trumpets, and shouts. Enter Cassius with an eagle in his hand, and Titinius.

CAS. O, look, Titinius, look, the villains fly!
Myself have to mine own turn'd enemy;
This ensign here of mine was turning back;
I slew the coward, and did take it from him.

TIT. O Cassius, Brutus gave the word too early;
Who, having some advantage on Octavius,
Took it too eagerly; his soldiers fell to spoil,
Whilst we by Antony are all enclos'd.

[ALARUM, drums, and shouts.]

Enter Pindarus.

PIN. Fly further off, my lord, fly further off!
Mark Antony is in your tents, my lord! Fly,
Fly, therefore, noble Cassius, fly far off!

CAS. This hill is far enough. [Gives ensign to Pindarus.]—Look, look, Titinius;
Are those my tents where I perceive the fire?

TIT. They are, my lord.

CAS. Titinius, if thou lov'st me,
Mount thou my horse and hide thy spurs in him,
Till he have brought thee up to yonder troops,
And here again, that I may rest assur'd
Whether yond troops are friend or enemy.

TIT. I will be here again, even with a thought.

[Exit.

1 Bills, written orders. 2 Push, onset, charge. 3 It, i.e. the ensign, or standard, implied in ensign, or standard-bearer. 4 Far, farther.

CAS. Go, Pindarus, get higher on that hill;
My sight was ever thick; regard Titinius, and tell me what thou not'st about the field.—[Pindarus goes up.

This day I breathed first: time is come round,
And where I did begin, there shall I end;
My life is run his compass.—Sirrah, what news?

PIN. [Above] O my lord!

CAS. What news?

PIN. Titinius is enclosed round about
With horsemen that make to him on the spur;—
Yet he spurs on.—Now they are almost on him;—

Now, Titinius!—Now some light.—O, he lights too.—He's ta'en; and, hark!
They shout for joy.

[Distant shouts and flourish of trumpets.]

CAS. Come down, behold no more.—O, coward that I am to live so long,
To see my best friend ta'en before my face!—

PINDARUS comes down.

Come hither, sirrah!
In Parthia did I take thee prisoner;
And then I swore thee, saving of thy life,
That whatsoever I did bid thee do,
Thou shouldst attempt it. Come now, keep thine oath!—

Now be a freeman; and with this good sword,
That ran through Caesar's bowels, search this bosom.
Stand not to answer: here, take thou the hilts;—

And, when my face is cover'd, as 'tis now,
Guide thou the sword. [Pindarus takes the sword, and Cassius runs upon it; he falls.]

Cæsar, thou art reveng'd,
Even with the sword that kill'd thee. [Dies.]

PIN. So, I am free; yet would not so have been,
Durst I have done my will.—O Cassius!
Far from this country Pindarus shall run, Where never Roman shall take note of him. [Exit. Alarum.]

5 Hills, i.e. the sword by the hill.
Enter Titinius, with a laurel crown on his head, and Messala.

Mess. It is but change, Titinius; for Octavius
Is overthrown by noble Brutus' power,
As Cassius' legions are by Antony.
Tít. These tidings will well comfort Cassius.
Mess. Where did you leave him?

Tít. All disconsolate,
With Pindarus his bondman, on this hill.
Mess. [Seeing Cassius' body] Is not that he that lies upon the ground?
Tít. He lies not like the living. O my heart!
Mess. Is not that he?
Tít. No, this was he, Messala;
But Cassius is no more.—O setting sun!

As in thy red rays thou dost sink to night,
So in his red blood Cassius' day is set;
The sun of Rome is set! Our day is gone;
Clouds, dews, and dangers come; our deeds are done!]
Mistrust of my success hath done this deed.
[Mess. Mistrust of good success hath done this deed.
O hateful Error, Melancholy's child!
Why dost thou show to the apt thoughts of men
The things that are not? O Error, soon conceiv'd,

Thou never com'st unto a happy birth,
But kill'st the mother that engender'd thee.
Tít.] What, Pindarus! Where art thou, Pindarus?
Mess. Seek him, Titinius, whilst I go to meet
The noble Brutus, thrusting this report
Into his ears; [—I may say, thrusting it;
For piercing steel and darts envenom'd
Shall be as welcome to the ears of Brutus
As tidings of this sight.]
Tít.
Hie you, Messala,
And I will seek for Pindarus the while.—

Exit Messala.

Why didst thou send me forth, brave Cassius?
Did I not meet thy friends? and did not they Put on my brows this wreath of victory,
And bid me give it thee? Didst thou not hear their shouts?
Alas! thou hast misconstrued every thing!
But hold thee, take this garland on thy brow;
Thy Brutus bid me give it thee, and I
Will do his bidding.—Brutus, come apace,
And see how I regarded Caius Cassius. — 88
By your leave, gods:—this is a Roman’s part;
Come, Cassius’ sword, and find Titinius’ heart.

[Dies.

Alarum. Enter MESSALA, with Brutus, young CATO, STRATO, VOLUMNIUS, and LUCILIUS.

Bru. Where, where, Messala, doth his body lie?
Mess. Lo, yonder, and Titinius mourning it.
Brut. Titinius’ face is upward. CATO. He is slain.
Bru. O Julius Caesar, thou art mighty yet!
Thy spirit walks abroad, and turns our swords
In our own proper entrails. [Low alarum.
Cato. Brave Titinius! Look, whether he have not crown’d dead Cassius!

Bru. Are yet two Romans living such as these?
The last of all the Romans, fare thee well!
It is impossible that ever Rome should breed thy fellow. — Friends, I owe thee tears
To this dead man than you shall see me pay. —
I shall find time, Cassius, I shall find time.
Come, therefore, and to Thassos send his body;
His funerals shall not be in our camp,
Lest it discomfort us.—Lucilius, come;—
And come, young Cato; let us to the field.—

[ Labeo and Flavius, set our battles on:—
’Tis three o’clock; and, Romans, yet ere night
We shall try fortune in a second fight. 110

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV. Another part of the field.

Alarum. Enter, fighting, Soldiers of both armies;
then Brutus, young Cato, Lucilius, and others.

Bru. Yet, countrymen, O, yet hold up your heads!

Cato. What bastard doth not! Who will go with me?
I will proclaim my name about the field:—
I am the son of Marcus Cato, ho!
A foe to tyrants, and my country’s friend;
I am the son of Marcus Cato, ho!
[Charges the enemy.

Bru. And I am Brutus, Marcus Brutus, I;
Brutus, my country’s friend; know me for Brutus!

[Exit, charging the enemy. Cato is overpowered, and falls.

Lucil. O young and noble Cato, art thou down?

Why, now thou diest as bravely as Titinius,
And mayst be honour’d, being Cato’s son. 11
First Sold. Yield, or thou diest.

Lucil. Only I yield to die:
There is so much that thou wilt kill me straight;
[Offering money.
Kill Brutus, and be honour’d in his death.
First Sold. We must not.—A noble prisoner! Sec. Sold. Room, ho! Tell Antony, Brutus is ta’en.

First Sold. I’ll tell the news.—Here comes the general.—

Enter ANTONY.

Brutus is ta’en, Brutus is ta’en, my lord.

Ant. Where is he?

Lucil. Safe, Antony; Brutus is safe enough.

I dare assure thee that no enemy
Shall ever take alive the noble Brutus;
The gods defend him from so great a shame! When you do find him, or alive or dead,
He will be found like Brutus, like himself.

Ant. This is not Brutus, friend; but, I assure you,
A prize no less in worth. Keep this man safe,
Give him all kindness; I had rather have Such men my friends than enemies. Go on,
And see whether Brutus be alive or dead,
And bring us word unto Octavius’ tent
How every thing is chanc’d.

[Flourish of trumpets. Exeunt.

1 In, into. 2 Moe, more. 3 Funerals = modern funeral.

4 That, on condition that.
Scene V. Another part of the field.

Enter Brutus, Dardanius, Clitus, Strato, and Volumnius.

Bru. Come, poor remains of friends, rest on this rock.
Clitus. Statilius show'd the torch-light, but, my lord,
He came not back; he is or ta'en or slain.
Bru. Sit thee down, Clitus: slaying is the word;
It is a deed in fashion. Hark thee, Clitus.—

[Whispering.

Clitus. What! I, my lord? No, not for all the world.
Bru. Peace then! no words.
Clitus. I'll rather kill myself.

[Brutus. Hark thee, Dardanius!

[Whispers him.

Dar. Shall I do such a deed?
Clitus. O Dardanius!
Dar. O Clitus!
Clitus. What ill request did Brutus make to thee?
Dar. To kill him, Clitus. Look, he meditates.
Clitus. Now is that noble vessel full of grief,
That it runs over even at his eyes.
Bru. Come hither, good Volumnius; list a word.
Vol. What says my lord?
Bru. Why, this, Volumnius:
The ghost of Caesar hath appear'd to me
Two several times by night,—at Sardis once,
And, this last night, here in Philippi fields.
I know my hour is come.
Vol. Not so, my lord.
Bru. Nay, I am sure it is, Volumnius.
Thou seest the world, Volumnius, how it goes;
Our enemies have beat us to the pit:

[Low alarums.

It is more worthy to leap in ourselves
Than tarry till they push us. Good Volumnius,
Thou know'st that we two went to school together;

Even for that our love of old, I prithee,
Hold thou my sword-hilts whilst I run on it.
Vol. That's not an office for a friend, my lord.

[Alarum still.

Clitus. Fly, fly, my lord! there is no tarrying here.
Bru. Farewell to you; —and you; —and you, Volumnius.—

[Strato, thou hast been all this while asleep;
Farewell to thee too, Strato.]—Countrymen, —
My heart doth joy that yet in all my life
I found no man but he was true to me.
I shall have glory by this losing day,
More than Octavius and Mark Antony
By this vile conquest shall attain unto.
So, fare you well at once; for Brutus' tongue
Hath almost ended his life's history. 40 Night hangs upon my eyes; my bones would rest,
That have but labour'd to attain this hour.

[Alarum. Cry within, "Fly, fly, fly!"]
Clitus. Fly, my lord, fly!
Bru. Hence, I will follow.—

[Execut Clitus, Dardanius, and Volumnius.

I prithee, Strato, stay thou by thy lord.
Thou art a fellow of a good respect:1
Thy life hath had some smack2 of honour in it:
Hold then my sword, and turn away thy face
While I do run upon it. Wilt thou, Strato?
Strato. Give me your hand first; fare you well, my lord.
Bru. Farewell, good Strato.—Cæsar, now be still;
I kill'd not thee with half so good a will.

[He runs on his sword and dies.

Octavius. What man is that?
Messala. My master's man.—Strato, where is thy master?
Strato. Free from the bondage you are in,
Messala:
The conquerors can but make a fire of him;
For Brutus only overcame himself,
And no man else hath honour by his death.
ACT V. Scene 5.

Lucil. So Brutus should be found.—I thank thee, Brutus,
That thou hast prov'd Lucilius' saying true.

Oct. All that serv'd Brutus, I will entertain\(^1\) them. 60

[\[ FELLOW, wilt thou bestow thy time with me? \]

Strat. Ay, if Messala will prefer\(^2\) me to you.

Oct. Do so, good Messala.

Mess. How died my master, Stratol? 70

Strat. I held the sword, and he did run on it.

Mess. Octavius, then take him to follow thee,
That did the latest service to my master.\)

Ant. This was the noblest Roman of them all.

All the conspirators, save only he, \(69\)
Did that they did in envy of great Caesar;
He only, in a general honest thought
And common good to all, made one of them.
His life was gentle; and the elements
So mix'd in him that Nature might stand up
And say to all the world, "This was a man!"

Oct. According to his virtue let us use him,
With all respect and rites of burial.
Within my tent his bones to-night shall lie,
Most like a soldier, ordered honourably.—
So, call the field\(^3\) to rest, and let's away, 80
To part\(^4\) the glories of this happy day.

[\[ Exeunt. \]

---

\(^1\) Entertain, take into service.
\(^2\) Prefer, recommend.
\(^3\) Field, army.
\(^4\) Part, divide, share.

132
NOTES TO JULIUS CAESAR.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

1. CAIUS JULIUS CAESAR was born in July, 100 B.C. He belonged to the Julian family (Julia gens), one of the most ancient in Rome. Through the influence of Marius, who had married his aunt, he was made a priest of Jupiter when a mere boy. In 83 B.C. he married Cornelia, the daughter of Cinna, which offended Sulla, who proscribed him when he refused to divorce his wife. After being in concealment for some time in the Sabine country he was pardoned by Sulla, who is reported to have said of him, "In that boy there are many Mariuses." Soon after, Caesar went to Nicomedes, king of Bithynia, and subsequently won distinction in the Roman campaign in Cilicia. About 76 B.C., while on his way to Rhodes to study oratory under Apollonius Molo, he was captured by pirates, and detained until his friends could ransom him. This done, he manned a Milesian fleet, pursued and took the pirates, and crucified them, as he had threatened while with them, though they supposed it to be a jest. In 69 B.C. he was elected questor at Rome. The same year his wife died, and in 67 B.C. he married Pompeia, a relative of Pompey and grand-daughter of Sulla. He became sedile in 65 B.C., and gained great favour with the people by the magnificence of the public games he instituted. In 64 B.C. he was chosen Pontifex Maximus. The next year the conspiracy of Catiline occurred, and being suspected of complicity in it he narrowly escaped sharing the fate of its leaders. Becoming pretor in 62 B.C. he was sent a year later as propretor to Spain, where his military successes led to his being called imperator by the army. He was chosen one of the consuls in 60 B.C., and to strengthen his influence with Pompey gave him his daughter Julia in marriage. He also formed a secret alliance with Pompey and Crassus, known as the first triumvirate. Soon after the government of Gaul was decreed to him for five years, and in 58 B.C. his famous Gallic campaigns began. In two years he had subdued the Helvetii, the German Ariovistus, and the Belgic tribes. In 56 B.C. he overran and conquered nearly all the rest of Gaul; and in 55 he destroyed two German tribes that had tried to establish themselves in the province. He also bridged the Rhine and carried the war into the German territory. The same year he invaded Britain, and a year later made further conquests in the island. The next few years, to 51 B.C., were spent in quelling formidable insurrections and otherwise completing the pacification of Gaul. Meanwhile his daughter who married Pompey had died, and a coldness and jealousy had sprung up between the generals. In 60 B.C. the senate, influenced by his enemies, required him to disband his army. This he determined not to do, and being supported by his soldiers he crossed the Rubicon and began his triumphant progress to Rome, while Pompey, the consul, and most of the senate fled towards Capua. Pompey, closely pursued by Cæsar, kept on to Brundisium, and escaped into Greece. Cæsar, unable to follow for want of ships, turned to Spain, where the lieutenants of Pompey had a formidable army. Completing the conquest of the country in forty days, and reducing Massilia also, he returned to Rome, where he had already been declared dictator. After many difficulties and delays he managed to get an army across into Greece, and encountered Pompey at Dyrrachium, where he was repulsed with some loss, and withdrew to Thessaly, pursued by his rival. The battle of Pharsalia followed, with the defeat of Pompey and his flight to Egypt, where he was treacherously murdered. Cæsar, having followed him to Egypt, was captivated by Cleopatra, and established her upon the throne to which her elder brother had been a claimant. He then marched against Pharnaces, king of Pontus, and defeated him near Zela, sending to the senate the famous despatch, Veni, vidi, vici. Returning to Rome in September, 47 B.C., he set out that same year for Africa, where he routed the Punic forces under Scipio at Thapsus. He now came back to Rome master of the world, but was soon called into Spain, where the sons of Pompey had gathered a powerful army, which, after a very severe action at Munda, he utterly defeated. This was the last of Cæsar's wars, and he henceforth devoted himself to the interests of his country and the world, reforming the calendar, enacting salutary laws, and carrying out great public improvements. The senate had made him imperator for life, as well as dictator and profectus morum; and he was already pontifex maximus, or head officer of the religion of the state. Having no legitimate children, he adopted his grand-nephew Octavius as his successor and heir of his name.

At this point in his history the play begins, and the rest is told better by Shakespeare than this concise sketch can give it. The assassination occurred on the Ides of March, 44 B.C., in the fifty-sixth year of Cæsar's age.

2. OCTAVIUS CÆSAR, or Cæsaris Cæsar Octavianus, as he was named when he became the heir of Julius Cæsar, was born at Velletri, near Rome, 63 B.C. He was the son of Cæsaris Octavius and Atia, daughter of Cæsar's sister Julia. At the age of twelve he pronounced a funeral oration in praise of his grandmother Julia, and at sixteen assumed the toga virilis. Being adopted by Julius Cæsar, he went with him to Spain in 45 B.C. When Cæsar was assassinated he was pursuing his studies at Apollonia, whence he returned to Rome to claim his inheritance. He found a rival in Antony, but in 43 B.C. defeated him near Mutina (Modena) in Cisalpine Gaul. The senate, jealous of his growing power, transferred the command of his army to Decimus Brutus; but he marched to Rome, was elected consul before he had reached the legal age, and formed the triumvirate with Antony and Lepidus against Marcus Brutus and the other republicans. Then followed the events of the play, ending with the battle of Philippi, 42 B.C. Octavius and Antony soon quarrelled, but after a feigned reconciliation combined their forces against Sextus Pompey, over whom Octavius gained a decisive victory (36 B.C.) while Antony was warring in the East or dallying with Cleopatra in Egypt. Meanwhile Octavius was establishing his power in Italy; and Antony's infatuation with Cleopatra and his neglect of Octavia (sister of Octavius) led to a final and irreconcilable breach with Antony and the war which ended in his ruin at Actium, 31 B.C. Octavius was now sole master of the Roman empire, and, after being several times elected as consul, received the title of Augustus from the senate in 27 B.C. Four years later he accepted the tribunus potestas for life, and held it until his death, in August, 14 A.D. Of the glories of this reign it is unnecessary to add any detailed account here.

3. MARCUS ANTONIUS, born about 83 B.C., was noted in his early years for his extravagance and dissipation. For a time he was a lieutenant of Cæsar in his Gallic campaign, and in January, 49 B.C., was intrusted by him on his departure for Spain with the command of his forces in Italy. He did good service, and later commanded the left wing of Cæsar's army at Pharsalia. When Cæsar became dictator, in 47, Antony was made master of the horse; and in 44 he was colleague of Cæsar in the consulship. His career after the death of Cæsar is sketched in the preceding notice of Octavius, and Shakespeare sets out the outline in the present play and in Antony and Cleopatra. After the battle of Actium Antony retreated to Alexandria, where he killed himself in 30 B.C.

4. MARCUS JUNIUS BRUTUS was born 80 B.C. Catu Uticensis was his maternal uncle, and became his father-in-law. In the civil wars Brutus sided with Pompey; but after the battle of Pharsalia he became the intimate friend of Cæsar. The remainder of his history is included in the play. His death by his own hand occurred in 36 B.C.

5. CAIUS CASSIUS LONGIUS showed his early zeal for liberty at school, where he struck Faustus, the son of Sulla, for boasting of his father's absolute power. He married a sister of his friend Brutus. He was quaestor under Crassus in the disastrous expedition against the Parthians in 53 B.C., and saved the remnant of the army by a skilful retreat. Later he defeated the Parthians in Syria. He commanded a fleet for Pompey, and surrendered to Cæsar after the battle of Pharsalia. His connection with the conspiracy against Cæsar and his subsequent fortunes are related in the play.

6. CALPURNIA was the daughter of Lucius Calpurnius Piso, who was consul in 56 B.C. She was married to Cæsar in 59 B.C., and was his fourth wife; the other three being Cossetia, Cornelia, and Pompeia. Little else is known of her history beyond what Plutarch narrates and Shakespeare incorporates in the play.

7. PORTIA (or FORCIA, as the name is also spelt) was the daughter of Cato and the wife of Brutus. Plutarch is Dramatic Persones.

NOTES TO JULIUS CAESAR.

ACT I. SCENE 1.

the chief authority for the details of her life, and most of these have been made use of by the dramatist.

8. PUBLIUS SERVILIUS CASCA. Of this character we know little except that he was tribune of the people at the time he joined the conspiracy against Caesar, that he fought at Philippi, and that he died soon after the battle.

9. CAIUS TREBONIIUS had been a tribune of the people in 55 B.C., and was also one of Caesar's legates in Gaul. He was elected city praetor in 48 and consul in 45 B.C. He took part in the conspiracy, as described in the play; and in 45 B.C. he was killed at Smyrna by Dolabella.

10. QUINTUS LIGARIUS fought for Pompey in the civil war, and after Pharsalus he renewed the war against Caesar in Africa. He was pardoned by the victor, but forbidden to enter Italy. His friends endeavoured to have the sentence reversed, but, being opposed by Tubero, engaged the services of Cicero, who pronounced a well-known oration (Pro Ligario) in his behalf. According to Plutarch, Caesar had resolved to give decision against Ligarius, but was led by the eloquence of Cicero to pardon him. He showed his gratitude by conspiring against his benefactor, as represented by Shakespeare.

11. DECIUS JUNIUS BRUTUS (the Decius Brutus of the play) had served under Caesar in Gaul, and been commander of his cavalry. He was slain in 33 B.C. by Cassius, a Gaul, to whom he had fled for refuge, and who was greatly indebted to him for former favours, and his head was sent to Antony.

12. LUCIUS TELLIUS CIMBER (the Metellus Cimber of the play) was a partisan of Caesar in the civil war, but turned against him subsequently and became one of his assassins.

13. LUCIUS CORNELIUS CINNA was a son of the more famous Roman of the same name. He was a brother-in-law of Caesar, and a son-in-law of Pompey. He was praetor in 44 B.C., when he entered into the conspiracy.

14. CAIUS HELVITUS CINNA, who, according to Plutarch, was killed by the mob because he was mistaken for the conspirator, was a poet of no mean order, if we may judge of him by the tributes of his contemporaries and the few fragments of his works that have come down to us. He was a companion and friend of Catullus, and is supposed to be the Cinius of Virgil's ninth Eclogue.

15. The Cicero of the play is of course the great orator (106-43 B.C.), but the slight part he performs calls for no extended account of him here.

16. The young CATO was a son of Cato Uticensis and brother of Portia.

Of the other characters in the play little or nothing is known except what Plutarch tells us in the passages quoted from North's translation below. Most of them owe the preservation of their names to their connection with the fate of the great Dictator.

ACT I. SCENE 1.

17. Line 5: Being mechanical. Shakespeare uses this word as a substantive in Mida. Night's Dream, iii. 2. 9:

A crew of patches, rude mechanically;

and in II. Henry VI. i. 3. 186:

Base dunghill villains and mechanical.

Shakespeare uses the substantive mechanic only once, in Coriolanus, v. 3. 83, and he uses the adjective—belonging to the class of workmen, in Henry V. i. 2. 200, and in Antony and Cleopatra, iv. 4. 32; v. 2. 200. He never uses either the substantive or adjective in what may be called, more or less, its scientific sense. Much stress has been laid by some commentators upon the anti-democratic tone of Shakespeare in his plays; and, indeed, this feature of his writings has been used as an argument that the plays must have been written by some one who belonged to the aristocratic class; these persons would probably point out with triumph that Shakespeare never uses the word mechanical or mechanic except in a contemptuous sense, as will be seen from the quotations and references given above. But, on the other hand, we must not forget that Shakespeare was, above all things, a dramatist; and, in every instance that he has used either mechanical or mechanic, he has put the word into the mouths of persons who would naturally despise the working-classes. For the unreasoning mob, always ready to be led by the nose by any demagogue, Shakespeare undoubtedly had an honest contempt; and students of human nature will find that this contempt is just as strong amongst our middle class as it was in Shakespeare's day. That Shakespeare had any lack of sympathy with the honest and industrious poor, or that he was wanting in love of true liberty, no one who reads his plays intelligently can for a moment imagine.—F. A. M.

18. Lines 4, 5:

without the sign

OF YOUR PROFESSION.

On this passage Mr. Aldis Wright has the following note:

"It is more likely Shakespeare had in his mind a custom of his own time than any sumptuary laws of the Romans" (Clarendon Press ed. p. 82). It is evident that there is no reference here to the medieval guilds; as the next speech but one, that of Marullus, shows us that what the tribune meant was not that the mechanics should wear any special badge or sign, but merely the usual working dress of their trade or occupation; in short, that they had no right to be in holiday attire, or, as we should say, in their Sunday clothes, on a working day.—F. A. M.

19. Line 11: a cobbler. He puts his answer in such a way as to suggest the meaning of a clumsy workman rather than a mender of shoes, and for some time the tribune does not perceive the quibble.

20. Line 14: a mender of bad soles. We have a similar play upon sole in the Merchant of Venice, iv. 1. 129:

Not on thy sole, but on thy soal, harsh Jew.

21. Line 15: What trade, thou knave?—In the Fy. this speech is given to Flavius; but the reply, "Mend me," shows that it belongs to Marullus.

22. Line 16: be not out, &c.—The play upon out with (angry with) and out (at tocs or heels) is obvious enough, though Marullus does not see it.

23. Lines 24-27: all that I live by is with the soal. I meddle with no tradesman's matters, nor women's matters, but with all. I am, indeed, sir, a surgeon to old shoes.
ACT I. Scene 1.

NOTES TO JULIUS CAESAR.

ACT I. Scene 2.

-F. I read thus: "all that I line by, is with the Aule: I meddle with no Tradesmen matters, nor womens matters; but wish I am indeed Sir, a Surgeon to old aboos:" a reading which, to my mind, is utterly indefensible. It is quite clear that there is a pun intended on with ast and with all; but that the full stop or colon has been omitted in the Folio, and that wish is a misprint for with all. If wish be joined on to the following sentence, I cannot see what possible meaning it can have. The actor, in speaking the words, must pause after wish, and therefore it would show a most foolish and pedantic adherence to the old text if the very slight alteration adopted by nearly all modern editors were rejected. As to the question of printing "with ast," or "with all," that is a matter of no importance. To the ear the pun is clear enough, and that is the great point to be considered. Many instances might be noticed of this excessively primel and obvious play upon words; in fact, I believe that no one, who has ever been guilty of a pun at all, has failed to make this one.—F. A. M.

24. Lines 28, 29: As proper men as ever trod upon neat's leather.—This expression was proverbial. In The Tempest (II. 2. 62, 78) the drunken Stephano cuts it in two, and mixes the halves up with other familiar phrases: "As proper a man as ever went on four legs," and "any emperor that ever trod on neats' leather."

25. Line 30: his triumph.—This was Caesar's fifth and last triumph, celebrated in honour of his defeat of the sons of Pompey in Spain, at the battle of Munda, March 17th, B.C. 45.

26. Line 47: To see great Pompey pass the streets of Rome.—For a similar elliptical use of the verb to pass compare King John, v. 6. 40: "Passing these flats;" and Richard III. i. 4. 45:

I past'd, methought, the melancholy flood.

Bolito very aptly quotes a parallel expression, Antony and Cleopatra, 1. 4. 30: "To reek the streets at noon."

27. Line 50: Tiber trembled underneath her banks.—A Roman would have said "his banks;" but there is no ground for changing the gender either here or in I. 2. 101 below, as some editors have done. Shakespeare undoubtedly wrote her in both passages.

28. Line 55: That comes in triumph over Pompey's blood.—That is, "over Pompey's offspring;" not, as might be supposed, over Pompey's death or murder. The elder of Pompey's sons, Cæcilius Pompey, was slain after the battle of Munda; but there is no specific reference to that fact in the present passage. Blood, in the sense of relations by blood, or linage descent, is often used by Shakespeare. Compare Richard II. i. 3. 67, 68:

Farewell, my blood; which if to-day thou sheddest, Lament we may, but not revenge thee dead.

This certainly seems to me rather a strained interpretation of the text. "Pompey's blood" may be equivalent here to "Pompey's blood relations;" but I can only find two passages, besides the one quoted, where blood is used by Shakespeare to signify "relations by blood," and not merely "relationship." In the passage from Richard II., quoted above, King Richard is addressing Hereford, and it is evident that blood is there used in a double sense. In I. Henry VI. iv. 5. 16, 17, John Talbot says to his father:

The world will say, he is not Talbot's blood,

That basely fled when noble Talbot stood;

where the expression is simply elliptical of Talbot's blood, though there it might be taken to mean "offspring." The remaining passage is in Richard III. iii. 4. 61-63:

themselves, the conquerors, Make war upon themselves; brother to brother, Blood to blood, self against self;

where blood certainly means blood relationship. As for blood being equivalent to "bloodshed," we may quote Macbeth, iii. 4. 129: "The secret'st man of blood."—F. A. M.

29. Line 66: See whether.—The F. print where, as in v. 4 30 below, and some modern editors have where or wher; but whether is equally common in the early editions when the word is metrically equivalent to a monosyllable (as in ii. 1. 194 below), and, in our day, it had better be read or recited as a disyllable in all cases. The unaccented extra syllable is common enough in Shakespeare's verse.

30. Line 72: the feast of Lupercal.—The Lupercal was a cavern in the Palatine Hill, sacred to the old Italian god Lupercus, who came to be identified with Pan. Virgil refers to it in the Aenid, viil. 344:

sub rupe Lupernal

Parrhasio dictum Panos de more Lyceal.

Here the feast of the Lupercalia was annually celebrated in February. After certain rites and sacrifices, the Lupercus, or priests of Lupercus, ran through the city, wearing only a goat-skin cincture, and striking with thongs of leather all whom they met. This symbolized a purification of the land and the people. The day of the ceremony was called dies februa (from febru, purity), and the month Februarius.

31. Line 78: fly an ordinary pitch.—For pitch as a technical term of falconry compare I. Henry VI. ii. 4. 11:

Between two hawks, which flies the higher pitch;

and for its metaphorical use, as here, Richard II. i. 1. 109:

How high a pitch his resolution soars!

ACT I. Scene 2.

32. Line 4: When he doth run his course.—Compare North's Plutarch! (Life of Cesar): "At that time the feast Lupercalia was celebrated, which in old time men say was the feast of shepherds or herdmen, and is much like unto the feast of Lyceus in Arcadia. But, howsoever it is, that day there are divers noble men's sons, young men, (and some of them magistrates themselves that govern them), which run naked through the city, striking in sport them they meet in their way with leather thongs, hair and all on, to make them give place. And many nobleswomen and gentlewomen also go of purpose to stand in their way, and do put forth their hands to be stricken, as scholars hold them out to their schoolmaster to be stricken with the ferula; persuading themselves that, being with child, they shall have good delivery; and so, being barren, that it will make them to conceive with child. . . . Antonius, who was Consul at that time, was one of them that ran this holy course”
(pp. 96, 96).

33. Line 19: the IDES of March.—In the Roman calendar the Ides fell on the 15th of March, May, July, and October, and on the 15th of the other months.

34. Line 20: that quick spirit that is in Antony.—Similar references to Antony’s reputation for levity and profligacy (e.g., below, II. 1. 188, 189) are skilfully introduced by the dramatist, to make the contrast of his behaviour after the death of Cassius more impressive.

35. Line 20: MERELY upon myself.—This emphatic sense of merely and the adjective merely is common in Elizabethan writers, but it has sometimes been a stumbling-block to editors. For example, Bacon in his 58th Essay (Of Viciabilitate of Things) remarks: “As for configurations and great draughts, they do not merely dis-p eros and destroy” (that is, do not entirely do so); but Montague, Whately, and others, mistaking and perverting the meaning, have changed “and destroy” to “but destroy.” Compare Hamlet, I. 2. 135–137:

O, sir, ’tis an unweeded garden,
That grows to seed; things rank and gross in nature
Possess it merely.

36. Line 42: Which give some soil, perhaps, to my bebaviours.—There is no reason for suspecting the plural to be a misprint. Compare Much Ado, II. 3. 8: “seeing how much another man is a fool when he dedicates his bebaviours to love;” and again, in line 100 of the same scene: “whom she hath in all outward behaviours seemed ever to abhor.” Shakespeare uses the plural in five other passages, but more frequently the singular.

37. Line 52: for the eye sees not itself, &c.—Compare Trolus and Cressida, Ill. 3. 105, 106:

nor doth the eye may be said to see itself.
That most pure spirit of sense, behold itself.

Steevens quotes Sir John Davies, Naso Telpune, 1590:

the mind is like the eye,
Not seeing itself, when other things it sees.

[It may be worth noting that there is a curious optical experiment, by means of which the eye may be said to see itself. If in a darkened room, against any level plain-coloured surface (such as a drawn blind or a distempered wall), a lighted candle be waved vertically in front of the eye, you will presently see, projected on the plain surface behind the candle, a map of the interior of the eye, somewhat magnified, in which the small blood-vessels and a dark cavity, representing the pupil of the eye, can be clearly distinguished.—F. A. M.

38. Line 53: But by reflection by some other things.—
This is the reading of the Pr. and is easily explicable as meaning “only by being reflected by something else.”
Poole, however, changed it to “reflection from some other things;” and Walker made the further alteration of thing for things, which Dyce adopts. [I think there can be no doubt that the clumsy repetition of by is a printer’s mistake for from or in. It is unfortunate that there is no other passage in Shakespeare in which he uses either the verb reflect or the noun reflection with a preposition after it in a similar sense. The plural may be allowed to stand.—F. A. M.]

39. Line 56: mirrors.—Walker, followed by Dyce, reads mirror.

40. Line 60: Except immortal Cassar.—This is said significantly, if not ironically.

41. Line 62: Have wish’d that noble Brutus had his eyes.—Whether he refers to Brutus, or to his friends, his been disputed. On the whole, the former is the preferable explanation, as it avoids the necessity of making his equivalent to their, while it gives as good a sense. The friends of Brutus have wished that he could see himself as he is, or as in the mirror which Cassius would hold up to him.

42. Line 65: Therefore, good Brutus, &c.—Craig (Enlish of Shakespeare, ad loc.) remarks: “The eager, impatient temper of Cassius, absorbed in his own idea, is vividly expressed by his thus continuing his argument as if without appearing to have even heard Brutus’s interrupting question; for such is the only interpretation which his therefore would seem to admit of.”

43. Line 72: a common laugh.—The PF have “common laughter;” emended by Pope, who has been followed by all the recent editors. Lover has been plausibly suggested as in keeping with the context. “A common lover ” would be “everybody’s friend.”

44. Line 77: profess myself.—That is, “make protestations of friendship.”

45. Line 86: Set honour in one eye, &c.—Coleridge says:
“Warburton would read death for both; but I prefer the old text. There are here three things—the public good, the individual Brutus’s honour, and his death. The latter two so balanced each other that he could decide for the first by equipoise; nay—the thought growing—that honour had more weight than death. That Cassius understood it as Warburton is the beauty of Cassius as contrasted with Brutus” (Notes on Shakespeare, p. 102, Harper’s ed.).
Craig remarks: “It does not seem to be necessary to suppose any such change or growth either of the image or the sentiment. What Brutus means by saying that he will look upon honour and death indifferently, if they present themselves together, is merely that, for the sake of the honour, he will not mind the death, or the risk of death, by which it may be accomplished; he will look as fearlessly and steadily upon the one as upon the other.
He will think the honour to be cheaply purchased even by the loss of life; that price will never make him falter or hesitate in clutching at such a prize. He must be understood to set honour above life from the first; that he should ever have felt otherwise for a moment would have been the height of the unheroic.”

46. Line 95: I had as lief not be as live to be.—There is a play upon lief, which was always pronounced and often printed lieve, and line.
ACT I. Scene 2.

NOTES TO JULIUS CAESAR.

47. Line 96: We have both fed as well.—That is, "have been bred as well, brought up as well." Our birth and training have been as good as his. It is a characteristic Roman touch to lay so much stress on physical strength and endurance as Cassius does in this passage.

48. Line 100: For once, upon a raw and gusty day, &c.—Cæsar was a famous swimmer. Wright (Clarendon Press ed.) quotes the following passage from Holland's translation of Suetonius (already referred to by Malone, Var. Ed. vol. xii. p. 15): "At Alexandria being busied about the assault and winning of a bridge where by a sodainie salie of the enemies he was driven, to take a boat, & many besides made hast to get into the same, he lept into the sea, and by swimming almost a quarter of a mile recovered cleare the next ship; bearing up his left hand all the while, for feare the writings which he held therein should take wet, and drawing his rich coatte armour after him by the teeth, because the enemy should not have it as a spoyle." (Life of Julius Cæsar, ed. 1600, p. 26). Plutarch's account makes the feat still more difficult: "The third danger was in the battle by sea, that was fought by the tower of Phar: where meaning to help his men that fought by sea, he leapt from the pier into a boat. Then the Egyptians made towards him with their ears on every side: but he, leaping into the sea, with great hazard saved himself by swimming. It is said, that then, holding divers books in his hand, he did never let them go, but kept them always upon his head above water, and swam with the other hand, notwithstanding that they shot marvellously at him, and was driven somtime to duck into the water; howbeit the boat was drowned presently." (p. 86).

49. Lines 107-109:

The torrent roars; and we did buffet it
With lusty sinnes, throwing it aside,
And stemming it with hearts of controversy.

Compare the spirited description of Ferdinand swimming in Tempest, i. 1. 114-120:

I saw him beat the surges under him,
And ride upon their backs; he trod the water,
Whose enmy he fled aside, and breastrest
The surge most swoth that met him; his bold head
Bove the contentious waves he kept, and oar'd
Himself with his good arms in lusty stroke
To the shore.

50. Lines 113-114:

I, as AXENAS, our great ancestor,
Did from the flames of Troy upon his shoulder
The old Anchises bear.

Compare II. Henry VI. v. 2. 62, 63:

As did Aenas old Anchises bear,
So bare I thee upon my manly shoulders.

51. Line 122: His coward lips did from their colour fly.—The meaning may be simply "lose their colour;" but Craik remarks: "There can, I think, be no question that Warburton is right in holding that we have here a pointed allusion to a soldier flying from his colour." Possibly the dramatist had both ideas in his mind at the same time; and the double meaning of the sentence is intentional.

52. Line 138: Like a COLOSSUS.—For other allusions to the famous Colossus of Rhodes, see I. Henry IV. v. 1. 183, where Falstaff asks Prince Hal to bestride him if he is struck down in the battle; and the Prince replies: "Nothing but a colossus can do thee that friendship;" and Troilus and Cressida, v. 5. 7-9:

bassador Margareon
Hath Doreus prisoner,
And stands colossus-wise, waving his beard, &c.

53. Line 155: wide WALLS.—The Pl. have "wide Walls," which some editors retain. Rowe's emendation of walls is, however, generally adopted.

54. Line 166: ROMEx indeed, and ROOM enough.—There is an evident play on Rome and room, as in iii. 1. 229 below:

No Rome of safety for Octavius yet.

The two words were probably pronounced alike in Shakespeare's day; but that the modern pronunciation of Rome was beginning to be heard appears from I. Henry VI. iii. 1. 51, where the Bishop of Winchester says, "This Rome shall remedy," and Warwick replies, "Room thither, then." For the play on room, compare King John, iii. 1. 190: "I have room with Rome to curse awhile;" and Hawkins, Apollo Shroving, p. 88: "We must have room, more than the whole City of Rome." Dyce, in his Glossary (p. 287), quotes other examples of this pronunciation.

55. Line 167: The ETERNAL devil.—Johnson took eternal to be a misprint or corruption of infernal. Walker (Critical Examination, vol. i. p. 68), followed by Abbott (Grammar, p. 16), regards it as used inaccurately in the sense of infernal. Schmidt explains it as "used to express extreme abhorrence;" as in "eternal villain" (Othello, iv. 2. 180) and "eternal cell" (Hamlet, v. 2. 376). According to Wright and Halliwell's Arcadia Dictionary, eternal is used in the east of England for "eternal, damned;" and the Yankee eternal is probably the same provincialism. In the present passage it seems to be used in this way, or as a familiar intensive.

56. Line 188: by some SENATORS.—Dyce reads senator, which was suggested by Walker.

57. Line 192: Let me have men about me that are FAT.—Compare North's Plutarch (Life of Cæsar): "Cæsar also had Cæsius in great jealousy, and suspected him much: whereupon he said upon a time to his friends, 'what will Cæsius do, think ye? I like not his pale looks.' Another time when Cæsar's friends complained unto him of Antonius and Dolabella, that they pretended some mischief towards him: he answered them again, 'As for those fat men and smooth-combed heads, quothe, 'I never reckon of them; but these pale-visaged and carrion lean people, I fear them most,' meaning Brutus and Cæsius." So also in Life of Brutus: "For, intelligence being brought him one day, that Antonius and Dolabella did conspire against him: he answered, 'That these fat long-haired men made him not afraid, but the lean and whitely-faced fellows,' meaning that by Brutus and Cæsius." (p. 97).

58. Line 220: Why, there was a crown offer'd him, &c.—Compare North (Life of Antonius): "When he [Antony] was come to Cæsar, he made his fellow-runners with him lift him up, and so he did put his laurel crown upon his head, signifying thereby that he had deserved to be king. But Caesar, making as though he refused it, turned away his head. The people were so rejoiced at it, that they all clapped their hands for joy. Antonius again did put it on his head: Caesar again refused it; and thus they were striving off and on a great while together. As oft as Antonius did put this laurel crown unto him, a few of his followers rejoiced at it: and as oft as Caesar refused it, all the people together clapped their hands. . . . Caesar, in a rage, arose out of his seat, and plucking down the collar of his gown from his neck, he shoved it naked, bidding any man strike off his head that would. This laurel crown was afterwards put upon the head of one of Caesar's statues or images, the which one of the tribunes plucked off. The people liked his doing therein so well, that they waited on him home to his house, with great clapping of hands. Howbeit Caesar did turn them out of their offices for it.” In the Life of Caesar, the tearing open his doublet, and offering his throat to be cut, is said to have been in his own house when “the Consuls and Prefects, accompanied with the whole assembly of the Senate, went unto him in the market-place, where he was set by the pulpit for orations, to tell him what honours they had decreed for him in his absence,” and he offended them by “setting still in his majesty, disdainful to rise up unto them when they came in.” The historian adds that, “afterwards to excuse his folly, he imputed it to his disease, saying, ‘that their wits are not perfit which have this disease of the falling evil; when standing on their feet they speak to the common people, but are soon troubled with a trembling of their body, and a sudden dimness and giddiness’” (p. 96).

59. Line 245: the rabblemment shouted.—The F. have shouted, which is clearly a misprint for shouted—the spelling of the word above in “nine honest neighbours shouted.” Johnson and Knight read shouted, which is out of place as expressing “insult, not applause.”

60. Line 256: ‘T is very like:—he hath the failing-sickness.—In the F. there is no point after like, but it is evident from North that Brutus must have known of Caesar’s infirmity: “For, concerning the constitution of his body, he was lean, white, and soft skinned, and often subject to head-ach, and otherwise to the falling-sickness (the which took him the first time, as it is reported, in Corduba, a City of Spain): but yet therefore yielded not to the disease of his body, to make it a cloak to cherish him withal, but contrarily, took the pains of a war as a medicine to cure his sick body, fighting always with his disease, travelling continually, living soberly, and commonly lying abroad in the field” (p. 57).

61. Line 258: I am no true man.—In Shakespeare’s day true man was the familiar antithesis to thief, as honest man now is. Compare (inter alia) Love’s Labour’s Lost, iv. 3. 187: “A true man or a thief,” and Measure for Measure, iv. 2. 49: “Every true man’s apparel fits thy thief.”

62. Line 268: he pluck’d me ope his doublet.—The me is the expletive dative, used generally to give a free and easy tone to the discourse. Compare the confusion due to the use of it in the dialogue between Petruchio and Grumio in The Taming of the Shrew, i. 2. 8-17: “Villain, I say, knock me here soundly,” &c.

The doublet is the English garment so called, which Shakespeare, with his usual carelessness in such matters, claps on the shoulders of his Romans.

63. Line 270: a man of any occupation.—Johnson explains the phrase as in the footnote to the text. Grant White takes it to mean “a man of action, a busy man.” The Clarendon Press edition suggests that both senses may be combined, which is barely possible.

64. Line 282: Ay, he spake Greek.—The absurdity of Cicero’s speaking Greek in a popular assembly is sufficiently obvious; but it is introduced to prepare the way for the little joke, “it was Greek to me.” According to Shakespeare’s authority Casca knew Greek. See the quotation from North in note on iii. 1. 33, p. 147.

65. Line 300: He was quick mettle.—The reading of Collier’s M.3. Corrector is mettled. Walker would read mental on account of the blun, but mettle and metal were used interchangeably in Shakespeare’s time.

66. Line 304: This rudeness is a sauce to his good wit, &c.—Compare Lear, ii. 2. 101-103:

This is some fellow,
Who, having been praised for bluntness, doth affect
A saucy roughness.

67. Line 319: He should not humour me.—Johnson is clearly right in making he refer to Caesar. He explains the passage thus: “Cesar loves Brutus, but if Brutus and I were to change places his love should not humour me, should not take hold of my affection, so as to make me forget my principles” (Var. Ed. xil. p. 24). Warburton says it is a reflection on Brutus’s ingratitude; he renders the sentence thus: “He (Brutus) should not cajole me as I do him” (al supra). Wright is inclined to agree with Warburton, because “Cassius is all along speaking of his own influence over Brutus, notwithstanding the difference of their characters, which made Caesar dislike the one and love the other.” To this Roffe replies: “The chief objection to Warburton’s explanation, in our opinion, is that it seems to leave the mention of Caesar unconnected with what follows. We fancy that this occurred to Wright, and that what we have just quoted is an attempt to meet the objection; but, to our thinking, it is far from successful. If we accept Johnson’s interpretation, he should not humour me naturally follows what precedes, and is naturally followed by what comes after: Caesar should not cajole me as he does Brutus; and I am going to take measures to counteract the influence Caesar has over him.

ACT I. SCENE 3.

68. Line 10: a tempest dropping fire.—The F. reading is “a Tempest-dropping-fire.” Rowe was the first to delete the hyphens.

69. Line 14: anything more wonderful.—That is, “anything more that was wonderful,” as Craik explains it; not “anything more wonderful than usual,” as Abbott, in his Shakespearean Grammar (§ 6), makes it.
NOTES TO JULIUS CAESAR

70. Line 15: YOU KNOW him well by sight. — A “graphic touch” that has needlessly vexed the souls of commentators. Dyce suggests “you’d know him,” and Craik “you knew him” (that is, would have known him); but the slaves had no distinctive dress by which one would recognize them as such.

[The only distinction was that the males were not allowed to wear the toga nor the females the stole; otherwise they were dressed like other poor people of the time, in dark-coloured clothes and cœpides (slippers). It had been proposed in the senate to give them a distinctive dress; but it was decided not to do so, lest they should learn how numerous they were. Cicero in his oration in Pisoneum (88, 92), speaks of vestis servilia.—F. A. M.]

For the context, compare North (Life of Caesar): “Certainly destiny may easier be foreseen than avoided, considering the strange and wonderful signs considered to be seen before Caesar died. For, touching the fires in the element, and spirits running up and down in the night, and also the solitary birds to be seen at noontides sitting in the great market-place, are not all these signs perhaps worth the noting, in such a wonderful chance as happened? But Strabo the philosopher writeth, that divers men were seen going up and down in fire: and furthermore, that there was a slave of the soldiers that did cast a marvellous burning flame out of his hand, insomuch as they said that he had been burnt; but when the fire was out, it was found he had no hurt. Caesar self also doing sacrifice unto the gods, found that one of the beasts which was sacrificed had no heart; and that was a strange thing in nature: how a Beast could live without a heart” (pp. 97, 98).

71. Line 21: GLAS’d upon me. — The F. have “gla’d upon me,” which Pope was the first to correct.

72. Lines 22, 23:
and there were drawn
Upon a heap a hundred ghastly women.

For the use of upon or on, compare Henry V. iv. 6. 18:
Let us on heaps go offer up our lives;

and Exodus viii. 14: “And they gathered them together upon heaps.”
For heap, applied to persons, compare also Richard III. ii. 1. 58: “Among this princely heap,” &c.

73. Line 55: CLEAN from the purpose. — This use of clean is common in the Authorized Version of the Bible. See Psalms lxxvii. 8; Isaiah xxiv. 19; Joshua iii. 17, &c. Compare also Ascham’s Scholemaster (Mayor’s ed. p. 97): “This fault is clean contrary to the first.”

74. Line 43: WHAT NIGHT is this!—Craik prints “what a night is this!” but the omission of the s in such exclamations was not usual. Compare Two Gentlemen of Verona, i. 2. 53, 54:
What fear is she, that knows I am a maid,
And would not force the letter to my view!

and Twelfth Night, ii. 5. 123-129:
Foh, what dicky o’ poison has she dress’d him!
Sir T. And with what wing the staniel checks at it!

75. Line 49: the THUNDER-STONE. — The ancients believed that such a solid body fell with the lightning and did the mischief. It is called broncia by Pliny in his Natural History (xxxvii. 10). Compare Cymbeline, iv. 2. 270, 271:

Guil. Fear no more the lightning-flash.
Arr. Not the all-dreaded thunder-stone.

and Othello, v. 2. 234, 235:
Are there no stones in heaven
But what serve for the thunder?

It is said that the fossil shell known as the belemnite, or finger-stone, gave rise to this superstition. [Broncia has generally been identified with those roundish masses of crystallized iron pyrites (ofphous of iron), often found in the neighbourhood of iron ore, which are still commonly known by the name of thunder-stones. Pliny’s description is as follows: “Broncia is shaped in manner of a Tortoise head: it fallith with a crackle of thunder (as it is thought) from heaven; and if we believe it, quencheth the fire of lightning” (Holland’s Pliny, edn. 1801, vol. ii. p. 625 B.).—F. A. M.]

76. Line 60: CASE yourself in wonder. — The F. have “cast your self in wonder,” which is followed by Collier, Staunton, and the Cambridge editors. Case was proposed independently by Swyfen Jervis and M. W. Williams, and is adopted by Dyce and others. Wright explains “cast yourself in” as “hastily dress yourself in.”

76. Line 65: Why old men FOOL, &c.—The F. reading is “Why Old men, Fools,” &c. The correction was suggested by Lettsom, and is accepted by Dyce, the Cambridge editors, and others. Collier and Staunton read, with Blackstone: “Why old men fools;” that is, why old men become fools. [I think there is a good deal to be said here for the reading of F. I., though Lettsom’s ingenuous conjecture secures an effective antithesis; still the fact that old men, fools, and children were all trying to explain the phenomena and calculating what the various portents meant, would be a circumstance sufficiently unusual for Cassius to mention.—F. A. M.]

78. Line 75: AS doth the lion in the Capitol. — That is, “roars in the Capitol as doth the lion.” Wright suggests that Shakespeare imagined that lions were kept in the Capitol, as they were in the Tower of London.

79. Line 76: A man no mightier than thyself or me. — The grammatical error is not uncommon among intelligent people even now. Than is easily mistaken for a preposition. We can hardly, however, agree with Craik (p. 127), that “the personal pronoun must be held to be, in some measure, emancipated from the dominion or tyranny of syntax.”

80. Line 89: I know where I will wear this dagger, then. — As Craik remarks, it is a mistake to omit the comma after dagger, as some editors do. “Cassius does not intend to be understood that he is prepared to plunge his dagger into his heart at that time, but in that case.”

81. Line 117: HOLD, my hand. — It is curious that some editors omit the comma after Hold; and Craik explains thus: “Have, receive, take hold (of it); there is my hand.” Of course the Hold is merely interjectional, as in Macbeth, ii. 1. 4: “Hold, take my sword;” and many similar passages.

82. Line 198: Pompey’s porch. — This was a magnificent portico of a hundred columns connected with Pompey’s Theatre, in the Campus Martius.
NOTES TO JULIUS CAESAR.

ACT II. Scene 1.

91. Line 13: But for the general.—This use of the general for the community or the people was common. Compare Measure for Measure, ii. 4. 27:

The general, subject to a well-wish’d king;

and Hamlet, ii. 2. 457: “caviare to the general.”

92. Line 15: Crown him!—That.—The use of that, though clear enough (Be that so, suppose that), is exceptional. We do not know of any other instance of the word thus standing alone.

93. Line 24: the upmost round.—This is the only instance of upmost in Shakespeare; and uppermost he does not use at all.

94. Line 34: And kill him in the shell.—Cralk (p. 150) remarks: “It is impossible not to feel the expressive force of the hemistich here. The line itself is, as it were, killed in the shell.”

95. Line 40: the Ides of March.—The F. have “the first of March;” corrected by Theobald. [This is one of the instances where one is obliged to substitute what Shakespeare ought to have written for what he, most probably, did write. See the note of Mr. Aldis Wright in the Clarendon Press ed., where the passage from the Life of Brutus is quoted which led Shakespeare into the error.—F. A. M.]

96. Line 58: My ancestors.—Dyce reads “My ancestor;” but the plural may well enough stand, and most editors retain it; though, strictly speaking, the singular number would be more correct, for there was only one of his ancestors of whom Brutus could have been thinking, and that was Junius Brutus, the first consul, and the expeller of the Tarquins.

141

97. Line 99: March is wasted FIFTEEN days.—This is the early reading, but Theobald and the majority of modern editors change it to “fourteen days.” The text is true to Roman usage, which in such cases counted the current day as complete. Thus in the New Testament, Christ says, “After three days I will rise again;” but the crucifixion was on Friday, and the resurrection early on Sunday morning.

98. Line 66: The GENIUS and the MORTAL INSTRUMENTS. —There has been much dispute over these words, but they probably mean nothing more than the mind or soul and the bodily powers through which it acts. Compare lines 175—177 below:

And let our hearts, as subtle masters do,
Stir up their servants to an act of rage,
And after seem to chide 'em.

According to Johnson, the poet “is describing the insurrection which a conspirator feels agitating the little kingdom of his own mind; when the genius, or power that watches for his protection, and the mortal instruments, the passions, which excite him to a deed of honour and danger, are in council and debate; when the desire of action, and the care of safety, keep the mind in continual fluctuation and disturbance” (Var. Ed. vol. x. p. 39). But though genius elsewhere in Shakespeare has this sense (as in The Comedy of Errors, v. 1. 333:

One of these men is Genius to the other, &c.), it does not suit the present passage, especially when compared with the one quoted, in which hearts is clearly parallel to genius here.

[I must say that I cannot agree with this note. In the first place Shakespeare never uses genius in any other sense than in what may be called its spiritual sense, i.e. that of “a spirit, either good or evil, which governs our actions.” Besides the passage in our text, and that given above from The Comedy of Errors, Shakespeare uses the word genius five times: in Twelfth Night, iii. 4. 143: “His very genius hath taken the infection of the disease;” in Troilus and Cressida, iv. 4. 52, 53:

Mark! you are call’d: some say the Genius so
Cries “Come!” to him that instantly must die;

In Macbeth, iii. 1. 56—57:

and, under him,
My Genius is rebuk’d; as, it is said,
Mark Antony’s was by Caesar;

In The Tempest, iv. 1. 26, 27:

the strongest suggestion
Our worster genius can; and in II. Henry IV. iii. 2. 337, in the sense of the embodied spirit: “a’ was the very genius of famine.” The only one of these passages, in which genius can have anything but the meaning which Johnson gives it, is the one from Twelfth Night; and, as that is in prose, it is difficult to believe that Shakespeare would have written genius had he meant simply spirit or soul. Perhaps the distinction may seem to some persons not of much importance, for the genius, whether good or bad, would act through the soul or spiritual part of the man; but I think it would be a pity to lose sight of the special meaning here—a meaning which it appears always to have had in English literature, at least up to the middle of the seventeenth century—embodying, as it does, a belief which was a very characteristic one. As to the passage below (175—177), Mr. Adams follows Craik in regarding it as the parallel or complement of this; but I cannot see any positive connection between them. There is no distinction in the latter between the spiritual and bodily parts of men; the meaning simply is: “let our hearts (i.e. our feelings) stir us up to an act of rage which afterwards, in our calmer moments, they may seem to disapprove” (see note 110 below); while in the passage before us the struggle is represented as taking place, in one man’s being, between the spirit that is supposed, more or less, to govern the actions, and the mortal part of him (including the will) which puts these actions into force. Mortal probably is used here in the sense of “deadly,” as in Macbeth, i. 5. 42.—F. A. M.]

99. Line 67: the state of man.—F. 1 has “the state of a man;” corrected in F. 2. Knight and Craik, however, retain the a.

On the passage comp. Troilus and Cressida, ii. 3. 184—196:

‘twist his mental and his active parts
Kingdom’d Achilles in commotion rages,
And batters down himself.

100. Line 70: your brother Cassius.—Cassius had married Junia, the sister of Brutus.

101. Line 72: there are more with him.—This word more occurs forty or more times in the early editions of Shakespeare, as in other books of the time. It was regularly used with a plural or collective noun. The only instance of the latter sort in Shakespeare is Tempest, v. 1. 294: “And a more diversity of sounds.” The modern editions generally change the word to more, unless it is required for the rhyme, as in Much Ado, ii. 3. 72—75:

Sing no more ditties, sing no more,
Of dumps so dull and heavy;
The fraud of men was ever so,
Since summer first was sweaty.

(The difficulty in deciding whether or not to retain such forms as more is to know where to draw the line; for we may soon, without intending it, be logically committed to an old-spelling text. Skeat says that more and more were originally “well-distinguished, the former relating to number, the latter to size.”—F. A. M.)

102. Line 83: For, if thou PAST, thy native semblance on.—This, except for the comma after path, is the reading of the Fy. Path is found as a transitive verb in Drayton, and its intransitive use (= walk) is not more peculiar than many other liberties of the kind in Shakespeare. It is possible, however, that it may be a misprint, and various emendations have been proposed. Southern and Coleridge independently suggested put, which Dyce adopts; but it seems a Hibernicism to speak of putting on one’s natural appearance. Other conjectures are pass and had. Johnson well paraphrases the passage: “If thou walk in thy true form.” (There is a verb in Sanskrit, path, path, to go, which comes from the same root, pat, to go, as the Greek περπάτειν, to tread, and our path. In the old slang word still used by thieves, to pad—to go, we have an old cognate form of the verb.—F. A. M.)
103. Line 107: Which is a great way growing on the south, &c.—That is, "which must be far to the south, considering the time of year." It is curious that no commentator has noted that on the 15th of March, or previous to the vernal equinox, the sun would not rise at all to the south of the true east, but a little northward of that point. [It should be noted that during this and the preceding speech the change from night to early dawn is supposed to take place; but, even in Italy, in the middle of March it would not be light at three o'clock in the morning.—F. A. M.]

104. Line 114: No, not an oath! &c.—Compare North (Life of Brutus): "the only name and great calling of Brutus did bring on the most of them to give consent to this conspiracy: who having never taken oaths together, nor taken or given any caution or assurance, nor binding themselves one to another by any religious oaths, they all kept the matter so secret to themselves, and could so cunningly handle it, that notwithstanding the gods did reveal it by manifest signs and tokens from above, and by predictions of sacrifices, yet all this would not be believed" (p. 114).

105. Line 114: the face of men.—This is the Fy. reading, and is retained by most of the recent editors. Warburton proposed fate for face, Mason faith, and Malone faiths.

106. Line 134: the insuppressible metal of our spirits.—The passive sense of insuppression is paralleled by that of sundry other words in 4. See compare insuppressible (inexpressible) in As You Like It, iii. 2. 10:

The fair, the chastest, and inexpressive she;
Incomprehensible (incomprehensible or unknown) in Troilus and Cressida, iii. 3. 198: "th’ incomprehensible deepes;" &c.

107. Line 138: a servile bastardy.—"A special or distinct act of baseness, or of treachery against ancestry and honourable birth" (Craik).

108. Lines 144, 145:

his silver hairs

Will purchase us a good opinion.

Cicero was then about sixty years old. There is a play upon silver and purchase.

109. Line 150: let us not break with him.—Compare North (Life of Brutus): "For this cause they durst not acquaint Cicero with their conspiracy, although he was a man they loved dearly, and trusted best; for they were afraid that he being a coward by nature, and age also having increased his fear, he would quite turn and alter all their purpose, and quench the heat of their enterprise, (the which specially required hot and earnest execution)" (p. 114).

110. Lines 170-180.—One part of this passage has been already alluded to in note 98 above. The point of what Brutus says, when we look at it in entirety, is evident. He is advising a course of deliberate hypocrisy; the conspirators are to try and entrap the sympathies of the people by committing the murder with all due delicacy and decorum, and then pretending to regret it. This is very characteristic advice, and shows that Brutus was quite fit to be the leader of a political party which claimed to be the "popular" one. But it appears that all the great actors who played the part of Brutus, and, naturally enough, sought to make him a sympathetic character, have always omitted this passage on the stage; as well they might, considering their object. —P. A. M.

111. Line 188: Yet I fear him.—Pope, whom Craik follows, reads "Yet I do fear him."

112. Line 187: take thought and die.—Both think and thought are used in this sense. Compare Antony and Cleopatra, iii. 1. 1:

Ces. What shall we do, Enobarbus?

Eno. Think, and die.

See also I. Samuel ix. 5, and Matthew vi. 22. Bacon (Henry VII. p. 230) says that Havis "dyed with thought" (anxiety).

113. Line 192: count the clock.—A palpable anachronism, as the Roman clopdydias, or water-clocks, had no mechanism for striking the hour.

114. Lines 204, 206:

That unicorns may be betray'd with trees,
And bears with glasses, elephants with holes.

Steevens says: "Unicorns are said to have been taken by one who, running behind a tree, eluded the violent push the animal was making at him, so that his horn spared its force on the trunk, and stuck fast, detaining the beast till he was despatched by the hunter" (Var. Ed. vol. xii. pp. 30, 31). Compare Spenser, Faery Queen, ii. 5. 10:

Like as a Lyon, whose imperial powre
A proud rebellious Unicorn defyes,
T' Avoid the rash assault and wrathful stowre
Of his fiers foe, him to a tree applies,
And when him running in full course he spyes,
He slips aslde: the whiles that furious beast
His precious horn, sought of his enemies,
Stikes in the stocks, ne thence can be releas'd.
But to the mighty victor yields a bounteous feast.

There is a similar allusion in Timon of Athens, iv. 3. 339: "wert thou the unicorn, pride and wrath would confound thee and make thine own self the conquest of thy wrath."

Steevens adds (at supra, p. 51): "Bears are reported to have been surprised by means of a mirror, which they would gaze on, affording their pursuers an opportunity of taking a surer aim. This circumstance, I think, is mentioned by Claudian. Elephants were seduced into pitfalls, lightly covered with hurdles and turf, on which a proper bait to tempt them was exposed. See Pliny's Natural History, book vlll."

115. Line 215: Caius Ligarius doth bear Caesar hard.—His real name was Quintus, but the mistake is in North. Compare the Life of Brutus: "Now amongst Pompey's friends, there was one called Caius Ligarius, who had been accused unto Caesar for taking part with Pompey, and Caesar discharged him. But Ligarius thanked not Caesar so much for his discharge, as he was offended with him for that he was brought in danger by his tyrannical power. And, therefore, in his heart he was always his mortal enemy, and was besides very familiar with Brutus, who went to see him being sick in his bed, and said unto him: 'Ligarius in what a time art thou sick!' Ligarius rising up in his bed, and taking him by the right hand, said unto him: 'Brutus,' said he, 'if thou hast any great enterprise in hand worthy of thyself, I am whole.'" (p. 118).
ACT II. Scene 1.

NOTES TO JULIUS CAESAR.

116. Line 219: I have given him reasons.—Dyce adopts Walker's suggestion of reason; but no change is called for.

117. Line 225: Let not our looks put on our purposes.—That is, "such expression as would betray our purposes." Craik compares the exhortation of Lady Macbeth to her husband (I. 5. 84-87):

To beguile the time,
Look like the time; bear welcome in your eye,
Your hand, your tongue: look like the innocent flower,
But be the serpent under it.

See also Macbeth, I. 7. 81, 82:
Away, and mock the time with fairest show:
False face must hide what the false heart doth know.

118. Line 230: the honey-heavy dew of slumber.—The Fv. reading is: "the honey-heavy Dew of slumber." This, with the slight change in the text, is retained by Knight and the Cambridge editors. It is aptly explained by Grant White as "slumber as refreshing as dew, and whose heaviness is sweet." Dyce reads, "the heavy honey-dew of slumber."

119. Line 233: Enter Portia.—Compare North (Life of Brutus): "Now Brutus, who knew very well for that his sake all the noblest, valiantest, and most courageous men of Rome did venture their lives, weighing with himself the greatness of the danger: when he was out of his house, he did so frame and fashion his countenance and looks that no man could discern he had anything to trouble his mind. But when night came that he was in his own house, then he was clean changed: for either care did wake him against his will when he would have slept, or else oftentimes of himself he fell into such deep thoughts of this enterprise, casting in his mind all the dangers that might happen: that his wife lying by him, found that there was some marvellous great matter that troubled his mind, not being wont to be in that taking, and that he could not well determine with himself. . . . This young lady being excellently well seen in philosophy, loving her husband well, and being of a noble courage, as she was also wise: because she would not ask her husband what he allied before she had made some proof by herself: she took a little razor, such as barbers occupy to pare men's nails, and causing her maids and women to go out of her chamber gave herself a great gash withal in her thigh, that she was straight all of a gore blood: and incontinent after a vehement fever took her, by reason of the pain of her wound. Then perceiving her husband was marvellously out of quiet, and that he could take no rest, even in her greatest pain of all she spake in this sort unto him: 'I being, O Brutus,' said she, 'the daughter of Cato, was married unto thee; not to be thy bed-fellow, and companion in bed and at board only, like a harlot, but to be partaker also with thee of thy good and evil fortunes. Now for thy self, I can find no cause of fault in thee touching our match: but for my part, how may I shew my duty towards thee, and how much I would do for thy sake, if I cannot constantly bear a secret mischance or grief with thee, which requireth secrecy and fidelity? I confess, that a woman's wit commonly is too weak to keep a secret safely: but yet Brutus good education, and the company of virtuous men have some power to reform the defect of nature. And for myself, I have this benefit moreover, that I am the daughter of Cato, and wife of Brutus. This notwithstanding, I did not trust to any of these things before, until that now I have found by experience that no pain or grief whatsoever can overcome me.' With those words she shewed him her wound on her thigh, and told him what she had done to prove herself. Brutus was amazed to hear what she said unto him, and lifting up his hands to heaven, he besought the gods to give him the grace he might bring his enterprise to so good pass, that he might be found a husband, worthy of so noble a wife as Portia: so he then did comfort her the best he could:" (pp. 115, 116).

120. Line 246: an angry waperture of your hand.—The Fv. have wafter, which probably indicates the correct pronunciation of the word.

121. Line 251: Is Brutus sick?—This old English use of sick is still current in America. Grant White says here: "For sick, the correct English adjective to express all degrees of suffering from disease, and which is universally used in the Bible and by Shakespeare, the Englishman of Great Britain has poorly substituted the adverb ill."

122. Line 271: I charm you—"I conjure you;" as in Lucrece, 1681, 1682:
And for my sake, when I might charm thee so,
For she that was thy Lucrece, now attend me.

Pope needlessly changed charm to the prosaic charge.

123. Lines 299, 300:

As dear to me as are the ruddy drops
That visit my sad heart.

Some commentators regard this as an anticipation of Harvey's discovery; but the general fact of the circulation of the blood was known centuries before his day, though the details of the process were not understood. Gray has imitated the passage In The Bard, 41:

Dear as the ruddy drops that warm my heart.

124. Line 306: All the charactery of my sad browes.—For charactery compare Merry Wives of Windsor, v. 5. 77:
Fairies use flowers for their charactery.

It will be observed that the word is accentuated as here.

125. Line 315: To wear a kernchief.—The word kercis (French, couvrir, to cover, and chef, head) is here used in its original meaning of a covering for the head. As Malone notes, Shakespeare gives to Rome the manners of his own time, it being a common practice in England for sick people to wear a kernchief on their heads. Compare Fuller's Worthies: "If any there be sick, they make him a posset, and tye a kernchief on his head, and if that will not mend him, then God be merciful to him."

126. Line 322: like an exorcist.—See II. Henry VI. note 89.
ACT II. SCENE 2.

127. Line 2: Thrice hath Calpurnia in her sleep cried out,
   &c.—Compare North (Life of Cæsar): "He heard his wife Calpurnia, being fast asleep, weep and sigh, and put forth many fumbling lamentable speeches: for she dreamed that Cæsar was slain, and that she had him in her arms.

   Inso much that Cæsar rising in the morning, she prayed him, if it were possible, not to go out of the doors that day, but to adjourn the session of the Senate, until another day. And if that he made no reckoning of her dream, yet that he would search further of the sooth-sayers by their sacrifices, to know what should happen him that day. Thence it seemed that Cæsar likewise did fear or suspect somewhat, because his wife Calpurnia until that time was never given to any fear and superstition:
and that then he saw her so troubled in mind with this dream she had. But much more afterwards, when the soothsayers having sacrificed many beasts one after another, told him that none did like them: then he determined to send Antonius to adjourn the session of the Senate. But in the mean time came Decius Brutus, surnamed Albinus, in whom Cæsar put such confidence, that in his last will and testament he had appointed him to be his next heir, and yet was of the conspiracy with Cassius and Brutus: he, fearing that if Cæsar did adjourn the session that day, the conspiracy would be betrayed, laughed at the soothsayers, and reproved Cæsar, saying, 'that he gave the Senate occasion to mis-like him, and that they might think he mocked them, considering that by his commandment they were assembled, and that they were ready willingly to grant him all things, and to proclaim him king of all his provinces of the Empire of Rome out of Italy, and that he should wear his diadem in all other places both by sea and land.
And furthermore, that if any man should tell them from him they should depart for that present time, and return again when Calpurnia should have better dreams, what would his enemies and ill-willers say, and how could they like of his friends' words?'

128. Line 19: Fought upon the clouds.—The Fl. have fight, which Knight and Craik retain. The emendation is due to Dyce.

129. Line 23: Horses did neigh.—Here the 1st Follo has "Horses do neigh," which F 2 corrects.

130. Line 24: And ghosts did shriek and squeal about the streets.—Compare Hamlet, i. 1. 113-120:
   In the most high and palmy state of Rome,
   A little more the mightiest Julia fell,
   The graves stood tenantless, and the sheeted dead
   Did squeak and gibber in the Roman streets:
   As, stars with trains of fire, and dews of blood,
   Disasters in the sun; and the moist star,
   Upon whose influence Neptune's empire stands,
   Was sick almost to doomsday with eclipse.

131. Line 40: We are two lions litter'd in one day.—The Fl. reading is, "We hear," &c. Upton's correction is generally adopted by the editors. Theobald proposed "We were."

132. Line 67: To be afraid to tell greybeards the truth.
   —See Midsummer Night's Dream, note 114.

133. Line 72: That is enough to satisfy the senate; i.e.
   "That should be enough, as I look at it, or as I choose to admit."

134. Line 76: my state. —Here the Fl. have state, as in III. 2. 192 below:
   Even at the base of Pompeius Statius;
   but the editors, with few exceptions, substitute statua, which was common both in poetry and prose in Elizathanian writers. See II. Henry VI. note 189.

135. Lines 79-81:
   And these
   Does she apply for warnings and portents
   Of evils imminent.

We have printed this passage as in Dyce. In Fl. lines 79 and 80 are printed as one line, making an Alexandrine in a very awkward portion of the speech. Fl. read "And Evils imminent." Hamner first substituted the obvious correction Of. There can be little doubt that And was a repetition by the printer in mistake from the line above.

F. A. M.

136. Line 89: For Tinctures, stains, relics, and cognizance.—"Tinctures and stains are understood both by Malone and Steevens as carrying an allusion to the practice of persons dipping their handkerchiefs in the blood of those whom they regarded as martyrs. And it must be confessed that the general strain of the passage, and more especially the expression 'shall press for tinctures,' &c., will not easily allow us to reject this interpretation. Yet does it not make the speaker assign to Cæsar by implication the very kind of death Calpurnia's apprehension of which he professes to regard as visionary? The pressing for tinctures and stains, it is true, would be a confutation of so much of Calpurnia's dream as seemed to imply that the Roman people would be delighted with his death —

Many lusty Romans
Came smiling, and did bathe their hands in it.

Do we refine too much in supposing that this inconsistency between the purpose and the language of Decius is intended by the poet, and that in this brief dialogue between him and Cæsar, in which the latter suffers himself to be so easily won over—persuaded and relieved by the very words that ought naturally to have confirmed his fears—we are to feel the presence of an unseen power acting on both the unconscious prophet and the blinded victim?" (Craik).

137. Lines 102, 103:
   for my dear, dear love
   To your proceeding bids me tell you this;
   i.e. "For my loving concern for your welfare or success leads me to take the liberty to say this." He apologizes for venturing to advise Cæsar, but excuses it on the ground of affectionate interest.

138. Line 104: And reason to my love is liable. —"Reason, or propriety of conduct and language, is subordinate to my love" (Johnson); or, as Rolfe gives it, "my love leads me to indulge in a freedom of speech that my reason would restrain."

139. Line 114: 't is strucken eight.—For the anachronism see note 115 above. Elsewhere we find, as forms of the participle, struck, strook (a variation in spelling), storken, and striken.

140. Lines 128, 129:

That every like is not the same, O Caesar, The heart of Brutus yearns to think upon!

"It grieves me to the heart to think that to be like a thing is not necessarily to be really that thing." It is hard for Brutus to play a part—to pretend to be other than he is. For his friend Cassius nothing is easier than to suit his behaviour to his immediate purpose.

For yearns the Pl. have earnest, which is merely a different spelling of the word. Rolfe quotes examples of it from Spenser (Faerie Queene, lii. 10. 21):

And ever his faint heart much earnest at the sight
(where the sense is the same as here); and i. 6. 25: "he for revenge did earnest." Shakespeare uses yearns both transitively and intrinsically. For an example of the former see Henry V. iv. 3. 28:

It yearns me not [grieves or troubles me not] if men my garments wear.

ACT II. SCENE 4.

141. Line 20: Enter the Soothsayer.—Rowe changed Soothsayer to Artemidorus. It must be confessed that the introduction of the two characters is singular; but at the beginning of the next scene we have speeches assigned to them in immediate succession, and in the heading of that scene the Pl. also give "Enter Artemidorus, Publius, and the Soothsayer." It is therefore improbable that there is any misprint or corruption in the original text; and under these circumstances we are not justified in making any alteration.

142. Line 42: Brutus hath a suit, &c.—This is said lest the boy, whose presence she has for the moment forgotten, should suspect to what she refers in the line above:

The heavens speed thee in thine enterprise!

ACT III. SCENE 1.

143. The Capitol.—Here, as in Hamlet (ii. 2. 109) and Antony and Cleopatra (ii. 6. 18), the assassination of Caesar is represented as occurring in the Capitol instead of the Curia of Pompey. Compare North (Life of Brutus): "Furthermore, they [the conspirators] thought also, that the appointment of the place where the council should be kept was chosen of purpose by divine providence, and made all for them. For it was one of the porches about the theatre, in the which there was a certain place full of seats for men to sit in; where also was set up the image of Pompey, which the city had made and consecrated in honour of him, when he did beautify that part of the city with the theatre he built, with divers porches about it. In this place was the assembly of the Senate appointed to be, just on the fifteenth day of the month March, which the Romans call, Idus Martias: so that it seemed some god of purpose had brought Caesar thither to be slain, for revenge of Pompey's death" (p. 116).

See also the Life of Caesar: "And one Artemidorus also, born in the Isle of Gnidos, a Doctor of rhetoric in the Greek tongue, who by means of his profession was very familiar with certain of Brutus' confederates; and therefor knew the most part of all their practices against Caesar, came and brought him a little bill, written with his own hand, of all that he meant to tell him. He, marking how Caesar received all the supplications that were offered him, and that he gave them straight to his men that were about him, pressed nearer to him, and said: 'Caesar, read this memorial to your self, and that quickly, for they be matters of great weight, and touch you nearly.' Caesar took it of him, but could never read it, though he many times attempted it, for the number of people that did salutate him" (p. 90).

144. Line 8: WHAT touches us OURSELF shall be last serv'd.

—Collier's MS. Corrector reads:

That touches us OURSELF shall be last serv'd;

and Craik adopts the unnecessary change.

145. Line 13: I wish your enterprise to-day may thrive.

—Compare North (Life of Brutus): "Another Senator, called Popilius Lamps, after he had saluted Brutus and Cassius more friendly than he was wont to do, he rounded [that is, whispered] softly in their ears, and told them: 'I pray the gods you may go through with that you have taken in hand; but withal, dispatch, I readie you, for your enterprise is bewrayed.' When he had said, he presently departed from them, and left them both afraid that their conspiracy would out" (p. 117).

146. Line 18: Look, how he makes to Caesar; MARK him.—Abbott (Grammar, § 465) here would make mark a disyllable, or rather prolonged in utterance (so as to = meark), thereby introducing a most ridiculous and unnecessary vice in elocution. The line is obviously defective of one syllable; but, most probably, this deficiency is intentional; the hiatus being filled up by the gesture of the actor, and the broken nature of the line adding to its dramatic force. Compare Richard II. note 170.

147. Line 21: Cassius or Caesar never shall turn back.—Malone proposed to read: "Cassius or Caesar," &c.; but, as Ritson remarks, "Cassius says, if the plot be discovered, at all events either he or Caesar shall never return alive; for, if the latter cannot be killed, he is determined to slay himself." Craik objects that to turn baek cannot mean to return alive, or to return in any way;" but Rolfe quotes Richard III. iv. 4. 184:

Ere from this war thou turn a conqueror;

and As You Like It, iii. 1. 6-8:

bring him dead or living
Within this twelvemonth, or turn thou no more
To seek a living in our territory.

148. Line 22: Cassius, be constant, &c.—Compare North (Life of Brutus): "And when Cassius and certain other clapped their hands on their swords under their gowns to draw them, Brutus, marking the countenance and gesture of Lamps, and considering that he did use himself rather like an humble and earnest sutor, then like an acuser, he said nothing to his companion (because there were many amongst them that were not of the conspiracy), but with a pleasant countenance encouraged Cassius. And immediately after, Lamps went from Caesar, and kissed his hand: which showed plainly that it was for some matter concerning himself that he had held him so long in talk" (p. 118).
NOTES TO JULIUS CAESAR.

ACT III. Scene 1.

149. Line 29: He draws Mark Antony out of the way. — This is also from North (Life of Brutus): "Trebonius on the other side drew Antonius aside, as he came into the house where the Senate sat, and held him with a long talk without" (p. 118).

150. Line 31: Are we all ready! — The Fi. give these words to Caesar, in whose mouth they are palpably inappropriate. Etion proposed to join them to the speech of Cinna, but Collier's MS. Corrector gives them to Cassius. This is better, and is adopted by Craik, Dyce, and others.

151. Line 33: Most high, most mighty, and most puissant Caesar. — Compare North (Life of Brutus): "So when he was set, the conspirators flocked about him, and amongst them they presented one Tullius Cicero, who made humble suit for the calling home again of his brother that was banished. They all made as though they were intercessors for him, and tooke Caesar by the hands, and kissed his head and breast. Caesar at the first, simply refused their kindness and entreaties: but afterwards, perceiving they still pressed on him, he violently thrust them from him. Then Cicero with both his hands plucked Caesar's gown over his shoulders, and Cassius that stood behind him, drew his dagger first and stroke Caesar upon the shoulder, but gave him no great wound. Caesar feeling himself hurt, took him straight by the hand he held his dagger in, and cried out, in Latin: 'O traitor Cassius, what dost thou!' Cassius on the other side cried in Greek, and called his brother to help him. So divers running on a heap together to fly upon Caesar, he looking about him and over his head, saw Brutus with a sword drawn in his hand ready to strike at him; then he let Cassius's hand go, and casting his gown over his face, suffered every man to strike at him that would. Then the conspirators thronging one upon another, because every man was desirous to have a cut at him, so many swords and daggers lighting upon one body, one of them hurt another, and among them Brutus caught a blow on his hand, because he would make one in murthering of him, and all the rest also were every man of them bloodied. Caesar being slain in this manner, Brutus, standing in the midst of the house, would have spoken, and stayed the other Senators that were not of the conspiracy, to have told them the reason why they had done this fact. But they, as men both afraid and amazed, fled, one upon another's neck in haste to get out at the door, and no man followed them. For it was set down, and agreed between them, that they should kill no man but Caesar only, and should intreat all the rest to look to defend their liberty" (p. 119).

152. Line 36: These coucblings. — Hamner substitutes coucblings; but as Singer notes, coucching had the same sense. He cites Hulot: "Cowche, like a dogge; procunbo, prosterno." Compare also Génétsa, xli. 14: "Lesachar is a strong ass couching down between two burdans."

153. Line 39: Into the law of children. — The Fi. reading is "the laws of children," an obvious misprint, first corrected by Johnson. Like most of the palpable errors of the type in the early editions, it has sometimes been defended, though very lamely.

154. Line 48: Low-crooked curtsey. — Collier's MS. Corrector reads "Low-crouched," but Singer again quotes Hulot, who has "crookes-backed or crouches-backed."

155. Line 47: Know, Caesar doth not wrong, &c. — Ben Jonson, in his Discoveries, speaking of Shakespeare, says: "Many times he fell into those things could not escape laughter: as when he said in the person of Caesar, one speaking to him, 'Cæsar, thou dost me wrong,' he replied, 'Cæsar did never wrong but with just cause.'" And he ridicules the expression again in his Staple of News: "Cry you mercy; you never did wrong but with just cause." Craik believes that the words stood originally as Jonson has quoted them; but it is more probable, as Collier has suggested, that Jonson was quoting only from memory, which, as he himself says, was "shaken with age now, and afooth." If the passage stood at first as he gives it, the author must have subsequently modified it, and the present text should not be meddled with; but the American editor Hudson adopts the reading proposed by Tyrwhitt:

Meet, Caesar, thou dost me wrong.

Cæsar, know, Caesar doth not wrong, but with just cause.

Nor without cause will he be satisfied.

156. Line 61: For the rebellialng of my banished brother.

— In the next speech we have the substantive repeat used in the same sense of recalling from exile. See also Coriolanus, v. 5. 6:

Repeal him with the welcome of his mother;

and Lucrce, 640:

I sue for exil'd majesty's repeal.

157. Line 67: And men are flesh and blood, and apprhesive. — For this use of apprhesive compare Falstaff's eulogy on sack in II. Henry IV. iv. 3. 107: "makes it [the brain] apprhesiative, quick, forgetive."

158. Line 77: Et tu, Brute! — It is curious that no ancient Latin authority has been discovered for this exclamation which Shakespeare has made classical. It is found in the True Tragedy of Richard Duke of York, which was first printed in 1596, and on which the Third Part of Henry VI. was founded; and also in a poem by S. Nicholson, entitled Acoelastus his Afterwit, printed in 1600. In both we find the line, Et tu Brute! Wilt thou stab Caesar too?

It may have been taken from the Latin play on the death of Caesar which we know to have been acted at Oxford in 1582, though no copy has come down to our day. In Suetonius (l. 83) Caesar is made to say to Brutus Kai e pisto (And thou too, my son?).

159. Line 94: and let no man abide this deed. — We find abide again in this sense (be held responsible for) in iii. 2. 119 of the present play:

If it be found so, some will bear abide it,
or pay dearly for it.

160. Line 101: Why, he that cuts off twenty years of life, &c. — Some editors transfer this speech to Casius, though the P. have the prefix Cask. It is in keeping with what Casca has said in i. 3. 101 above:

So every bondman in his own hand bears, &c.

161. Lines 111-118:

How many ages hence
Shall this our lofty scene be acted o'er
In states unborn and accents yet unknown?

Of course this is put into the mouth of Cassius for stage effect; but it is not out of keeping with the character, or the circumstances, as some have asserted. That Cassius should think of the great political significance of Caesar’s downfall is natural enough; and also of the prominent place the event would have in histories and historical dramas to be written in future times and far-off lands. This “prophesying after the event” is no unfamiliar thing in poetry, and is historically justifiable whenever, as here, we have to admit the possibility that the idea might occur to the speaker. In this particular instance it seems naturally suggested, and is impressively carried out in the following speeches.

162. Line 113: In states unborn.—F. 1 has state, and in line 115 [omitted]. Both errors were corrected in F. 2.

163. Line 136: THOROUGH the hazards of this untrod state.—The form thorough = through is common enough in old writers. Compare v. 1. 110 of this play: “Thorugh the streets of Rome.” But that is an imperfect line; a better instance is in Midsummer Night’s Dream, ii. 1. 106, 107:

And thorough this dimtemperation we see
The seasons alter.

164. Line 143: I know that we shall have him well to friend.—The guileless confidence of Brutus that Antony will join their faction is characteristic of the man, as the shrewd misgivings of Cassius are of him. Brutus, as we have seen, is inclined to think others as honest and disinterested as he is himself; but Cassius is an experienced politician, who has learned how selfish the great majority of men are.

165. Line 163: The choice and master spirits of this age.—It is curious that CRAIK should think that choice may be a substantive. It is beyond all question an adjective in the same construction as master.

166. Line 171: As fire drives out fire, so pity pity.—The old proverbial comparison is a favourite one with Shakespeare. See Romeo and Juliet, i. 2. 46: “one fire burns out another’s burning;” Two Gentlemen of Verona, ii. 4. 192:

Even as one heat another heat expels;

and Coriolanus, iv. 7. 54: “One fire drives out one fire.”

Some commentators think it necessary to point out here that fire is to be regarded as a dissyllable in the first place, and as a monosyllable in the second; but to make such a distinction in pronouncing this word on the stage is practically impossible. Owing to our system of vowels such words as fire, spire, sire, &c., must be pronounced as if spelt f-er, spi-er, si-er; but if we pronounced the i as it is pronounced in Italian, we could make such words monosyllables or disyllables at pleasure. In English we have no choice between pronouncing fire as a dissyllable f-er, or as fir, if we wish to make a monosyllable of it. But the best plan is to regard the i, in such words as fire, sire, &c., as = é, and when we want to make them monosyllables we must treat the disess as we treat a portamento in music.—F. A. M.]

167. Line 174: Our arms in strength of malice, &c.—F. 1 reads thus:

Our Arms in strength of malice, and our Hearts
Of Brothers temper, do receive you in,

With all kinde due, good thoughts, and reverence.

Pope reads “exempt from malice;” Capell and Dyce, “no strength of malice;” Collier’s MS. Corrector, “in strength of welcome;” and Singer suggests, “in strength of amity.” Knight, the Cambridge editors, Grant White, and Rolfe follow the Folio. Grant White remarks: “The difficulty found in this passage, which even Mr. Dyce seems to be corrupt, seems to result from a forgetfulness of the preceding context:

Though now we must appear bloody and cruel,
As by our hands and this our present act,
You see we do, yet see you but our hands
And this the bleeding business they have done:
Our hearts you see not: they are pitiful;
And pity to the general wrong of Rome, &c.

So (Brutus continues) our arms, even in the intensity of their hatred to Caesar’s tyranny, and our hearts in their brotherly love to all Romans, do receive you in.”

168. Lines 177, 178:

Your voice shall be as strong as any man’s,
In the disposing of new dignities.

There spoke the politician Cassius, who assumes that Antony is more likely to be influenced by the promise of a share in the substantial profits of the revolution than by the fine patriotism of Brutus.

169. Line 189: THOUGH last, NOT least in love, yours, good Trebonius.—This has been quoted in support of the Quarto reading in Lear, i. 1. 86:

Although the last not least in our dear love;

but the expression Though last not least was an alliterative commonplace at that time, and no argument can be based upon it where the comparative merits of two texts are concerned.

170. Line 196: Shall it not grieve thee dearer than thy death?—The use of dear in expressions like this (and “dearest toe” in Hamlet, i. 2. 182, &c.) is easily explained. The word simply expresses intensity of feeling or interest, whether in the way of love or hate; or, in other words, it “imports the excess, the utmost, the superlativae, of that to which it is applied.” Compare Richard II. note 78.

171. Line 206: crimson’d in thy LETH’—That is, “in the stream that bears thee to oblivion.” Collier’s MS. Corrector alters leth to death; but Collier, in his second edition, restores leth, which is also the reading of Knight, Dyce, Staunton, the Cambridge editors, Grant White, and Rolfe.

172. Lines 207, 208:

O world! thou wast the forest to this HART;
And this, indeed, O world, the HEART of thee.

Coleridge would not believe that Shakespeare wrote these lines, and endeavoured to show that the conceit was not introduced as conceits generally are in plays, namely, as a mere verbal quibble; but there is no good reason for doubting that the passage is genuine. It is in the fashion of the time, which Shakespeare had not then outgrown—if, indeed, he ever did outgrow it completely—and it follows naturally enough from the preceding lines, with their picture of the slain har// and the bloody huntsman. As Rolfe notes, the same quibble occurs in As You Like It, il. 2. 200, and Twelfth Night, 1. 1. 21; both of which plays, it may be added, were written about the same time as Julius Caesar. Compare Richard II. note 115.
NOTES TO JULIUS CAESAR.

173. Line 258: PRODUCE his body to the market-place.—It will be seen that produce is here used in its original Latin sense of bear forth; but this does not show, as some have supposed, anything more than a schoolboy acquaintance with Latin. The market-place was of course the Forum. Compare I. Henry VI. ii. 2. 4, 5: Bring forth the body of old Salisbury And here advance it in the market-place.

174. Line 241: Have all true rites.—Dyce follows Pope in reading "due rites;" but the change is unnecessary and prosaic.

175. Line 258: Woe to the hands, &c.—The F. have hand; but the plural is in accordance with line 158 above: "Now, whilst your purpled hands," &c.

176. Line 262: the limbs of men.—The old reading may be corrupt, but the case is not clear enough to justify a change. Hamer reads kind for limbs; Warburton, line; Johnson, lines or limbs (that is, bloodhounds); Collier's MS. Corrector, loins; Staunton, tombs; and Dyce, limbs. Walker suggests times, and Grant White sons.

177. Line 271: With Ate by his side come hot from hell.—Craik observes that "this Homeric goddess had taken a strong hold of Shakespeare's imagination;" as is shown by his repeated references to her. Compare Much Ado, i. 1. 293: "the infernal Ate;" Love's Labour's Lost, v. 2. 694: "More Ate, more Ates!" and King John, ii. 1. 63: An Ate, stirring him to blood and strife.

178. Line 273: the dogs of war.—Steele, in the Tatler (No. 137), suggests that by the dogs of war Shakespeare probably meant "fire, sword, and famine." He compares Henry V. i. Chorus, 5-8:

Then should the warlike Harry, like himself, Assume the port of Mars; and at his heels, Leash'd in like hounds, should famine, sword and fire Crouch for employment.

See also I. Henry VI. iv. 2. 10, 11:

You tempt the fury of my three attendants, Lean famine, quartering steel, and climbing fire.

179. Line 283: FOR mine eyes.—P. 1 has "from mine eyes," which F. 2 corrects. Dyce alters Began in the next line to Begin.

180. Line 289: No Rome of safety for Octavius yet.—There is a play on Rome and room, as in 1. 2. 150 above. See note 54.

ACT III. SCENE 2.

181.—For this scene and the next compare North (Life of Brutus): "Now at the first time, when the mutter was newly done, there were sudden outcries of people that ran up and down the city, the which indeed did the more increase the fear and tumult..." But when they saw they slew no man, neither did spoil or make havoc of anything, then certain of the Senators, and many of the people, emboldening themselves, went to the Capitol unto them. There, a great number of men being assembled together one after another, Brutus made an oration unto them, to win the favour of the people, and to justify that they had done. All those that were by said they had done well, and cried unto them that they should boldly come down from the Capitol: whereupon Brutus and his companions came boldly down into the market-place. The rest followed in troupe, but Brutus went foremost, very honourably compassed in round about with the noblest men of the city, which brought him from the Capitol, through the market-place, to the pulpit for orations. When the people saw him in the pulpit, although they were a multitude of rakehels of all sorts, and had a good will to make some stir: yet, being sabbamed to do it, for the reverence they bare unto Brutus, they kept silence to hear what he would say. When Brutus began to speak, they gave him a silent audience: howbeit, immediately after, they shewed that they were not all contented with the mutter. For when another, called Cinna, would have spoken, and began to accuse Caesar, they fell into a great uproar among them, and marvellously reviled him; insomuch that the conspirators returned again into the capitol. There Brutus, being afraid to be besieged, sent back again the noblemen that came thither with him, thinking it no reason that they, which were no partakers of the mutter, should be partakers of the danger..." Then Antonius, thinking good his testament should be read openly, and also that his body should be honourably buried, and not in hugger-mugger, 1 lest the people might thereby take occasion to be worse offended if they did otherwise: Cassius stoutly spake against it. But Brutus went with the motion, and agreed unto it: wherein it seemeth he committed a second fault. For the first fault he did, was when he would not consent to his fellow conspirators, that Antonius should be slain: and therefore he was justly accused, that thereby he had saved and strengthened a strong and grievous enemy of their conspiracy. The second fault was, when he agreed that Caesar's funerals should be as Antonius would have them, the which indeed marred all. For first of all, when Caesar's testament was openly read among them, whereby it appeared that he bequeathed unto every citizen of Rome 75 drachmas a man; and that he left his gardens and arbours unto the people, which he had on this side of the river Tiber, in the place where now the temple of Fortune is built; the people then loved him, and were marvellous sorry for him. Afterwards, when Caesar's body was brought into the market-place, Antonius making his funeral oration in praise of the dead, according to the ancient custom of Rome, and perceiving that his words moved the common people to compassion, he framed his eloquence to make their hearts yearn the

1 Compare Hamlet, iv. 5. 81, 84:

and we have done but grumly

In hugger-mugger to inter him.
NOTES TO JULIUS CAESAR.

ACT III. Scene 2.

more; and taking Caesar's gown all bloody in his hand, he laid it open to the sight of them all, shewing what a number of cuts and holes it had upon it. Therewithal the people fell presently into such a rage and mutiny, that there was no more order kept amongst the common people. For some of them cried out, 'Kill the murderers;' others plucked up forms, tables, and stalls about the market-place, as they had done before at the funerals of Clodius; and having laid them all on a heap together, they set them on fire, and thereupon did put the body of Caesar, and burnt it in the midst of the most holy places. And furthermore, when the fire was thoroughly kindled some here, some there, took burning firebrands, and ran with them to the murderers' houses that killed him, to set them on fire. Howbeit the conspirators foreseeing the danger before, had wisely provided for themselves, and fled. But there was a poet called Cinna, who had been no partaker of the conspiracy, but was always one of Caesar's chiefest friends: he dreamed, the night before that Caesar bad him to supper with him, and that, he refusing to go, Caesar was very importunate with him, and compelled him; so that at length he led him by the hand into a great dark place, where being marvellously afraid, he was driven to follow him in spite of his heart. This dream put him all night into a fever; and yet notwithstanding, the next morning when he heard that they carried Caesar's body to burial, being ashamed not to accompany his funerals, he went out of his house, and thrust himself into the press of the common people, that were in a great uproar. And because some one called him by his name Cinna: the people thinking he had been that Cinna who in an oration he made had spoken very evil of Caesar, they, falling upon him in their rage, slew him outright in the market-place" (p. 122).

182. Line 12: Be patient till the last, &c.—Hazlitt says that the speech of Brutus "certainly is not so good as Antony's." To this Knight replies: "In what way is it not so good? As a specimen of eloquence, put by the side of Antony's, who can doubt that it is tame, passionless, severe, and therefore ineffective? But as an example of Shakespeare's wonderful power of characterization, it is beyond all praise. It was the consummate artifice of Antony that made him say, 'I am no orator, as Brutus is.' Brutus was not an orator. He is a man of just intentions, of calm understanding, of settled purpose, when his principles are to become actions. But his notion of oratory is this:"

And the reason of our Caesar's death.

And he does show the reason. He expects that Antony will speak with equal moderation—all good of Caesar—no blame of Caesar's murderers; and he thinks it an advantage to speak before Antony. He knew not what oratory really is. But Shakespeare knew, and he painted Antony."

Warburton remarks that the style of the speech of Brutus is an "imitation of his famed Iaconic brevity." Compare North (Life of Brutus): "But for the Greek tongue, they do note in some of his epistles, that he counterfeited that brief compendious manner of speech of the Lacedemonians. As when the war was begun, he wrote unto the Pergamians in this sort: 'I understand you have given Dolabella money: if you have done it willingly, you confess you have offended me; if against your wills, shew it then by giving me willingly.' Another time again unto the Samians: 'Your councils be long, your dolings be slow, consider the end.' And in another Epistle he wrote unto the Patareans: 'The Xanthians despising my good will, have made their country a grave of despair, and the Patareans that put themselves into my protection, have lost no jot of their liberty: and therefore, whilst you have liberty, either choose the judgment of the Patareans, or the fortune of the Xanthians.' These were Brutus' manner of letters, which were honored for their brevity" (p. 107).

183. Line 17: Censure me in your wisdom.—The meaning of censure, if not clear in itself, is made so by the equivalent judge at the end of the sentence. Compare the use of the substantive in Hamlet, i. 3. 69:

Takes me in his censure, but reserve thy judgment.

184. Line 41: The question of his death.—A statement of the reasons why he was put to death; or the answer to any question that may be asked concerning it.

185. Lines 42-44: his glory not extenuated, wherein he was worthy; nor his offences enforced, for which he suffered death.—Again, in Antony and Cleopatra, v. 2. 125, we have enforce, in the sense of exaggerated, opposed to extenuate:

We will extenuate rather than enforce.

186. Line 57: Shall now be crown'd in Brutus.—The word now was not in the F., but was inserted by Pope, and has been generally adopted by the editors.

188. Line 66: Save I alone.—Compare v. 5. 69 of this play: "Save only he." This is one of many illustrations of the loose syntax of the Elizabethan time.

189. Line 70: I am beholding to you.—This word beholding is often used by other writers of the time instead of beheld. Craik has shown that the latter is probably a corruption of gehaelden, the perfect participle of the Anglo-Saxon healden, to hold, whence its meaning of held, bound, or obliged.

190. Line 70: to BURY Caesar.—Compare the reference in Coriolanus (iii. 3. 61) to "the holy churchyard." Would Bacon have been guilty of such anachronisms? [It is true that the Romans usually cremated the bodies of their dead in Caesar's time, but burial was the general practice up to the later period of the Republic, and afterwards in the case of children and of persons struck by lightning. Marius was buried, but Sulla was cremated. The urns containing the ashes and bones of the dead were always placed in a sepulchre. It is worth remarking that in the well-known speech of Hamlet to his father's ghost he uses the word 'burnt' (I. 4. 48, 49):"

the sepulchre:

Wherein we saw thee quietly burnt.

But Hamlet's father was buried, not cremated.—F. A. M.]
NOTES TO JULIUS CAESAR.

ACT IV. Scene 1.

203.—The heading of the scene in the F. is simply "Enter Antony, Octavius, and Lepidus;" but it is evident that they are supposed to be in Rome. Lepidus is sent to Caesar's house for the will, and is told that, on his return, Antony and Octavius will be "or here or at the Capitol." The triumvirs actually met on a small island in the river Rhenus (now the Reno), near Bononia (the modern Bologna). Compare North (Life of Antony): "Thereupon all three met together (to wit, Caesar, Antonius, and Lepidus) in an island environed round about with a little river, and there remained three days together. Now as touching all other matters they were easily agreed, and did divide all the empire of Rome between them, as if it had been their own inheritance. But yet they could hardly agree whom they would put to death: for every one of them would kill their Enemies, and save their Kinsmen and friends. Yet at length, giving place to their greedy desire to be revenged of their Enemies, they spurred all reverence of Blood, and holiness of friendship at their feet. For Caesar left Cicero to Antonius will, Antonius also forsook Lucius Caesar, who was his Uncle by his Mother; and both of them together suffered Lepidus to kill his own Brother Paulus. Yet some Writers affirm, that Caesar and Antonius requested Paulus might be slain, and that Lepidus was contented with it. In my Opinion there was never a more horrible, unnatural, and crueler change then this was. For thus changing murther for murther, they did as well kill those whom they did forsake and leave unto others, as those also which others left unto them to kill: but so much more was their wickedness and cruelty great unto their friends, for that they did put them to death being innocents, and having no cause to hate them." (p. 169).

204. Line 5: YOUR sister's son.—According to Plutarch, the man was Lucius Caesar, and Mark Antony was the son of his sister. Upton suggested that Shakespeare wrote "You are his sister's son," but it is more probable that he got the relationships confused.

205. Line 22: To groan and sweat under the business.—The triply liable pronunciation of business, which its derivation and orthography require, was not lost in Shakespeare's day, though beginning to disappear. Compare Richard II. ii. 1. 217.

206. Line 27: And graze IN common.—Crall adopts the reading of Collier's MS. Corrector: "And graze on commons.

207. Line 37: On objects, arts, and imitations.—The line is not improbably corrupt, but no satisfactory emendation has been proposed. Theobald and Dyce read:

On object arts and imitations;
and Staunton has:

On objects, erts, and imitations, defining objects as "things thrown away as useless." This reading is adopted by the Cambridge editors. [There seems to me no necessity for altering the text at all; the passage describes a man utterly devoid of originality, content with the objects, erts, and fashions or imitations which others have pursued or adopted for a long time, till they have become stale or obsolete to most men. Objects is a favourite word of Shakespeare, and used by him with a very wide range of meaning; to change it to such an etymological abortion as objects seems to me a fantastic act of critical acrobatics.—F. S. M.]

209. Line 64: Our best friends made, and our best means stretch'd out.—This is the reading of F. 2; F. 1 having only

Our best Friends made, our means stretcht.

Malone suggested

Our best friends made, our means stretch'd to the utmost.

ACT IV. SCENE 2.

209. Line 7: In his own change, or by ill officers.—Either because of some change on his own part, or from some fault on the part of his officers. Warburton wished to read charge, and Johnson officers, neither of which is an improvement on the original text.

210. Line 22: like horses hot at hand.—"That is, apparently, when held by the hand, or led; or rather, perhaps, when acted upon only by the rein" (Crain). Compare Henry VIII. v. 3. 21-24:

those that tame wild horses

Face 'em not in their hands to make 'em gentle,

But stop their mouths with stubborn bits, and spur 'em,

Till they obey the manage.

211. Line 23: They fall their crests.—Compare Troilus and Cressida, i. 3. 379, 380:

... make him fall

His crest.

Crain says that this transitive use of fall "is not common in Shakespeare," but Rolfe remarks that it occurs sixteen times.

212. Line 50: Lucius, do you the like; &c.—F. 1 reads thus:

Lucius, do you the like, and let no man

Come to our Tent, till we have done our Conference.

Let Lucius and Titinius guard our doors.

Crain transposed Lucius and Lucius, which mends the measure and removes the absurdity of associating a servant-boy and an officer of rank in the guarding of the door. Cassius sends his servant Pindarus with a message to his division of the army, and Brutus sends his servant Lucius on a similar errand. The Folio itself confirms this correction, since it makes Lucilius oppose the intrusion of the Post, and at the close of the conference Brutus addresses "Lucilius and Titinius," who had evidently remained on guard together all the while. Knight and the Cambridge editors nevertheless retain the old reading.

ACT IV. SCENE 3.

213.—with this scene compare North (Life of Brutus):

"Therefore, before they fell in hand with any other matter, they went into a little chamber together, and 152 bade every man avoid, and did shut the doors to them. Then they began to pour out their complaints one to the other, and grew hot and loud, earnestly accusing one another, and at length fell both a weeping. Their friends that were without the chamber, hearing them loud within and angry between themselves, they were both amazed and afraid also, lest it would grow to further matter; but yet they were commanded that no man should come to them. Notwithstanding, one Marcus Phantius (Favonius), that had been a friend and a follower of Catilina while he lived, and took upon him to counterfei a philosopher, not with wisdom and discretion, but with a certain bedlam and frantic motion: he would needs come into the chamber, though the men offered to keep him out. But it was no boot to let Phantius, when a mad mood or toy took him in the head: for he was a hot haisty man, and sudden in all his doings, and cared for never a senator of them all. Now, though he used this bold manner of speech after the profession of the Cynic philosophers, (as who would say, Dogs) yet his boldness did no hurt many times, because they did but laugh at him to see him so mad. This Phantius at that time, in despite of the door-keepers, came into the chamber, and with a certain scoffing and mocking gesture, which he counterfeited of purpose, he rehearsed the verses which old Nestor said in Homer:

My Lords, I pray you hearken both to me,

For I have seen me years than suchis three.

Cassius fell a-laughing at him: but Brutus thrust him out of the chamber, and called him dog and counterfeit Cynic. Howbeit his coming in brake their strife at that time, and so they left each other" (pp. 134, 135).

214. Line 2: You have condemned and noted Lucius Pella, &c.—On this matter compare North (Life of Brutus): "The next day after, Brutus, upon complaint of the Sardians, did condemn and note Lucius Pella for a defamed person, that had been a Prefect of the Romans, and whom Brutus had given charge unto: for that he was accused and convicted of robbery, and pittery in his office. This judgment much disliked Cassius, because he himself had secretly (not many days before) warned two of his friends, attainted and convicted of the like offences, and openly had cleared them: but yet he did not therefore leave to employ them in any manner of service as he did before. And therefore he greatly reproved Brutus, for that he would shew himself so straight and severe, in such a time as was meet to bear a little then to take things at the worst. Brutus in contrary manner answered, that he should remember the Idea of March, at which time they slew Julius Caesar, who neither pillor nor pollied the country, but only was a favourer and subornor of all these that did rob and spoil, by his countenance and authority" (p. 135).

215. Line 4: my letter.—F. 1 has "my Letters," corrected in F. 2. Dyce and some others retain the plural, and change was in the next line to were; but it is more likely that a letter should have been added to letter than that were should have been misprinted was.

216. Line 9: Let me tell you, Cassius, you yourself.—Capell and Dyce read "And let me tell you," &c. (The line is deficient in a syllable, but there is no necessity to add anything. The speaker pauses before answering. The addition of And is incredibly weak. — F. A. M.]
NOTES TO JULIUS CAESAR.

ACT IV. Scene 3.

217. Line 20: What villain touch’d his body, &c. — That is, “who that touched his body was such a villain,” &c. Compare v. 4. 2 below: “What bastard doth not!”

218. Line 28: HAY not me. — The F. have “beast not me,” which Theobald corrected.

219. Line 37: Away, SLYTCH man! — Compare iv. 1. 12 above:

This is a slight, unmeritable man;
and Othello, ii. 3. 279: “so slight so drunken, and so indiscreet an officer.”

220. Line 45: Must I OBSERVE you? — “Must I be obsequious to you, or treat you as a superior?” Rolfe compares II. Henry IV. iv. 4. 30:

For he is gracious, if he be observ’d
(that is, “treated with deference” or “with due regard to his rank.”)

221. Line 54: of NOBLE men. — Collier’s MS. Corrector changes this early reading to “of abler men,” and is followed by Dyce. Wright remarks: “Brutus says noble because it is what he wishes Cassius to be.”

[Dyce accepts Collier’s emendation “abler men” without any hesitation. Craik strongly supports it, and Staunton, in his note on the passage, calls it “a very plausible emendation.” Collier, in his Notes and Emendations (p. 401), justifies this emendation by reference to the previous speech of Cassius, iv. 3. 30-52:

I am a soldier, I,
Older in practice, abler than yourself.
To make conditions.

He adds afterwards: “Cassius had said nothing about ‘noble men,’ and his reply to the above has reference to what he did actually utter;” but Cassius has said nothing about “abler men” in its general and abstract sense — “more capable,” but in a particular sense, with reference to the selection of persons for the offices at his disposal (to make conditions; and see foot-note on conditions). According to Collier’s argument we ought to expect neither noble nor abler, but better, for that is the epithet which Brutus resents so strongly (see above, line 51).

Moreover noble — pronounced, as it should be, emphatically — is a very appropriate word here, as it contrasts strongly with slight applied to Cassius by Brutus above (line 37). This emendation seems to me, like so many of those made in Collier’s MS. copy, to be just such a one as a person, going through the plays with his pencil, would make on the spur of the moment, because it was what he thought Shakespeare ought to have written. — F. A. M.]

222. Line 75: By any INDIRECTION. — By any dishonest course, any methods not “straightforward.” Compare the adjective in I. Henry IV. iv. 5. 185: “indirect crook’d ways.”

223. Line 80: To look such RASCAL COUNTERS from his friends. — “To refuse this vile money to his friends.” Rascal was originally the hunter’s term for a lean and worthless deer, and was then applied metaphorically to human beings, like so many other names and epithets of inferior animals. Counters were round pieces of metal used in arithmetical computations. Compare Winter’s Tale, iv. 3. 38: “I cannot do’t without counters.” In the present passage the word is used contemptuously.

224. Lines 81, 82:

Be ready, gods, with all your thunderbolts,
Dash him to pieces!

The F. have the comma after thunderbolts; but Collier and one or two others omit it. Craik thinks that dash is the infinitive with to omitted; but Rolfe is clearly right in regarding it as the imperative: “Be ready, gods, with all your thunderbolts and dash him to pieces.”

225. Line 89: A flatterer’s would not, though they do appear. — Collier’s MS. Corrector needlessly changes do to did.

226. Line 102: PLUTUS’ mine. — The F. have “Pluto’s Mine;” as “Plutoz gold” in Troilus and Cressida, iii. 3. 197.

227. Line 106: dishonour shall be HUMOUR; i.e. “Even dishonourable conduct (referring either to the bribery or to the behaviour of Cassius in this quarrel) shall be excused as a mere caprice.” Craik suggests that humour is a misprint for honour, and Grant White agrees with him. The antithesis would be natural enough, but the text is equally natural and expressive, and quite as likely to be what Shakespeare wrote.

228. Line 110: you are yoked with a LAMB. — Pope changed lamb to man. The reference is of course to Brutus himself, though occasionally misunderstood. [Certainly lamb does not seem a very appropriate word here, for Brutus scarcely resembled that innocent and frisky animal. But the commonplace emendation man does not mend matters, and, at the best, the imagery here is slightly confused; for the parallel between a lamb and a finit that gives fire when struck, is scarcely a happy one; though finit is certainly descriptive enough of the nature of Brutus. After all, it is most likely that the reading of the Folio is the right one; and that the author may have intended to use a somewhat exaggerated similitude; there being in his mind, as there often was, a double idea. He meant Brutus to say that he had the gentleness of a lamb in his nature, as well as that slowness to anger which comes rather from a firm and resolute disposition than from a gentle one. — F. A. M.]

229. Line 119: Have not you love enough to bear with me. — This is the reading of the F. Pope, followed by some other editors, reads “Have you not,” &c.

230. Line 138: COMPANION, hence! — For this contemptuous use of companion, compare II. Henry VI. iv. 10. 33: “Why, rude companion,” &c.; and see Midsummer Night’s Dream, note 7. The word is found in this sense as late as the middle of the last century; for instance, in Smollett’s Roderick Random (A.D. 1748): “Scurvy companion! Saucy tarpaulin! Rude, impertinent fellow!”

231. Lines 152-155:

IMPATIENT of my absence,
And grief that young Octavius with Mark Antony
Have made themselves so strong; — for with her death
That tidings came.

153
Craik remarks: "This speech is throughout a striking exemplification of the tendency of strong emotion to break through the logical forms of grammar, and of how possible it is for language to be perfectly intelligible, sometimes, with the grammar in a more or less chaotic or uncertain state." Some critics have nevertheless wished to correct the syntax by changing Impatient to Impatience.

232. Line 158: And, her attendants absent, swallowed fire.—Compare North (Life of Brutus): "And for Porcia, Brutus’ Wife, Nicolaus the Philosopher, and Valerius Maximus do write, that she determining to kill herself (her parents and friends carefully looking to her to keep her from it), took hot burning coals and cast them into her mouth, and kept her mouth so close that she choked herself" (p. 161).

233. Line 173: That by proscription and bills of outlawry, &c.—Compare North (Life of Brutus): "After that, these three, Octavius Caesar, Antonius, and Lepidus made an agreement between themselves, and by those articles divided the provinces belonging to the empire of Rome among themselves, and did set up bills of proscription and outlawry, condemning two hundred of the noblest men of Rome to suffer death, and among that number Cicero was one" (p. 128).

234. Line 179: Cicero is dead.—To fill out the measure Steevens reads, "Ay, Cicero is dead." Abbott (Grammar, § 460) regards the preceding one as a dissyllable. (It is a mercy that a race of actors educated by Dr. Abbott have not been let loose on the world; for, were they to follow his eccentric rules of pronunciation, our ears would be assailed on the stage with a kind of book-keeping to which even the slapshod elocution of our day would seem a grateful melody. This line is one of those that need no patching; the pause amply supplies the place of the missing syllable.—P. A. M.)

235. Line 194: I have as much of this in art as you.—Malone explains in art as "in theory," but Craik, better, as "acquired knowledge, or learning, as distinguished from natural disposition. This is, however, only a more exact statement of what Malone probably meant.

236. Line 509: Come on refresh’d, new-added, and encourag’d.—For the original reading, "new-added," Dyce and Singer independently suggested "new-aided," which is plausible if any change be called for. Collier’s MS. Corrector has "new-hearted," which Craik adopts.

237. Line 289: Which we will niggard with a little rest.—Craik remarks that this is probably the only instance in the language of niggard as a verb; but Rolfe points out another in Sonnet i. 12:

And, tender curst, makest waste in niggarding.

238. Line 221: Farewell, god Messalas!—Hammer would read "Now, farewell," and Walker, Fare you well.

239. Line 256: Canst thou hold up thy heavy eyes a while, &c.—F. 2 muddles the passage as follows:

Canst thou hold up thy instrument a strain or two,
And touch thy heavy eyes a while.

240. Line 272: Where I left reading.—Compare North

(Life of Brutus): "Brutus was a careful man, and slept very little, both for that his diet was moderate, as also because he was continually occupied. He never slept in the daytime, and in the nights no longer then the time he was driven to be alone, and when everybody else took their rest. But now whilst he was in war, and his head ever bustily occupied to think of his affairs and what would happen, after he had slumbered a little after supper, he spent all the rest of the night in dispatching of his weightiest causes; and after he had taken order for them, if he had any leisure left him, he would read some book till the third watch of the night, at what time the captains, petty captains, and colonels, did use to come to him. So, being ready to go into Europe, one night very late (when all the camp took quiet rest) as he was in his tent with a little light, thinking of weighty matters, he thought he heard one come in to him, and casting his eye towards the door of his tent, that he saw a wonderful strange and monstrous shape of a body coming towards him, and said never a word. So Brutus boldly asked what he was, a god or a man, and what cause brought him thither? The spirit answered him, 'I am thy evil spirit, Brutus; and thou shalt see me by the city of PHILIPPIES.' Brutus being no otherwise afraid, replied again unto it: 'Well, then I shall see thee again.' The Spirit presently vanished away; and Brutus called his men unto him, who told him that they heard no noise, nor saw anything at all" (p. 130).

See also the Life of Caesar: "he thought he heard a noise at his tent-door, and looking towards the light of the lamp that waxed very dim, he saw a horrible vision of a man, of a wonderfull greatness and dreadfull look, which at the first made him marvellously afraid. But when he saw that it did him no hurt, but stood by his bed-side, and said nothing; at length he asked him what he was. The image answered him: 'I am thy ill Angel, Brutus, and thou shalt see me by the City of PHILIPPIES.' Then Brutus replied again, and said, 'Well, I shall see thee.' Therewithal, the spirit presently vanished from him" (pp. 103, 104).

Concerning the introduction of the Ghost, Utriel (Shakespeare’s Dramatic Art) asks: "What can justify apparitions and spirits in an historical drama? And in any case, why is it that the ghost of Caesar appears to Brutus, whose designs, apparently at least, are pure and noble, rather than to Cassius, his sworn enemy? Because, though they appear to be such, they are not so in reality; the design is not really pure which has for its first step so arrogant a violation of right. Moreover, Caesar had been more deeply wronged by Brutus than by Cassius. Brutus, like Coriolanus, had trampled under foot the tenderest and noblest affections of humanity for the sake of the phantom honour of free citizenship. Brutus, lastly, was the very soul of the conspiracy; if his mental energies should be paralysed, and his strong courage unnerved, the whole enterprise must fail. And so, in truth, it went to pieces, because it was against the will of history—that is, against the eternal counsels of God. It was to signify

1 That is, full of care. Compare Richard III, i. 3, 56:
By him that rais’d me to this careful height
From that contented hap which I enjoy’d.
NOTES TO JULIUS CÆSAR.

ACT IV. Scene 3.

this great lesson that Shakespeare introduced the ghost upon the stage. Only once, and with a few pregnant words, does the spirit appear; but he is constantly hovering in the background, like a dark thunder-cloud, and is, as it were, the offended and threatening spirit of history itself. It is with the same purpose that Shakespeare has introduced spectral apparitions into another of his historical pieces—Richard III. Both dramas belong to the same historical grade; they both represent important turning-points in the history of the world—the close of an old, and the commencement of a new state of things—and in such times the guiding finger of God is more obviously apparent than at others.

ACT V. Scene 1.

241. Line 14: Their bloody sign of battle is hung out.—North (Life of Brutus) says: “The next morning, by break of day, the signal of battle was set out in Brutus’ and Cassius’ camp, which was an arming scarlet cost.” (p. 159).

242. Line 20: I do not cross you; but I will do so.—The American editor Hudson explains the text thus: “That is, ‘I will do as I have said,’ not ‘I will cross you.’” At this time Octavius was but twenty-one years old, and Antony was old enough to be his father. . . . The text gives the right taste of the man, who always stood firm as a post against Antony, till the latter finally knocked himself to pieces against him.” Mr. Aldis Wright also believes that the passage is intended “to bring out the character of Octavius, which made Antony yield.” To this Rolfe replies: “We may be alone in our opinion (the editors generally make no comment here), but we believe that both Hudson and Wright are wrong. We can see neither truth nor point in saying ‘I do not cross you, but I will do what you say crosses you.’ We take it that Octavius yields to Antony, and does it readily, with a play upon cross: ‘I do not cross you (in Antony’s sense of the word), but I will cross you (in the sense of crossing over to the other side of the field);’ and with the word he does cross over. According to Plutarch he commanded the left wing, and this makes the play agree with the history. It is also confirmed by the context. So far from settling himself in opposition to Antony, Octavius in his very next speech asks the former whether they shall give sign of battle, and when Antony says no he at once accepts this decision and gives orders accordingly.

243. Line 54: But for your words, they rob the Hycla seek.—Hycla in Sicily was proverbial in ancient times for its honey. We have another allusion to it in I. Henry IV. i. 2. 47: “the honey of Hycla.”

244. Line 44: O you fatterers!—Some editors drop you for the sake of the metre.

245. Line 58: Caesar’s three and thirty wounds.—Theobald changed this to “three and twenty;” the number given by Plutarch and Suetonius; but Shakespeare is careless in these numerical matters.

246. Line 60: die more honourably.—The Pf. have “more honourably;” but this is probably a misprint for “more honourable.”

247. Line 61: A PERVERSH schoolboy, worthless of such honour.—As Dyce (Glossary) remarks: “Perversh appears to have generally signified during Shakespeare’s days ‘silly, foolish, trifling,’ &c. though no doubt the word was formerly used, as now, in the sense of ‘pettish, perverse,’ &c.” For a very clear instance of the former sense (which some have been inclined to doubt) see I. Henry VI. v. 3. 186, 186, where, to Suffolk’s suggestion that Margaret shall send a kiss to the King as a “loving token,” she replies: I will not so presume

To send such Perversh tokens to a king.

248. Line 90: our former ensign.—Rowe changed former to foremost (as in the corresponding passage in North’s Plutarch quoted below), and Collier’s MS. Corrector to forward; but other examples of this use of former have been cited by Dyce and others.

On the passage, compare North (Life of Brutus): “When they raised their Camp, there came two Eagles that flying with a marvellous force, lighted upon two of the foremost Ensigns, and always followed the soldiers, which gave them meat, and fed them, until they came near to the city of PHILIPPI; and there one day only before the battle, they both flew away.” (p. 127).

249. Line 97: Let’s reason with the worst that may befall.—See the life of Brutus: “There Cassius began to speak first, and said: ‘The gods grant us, O Brutus, that this day we may win the field, and ever after to live all the rest of our life quietly one with another. But sith the gods have so ordained it, that the greatest and chiefest things amongst men are most uncertain, and that if the battle fall out otherwise to-day than we wish or look for, we shall hardly meet again, what art thou then determined to do, to fly, or die?’ Brutus answered him, being yet but a young man, and not over greatly experienced in the world, ‘I trust (I know not how) a certain rule of philosophy, by the which I did greatly blame and reprove Cato for killing himself, as being no lawful nor godly set, touching the gods: nor concerning men, valiant; not to give place and yield to divine providence, and not constantly and patiently to take whatsoever it pleases him to send us, but to draw back and fly: but being now in the midst of the danger, I am of a contrary mind. For if it be not the will of God that this battle fall out fortunate for us, I will look no more for hope, . . . but will rid me of this miserable world, and content me with my fortune’” (p. 140).

250. Line 101: Even by the rule of that philosophy, &c.—The passage reads thus in F. 1:

Even by the rule of that Philosophy,
By which I did blame Cato, for the death
Which he did give himself, I know not how:
But I do finde it Cowardly, and vile,
For feare of what might fall, so to prevent
The time of life, arming my selfe with patience,
To stay the prouidence of some high Powers,
That gouerne vs below.

It has been pointed in various ways by the modern editors. Knight and Dyce make I know not how . . . the time of life a parenthesis. Craik connects I know not how, &c. with the preceding words: “I know not how it is, but I do finde it, by the rule of that philosophy, &c., cowardly and vile, &c.” The Cambridge editors follow Crack. Collier puts a period after himself, as in the text. This seems the simplest arrangement, the meaning being: "I am determined to do, or act, by the rule of that philosophy, &c." Then he adds: "I know not why, but I think it cowardly to commit suicide for fear of what may happen—rather arm myself to endure whatever fate may have in store for me. To stay of course means "to await."

251. Line 108: The time of life.—That is, "the full time," "the normal period of life;" but Collier's MS. Corrector, in his medlessome way, changes time to term, and in the next line he reads those high powers, which is a triffe more plausible.

252. Line 111: No, Cassius, no! &c.—Crack remarks: 'There has been some controversy about the reasoning of Brutus in this dialogue. Both Steevens and Malone conceive that there is an inconsistency between what he here says and his previous declaration of his determination not to follow the example of Cato. But how did Cato act? He slew himself that he might not witness and outlive the fall of Utica. This was, merely 'for fear of what might fall,' to anticipate the end of life. It did not follow that it would be wrong, in the opinion of Brutus, to commit suicide in order to escape any certain and otherwise inevitable calamity or degradation, such as being led in triumph through the streets of Rome by Octavius and Antony."

ACT V. SCENE 2.

253. —With this and the following short scenes, compare the Life of Brutus in North's Plutarch: "Then Brutus prayed Cassius he might have the leading of the right wing, the which men thought was far meetest for Cassius, both because he was the elder man, and also for that he had the better experience. But yet Cassius gave it him, and willed that Messala (who had charge of one of the warriest legions they had) should be also in that wing with Brutus. . . . In the meantime Brutus, that led the right wing, sent little bills to the colonels and captains of private bands, in the which he wrote the word of the battle."

"First of all, he (Cassius) was marvellous angry to see how Brutus' men ran to give charge upon their enemies, and tarried not for the word of the battle, nor commandment to give charge: and it grieved him beside, that after he had overcome them, his men fell straight to spoll, and were not careful to compass in the rest of the enemies behind: but with tarrying too long also, more than through the valliantness or foresight of the captains his enemies, Cassius found himself compassed in with the right wing of his enemy's army. Whereupon his horsemen brake immediately, and fled for life towards the sea. Furthermore, perceiving his footmen to give ground, he did what he could to keep them from flying, and took an ensign from one of the ensign-bearers that fled, and stuck it fast at his feet: although with much ado he could scant keep his own guard together. So Cassius himself was at length compelled to fly, with a few about him, unto a little hill, from whence they might easily see what was done in all the plain: howbeit Cassius himself saw nothing, for his sight was very bad, saving that he saw (and yet with much ado) how the enemies spoiled his camp before his eyes. He saw also a great troupe of horsemen, whom Brutus sent to aid him, and thought that they were his enemies that followed him: but yet he sent Titinius, one of them that was with him, to go and know what they were. Brutus' horsemen saw him coming afar off, whom when they knew that he was one of Cassius' chiefest friends, they shouted out for joy, and they that were familiarly acquainted with him lighted from their horses, and went and embraced him. The rest compassed him in round about on horseback, with songs of victory, and great rushing of their harness, so that they made all the field ring again for joy. But this marred all. For Cassius, thinking indeed that Titinius was taken of the enemies, he then spake these words: 'Desiring too much to live, I have lived to see one of my best friends taken, for my sake, before my face.' After that, he got into a tent where nobody was, and took Pindarus with him, one of his bondmen whom he reserved ever for such a pinch, since the cursed battle of the PARTHIANS, where Cassius was slain, though he notwithstanding scaped from that overthrow: but then, casting his cloak over his head, and holding out his bare neck unto Pindarus, he gave him his head to be stricken off. So the head was found severed from the body: but after that time Pindarus was never seen more. Whereupon some took occasion to say that he had slain his master without his commandment. By and by they knew the horsemen that came towards them, and might see Titinius crowned with a garland of triumph, who came before with great speed unto Cassius. But when he perceived, by the cries and tears of his friends which tormented themselves, the misfortunes that had chanced to his captain Cassius by mistakenly, he drew out his sword, cursing himself a thousand times that he had tarried so long, and slew himself presently in the field. Brutus in the meantime came forward still, and understood also that Cassius had been overthrown: but he knew nothing of his death till he came very near to his camp. So when he was come thither, after he had lamented the death of Cassius, calling him the last of all the ROMANS, being impossible that ROMAN should ever breed again so noble and valiant a man as he: he caused his body to be buried, and sent it to the city of TRREBURG, fearing lest his funerals within the camp should cause great disorder."

"There was the son of Marcus Cato slain, valiantly fighting among the lusty youths. For notwithstanding that he was very weary and over-harried, yet would he not therefore fly; but manfully fighting and laying about him, telling aloud his name, and also his father's name, at length he was beaten down amongst many other dead bodies of his enemies, which he had slain round about him. So there were slain in the field all the chiefest gentlemen and nobility that were in his army, who valiantly ran into any danger to save Brutus' life: amongst whom there was one of Brutus' friends called Lucullus, who seeing a troop of barbarous men making no reckoning of all men else they met in their way, but going all together right against Brutus, he determined to stay them" with the hazard of his life, and being left behind, told them that he was Brutus: and because they should believe him, he prayed them to bring him to Antonius, for he said he was afraid of Caesar, and that he did trust Antonius better. These barbarous men, being very glad of this good hap, and thinking themselves happy men, they carried him in the night, and sent some before unto Antonius, to tell him of their coming. He was marvellous glad of it, and went out to meet them that brought him. . . . In the meantime Lucilius was brought to him, who stoutly with a bold countenance said: 'Antonius, I dare assure thee, that no enemy hath taken nor shall take Marcus Brutus alive, and I beseech God keep him from that fortune: for whereasover he be found, alive or dead, he will be found like himself.' . . . Lucilius' words made them all amazed that heard him. Antonius on the other side, looking upon all them that had brought him, said unto them: 'My companions, I think ye are sorry you have failed of your purpose, and that you think this man hath done you great wrong: but I assure you, you have taken a better booty than that you followed. For instead of an enemy, you have brought me a friend: and for my part, if you had brought me Brutus alive, truly I cannot tell what I should have done to him. For I had rather have such men my friends than mine enemies. Then he embraced Lucilius, and at that time delivered him to one of his friends in custody; and Lucilius ever after served him faithfully, even to his death.'
NOTES TO JULIUS CAESAR.

'Furthermore, Brutus thought that there was no great number of men slain in battle: and to know of the truth of it, there was one called Statilius, that promised to go through his enemies, for otherwise it was impossible to go see their camp: and from thence, if all were well, he would lift up a torch-light in the air, and then return again with speed to him. The torch-light was lift up as he had promised, for Statilius went thither. Now Brutus seeing Statilius tarry long after that, and that he came not again, he said: 'If Statilius be alive, he will come again.' But his evil fortune was such that, as he came back, he lighted into his enemies' hands and was slain. Now the night being so spent, Brutus as he sat bowed towards Clitus, one of his men, and told him somehow in his ear: the other answered him not, but fell a-weeping. Thereupon he proved Dardanus, and said somewhat also to him: at length he came to Volumnius himself, and speaking to him in Greek, prayed him for the studies' sake which brought them acquainted together, that he would help him to put his hand to his sword, to thrust it in him to kill him. Volumnius denied his request, and so did many others: and amongst the rest, one of them said, there was no tarrying for them there, but that they must needs fly. Then Brutus rising up, 'We must fly indeed, but it must be with our hands, not with our feet.' Then taking every man by the hand, he said these words unto them with a cheerful countenance: 'It rejoiceth my heart, that none of my friends hath failed me at my need, and I do not complain of my fortune, but only for my country's sake: for as for me, I think myself happier than they that have overcome, considering that I leave a perpetual fame of virtue and honesty, the which our enemies the conquerors shall never attain unto by force or money; neither can let their posterity to say that they, being naughty and unjust men, have slain good men, to usurp tyrannical power not pertaining to them.' Having so said, he prayed every man to shift for himself, and then he went a little aside with two or three only, among the which Strato was one, with whom he came first acquainted by the study of rhetoric. He came as near to him as he could, and taking his sword by the hilt with both his hands, and falling down upon the point of it, ran himself through. Others say that not he, but Strato (at his request) held the sword in his hand, and turned his head aside, and that Brutus fell down upon it, and so ran himself through, and died presently. Messala, that had been Brutus' great friend, afterwards became Octavius Caesar's friend: so, shortly after, Caesar being at good leisure, he brought Strato, Brutus' friend unto him, and weeping said: 'Caesar, behold, here is he that did the last service to my Brutus.' Caesar welcomed him at that time, and afterwards he did him as faithful service in all his affairs as any GREEK else he had about him, until the battle of Actium' (pp. 140-141).

ACT V. SCENE 3.

254. Line 41: Now be a FREEMAN.—We have printed freeman here as one word, as it is no doubt equal to the Latin libertus or libertini, the equivalent of freeman, i.e. a slave who has obtained or been given his freedom. Compare what Findar is says below (line 47), So, I am free; by which he means, apparently, that he has obtained his freedom through the death of Cassius.

255. In the passage above, III. 2. 55, "to live all free men," where some editors hyphen free men, as if it were equal to the Latin liberti, we prefer to print the words free men as two words: free having the ordinary sense of one who enjoys liberty but is not, necessarily, a liberated slave.—F. A. M.

256. Line 63: here, take thou the HILTS.—Rolfe notes that Shakespeare uses hilts with reference to a single weapon five times, hilt three times. For another instance of the plural, see Richard III. i. 4. 160: "with the hilts of thy sword."

257. Line 65: As in thy red rays thou dost sink to night.—Some editors read to-night, but Craik well says that "a far nobler sense is given to the words by taking sink to night to be an expression of the same kind as sink to rest." There is no hyphen in the Sp.

258. Line 86: But hold thee, take this garland on thy brow.—Here the analogy of other passages shows that Craik is wrong in making hold thee equivalent to hold, in I. 3. 117 above (see note 81), meaning "but hold" or "but stop;" and that it is rather to be interpreted, as Dyce gives it, as "but have thou, receive thou." Compare Taming of the Shrew, iv. 4. 17: "hold thee that to drink;" and Winter's Tale, iv. 4. 661: "yet hold thee, there's some boot." In these passages, as in sundry others, thee seems to be colloquially used for "thou."

259. Line 99: The last of all the Romans.—Rowe, whom Dyce follows and defends, reads "Thon last, &c. North (see extract above) has the expression the last of all the Romans; and though it does not occur in an apostrophe, as here, it is probable that Shakespeare copied it. Rhe-
NOTES TO JULIUS CAESAR.

ACT V. Scene 3.

torically the old reading is quite as appropriate as the modern one.

259. Line 104: to Thassos send his body.—The Ey. have Tharsus, which is obviously a misprint for Thassos, the name in North, though Thassos, which the Cambridge editors substitute, is the classical form of the name. Thassos was an island in the Aegean Sea.

260. Line 105: His funerals.—North uses the plural, which is also found in Titus Andronicus, i. 1. 381. Elsewhere Shakespeare has funeral, except in the Midsummer Night’s Dream, i. 1. 14:

Turn melancholy to funerals, where it is a true plural. On the other hand, Shakespeare uses nuptial for nuptials several times. See Much Ado, note 266.

ACT V. Scene 4.

262. Line 17: I’ll tell the news.—The Folio reading is “I’ll tell thee news;” corrected by Pope.

ACT V. Scene 5.

263. Line 19: And, this last night, here in Philippi fields.—Compare North (Life of Caesar): “The second battle being at hand, this spirit appeared again unto him, but spake never a word. Thereupon Brutus, knowing that he should die, did put himself to all hazard in battle, but yet fighting could not be slain” (p. 104). See also Life of Brutus: “The Romans called the valley between both camps, the Philippi Fields” (p. 137).

264. Line 33: Farewell to thee, too, Strato.—Countryman, &c.—The Ey. read: “Farewell to thee, to Strato, countrymen;” which was corrected by Theobald.

265. Line 62. Ay, if Mecenas will prefer me to you.—Prefer seems to have been the usual phrase for recommending a servant. Compare Bacon, Advancement of Learning, ii. 21. 1: “And if it be said, that the cure of men’s minds belongeth to sacred divinity, it is most true; but yet moral philosophy may be preferred unto her as a wise servant and humble handmaid.”

266. Line 63: This was the noblest Roman of them all.—Compare North (Life of Brutus): “For it was said that Antonius spake it openly divers times, that he thought, that of all them that had slain Caesar, there was none but Brutus only that was moved to do it, as thinking the act commendable of itself; but that all the other conspirators did conspire his death for some private malice or envy, that they otherwise did bear unto him” (p. 130).

267. Line 71: He only, in a general honest thought, &c.—Craig follows Collier’s MS. Corrector in reading “a generous honest thought,” but general is simply an anticipation of “to all.”

268. Line 73: His life was gentle, and the elements, &c.—There is a passage resembling this in Drayton’s poem, The Baron’s Wars, published in 1603; and, before the date of the play was proved to be as early as 1601, it was a question whether Drayton or Shakespeare was the borrower. If either, it must have been the former; but allusions to the well-balanced mingling of the four elements (fire, air, earth, and water) to produce the perfection of humanity, are common in writers of the time. Compare, for instance, Ben Jonson, Cynthia’s Revels, ii. 3: “A creature of a most perfect and divine temper, one in whom the humours and elements are peaceably met, without emulation of precedence.”

It may be noted that the passage in Drayton, as printed in 1603 and in all the subsequent editions before 1619, reads as follows:

Such one he was, of him we boldly say,
In whose rich soul all sovereign powers did suit,
In whom in peace th’ elements all lay
So mix, as none could sovereignty impute;
As all did govern, yet all did obey;
His lively temper was so absolute,
That ’t seemed when heaven his model first began,
In him it showed perfection in a man.

In the edition of 1619 it takes the following shape, which, it will be seen, bears a somewhat closer resemblance to the passage in Julius Caesar:

He was a man (then boldly dare to say)
In whose rich soul the virtues well did suit,
In whom so mixt the elements did lay
That none to one could sovereignty impute;
As all did govern, so all did obey;
He of a temper was so absolute,
As that it seemed, when Nature him began,
She meant to show all that might be in man.

WORDS OCCURRING ONLY IN JULIUS CAESAR.

Note.—The addition of sub., adj., verb, adv. in brackets immediately after a word indicates that the word is used as a substantive, adjective, verb, or adverb only in the passage or passages cited.

The compound words marked with an asterisk (*) are printed as two separate words in F. 1.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Across 1 (adv.)</td>
<td>ii. 1 240</td>
<td>Acrost 2</td>
<td>iv. 3 222</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Afront 3</td>
<td>i. 3 94</td>
<td>Alliance 4</td>
<td>i. 1 43</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Airless</td>
<td>i. 3 159</td>
<td>Aww</td>
<td>i. 1 25</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alchemy 6</td>
<td>i. 3 159</td>
<td>*Barren-spirited</td>
<td>iv. 1 36</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>*Basis 8</td>
<td>iii. 1 115</td>
<td>*Pedestal</td>
<td>i. 8 115</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

1 = folded (of arms), also in Lucrece, 1609; used in four passages
2 = from side to side; used as prep. in Winter’s Tale, iv. 4. 15
3 = Sonnet lx. x. 3
4 = Sonnet xxxiii. 4; exxiv. 4
5 = league, confederacy; = different degrees of relationship, used frequently = marriage, six times
6 = pedestal; = foundation, occurs five times
WORDS PECULIAR TO JULIUS CAESAR.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Bound 1</td>
<td>iv. 3 221</td>
<td>Improve</td>
<td>i. 1 159</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chew 2</td>
<td>i. 2 171</td>
<td>Indifferent 4</td>
<td>i. 3 115</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chimney-tops 3</td>
<td>i. 1 44</td>
<td>Insuppressible</td>
<td>i. 1 134</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Climber-upward II</td>
<td>i. 1 23</td>
<td>Internal</td>
<td>i. 1 59</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cobbler 4</td>
<td>i. 1 11, 23</td>
<td>Laugh 7</td>
<td>i. 2 72</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Couchings 5</td>
<td>iii. 1 36</td>
<td>Letha 8</td>
<td>iii. 1 256</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Crimsoned 6</td>
<td>iii. 1 206</td>
<td>Limitation 8</td>
<td>ii. 1 283</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cynic 7</td>
<td>iv. 3 133</td>
<td>Low-crooked</td>
<td>iii. 1 43</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Discosolates 8</td>
<td>v. 3 55</td>
<td>Mender 9</td>
<td>i. 1 16</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Drowsally 10</td>
<td>iv. 3 240</td>
<td>*New-added 11</td>
<td>iv. 3 209</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Engagements 12</td>
<td>ii. 1 80</td>
<td>New-fired 10</td>
<td>i. 1 82</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Falling-sickness 13</td>
<td>i. 2 256, 258</td>
<td>New-planted</td>
<td>iii. 2 253</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fearfulness 14</td>
<td>i. 1 80</td>
<td>Niggard (vb. tr.)</td>
<td>iv. 3 283</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ferret (adj.) 15</td>
<td>i. 2 186</td>
<td>Nimbleness 16</td>
<td>iv. 3 202</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Former 17</td>
<td>v. 1 80</td>
<td>*Noble-minded 18</td>
<td>i. 3 122</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Freeman 19</td>
<td>v. 3 41</td>
<td>Noonday 20</td>
<td>i. 3 27</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gusty 21</td>
<td>i. 2 100</td>
<td>Noted 22</td>
<td>i. 3 2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>High-sighted 23</td>
<td>ii. 1 115</td>
<td>Obscurely 24</td>
<td>i. 2 323</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Honey-heavy 25</td>
<td>ii. 1 230</td>
<td>Outlawry 26</td>
<td>i. 3 173</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
| Honeyless 27 | v. 1 35 | 28 = of no moment; used elsewhere in other senses. 29
| Honourable dangerous 30 | i. 3 124 | 28 = of no moment; used elsewhere in other senses. 29
| *Ill-tempered... | iv. 3 115, 116 | 28 = of no moment; used elsewhere in other senses. 29

---

1 = fated, destined.
2 = figuratively = to ponder; frequently used in its ordinary sense.
3 = Chimney's top occurs in III. Henry VI. v. 6. 47.
4 = foremost; frequently used in other senses.
5 = See note 254.

---

14 = direction, nature.
15 = to stand on end; upverting, in this sense, occurs in The Tempest, i. 2. 213.
16 = wet with perspiration; used figuratively in Hamlet, i. 1. 77 = tosomes.
17 = unjured; occurs in Rich. III. iii. 7. 19 = unmentioned.
18 = open; = null, in III. Henry VI. iii. 3. 147 = destitute of, in four other passages.

---

199
MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

NOTES AND INTRODUCTION

BY

ARTHUR SYMONS.
DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

VINCENTIO, Duke of Vienna.
ANGELO, the deputy in the Duke's absence.
ESCALUS, an ancient lord, joined with Angelo in the government.
CLAUDIO, a young gentleman.
LUCIO, a fantastic.
Two other Gentlemen.
PROVOST.
THOMAS,
PETE,
} friars.
A Justice.
VARRIUS.
ELBOW, a simple constable.
FROTH, a foolish gentleman.
POMPEY, servant to Mistress Overdone.
ABHORSON, an executioner.
BARNARDINE, a dissolute prisoner.

ISABELLA, sister to Claudio.
MARIANA, betrothed to Angelo.
JULIET, beloved of Claudio.
FRANCISCA, a nun.
MISTRESS OVERDONE, a bawd.

Lords, Officers, Citizens, Boy, and Attendants.

———

SCENE—VIENNA.

———

HISTORIC PERIOD: The historic period is indefinite.

———

TIME OF ACTION.

The time of action consists of four days. Mr. Daniel thus divides them:—

Day 1: Act I. Scene 1 may be taken as a kind of prelude, after which some little interval must be supposed in order to permit the new governors of the city to settle to their work. The rest of the play is comprised in three consecutive days.

162

Day 2: Commences with Act I. Scene 2 and ends with Act IV. Scene 2.

Day 3: Commences in Act IV. Scene 2 and ends with Act IV. Scene 4.

Day 4: Includes Act IV. Scenes 5 and 6, and the whole of Act V., which is in one scene only.
MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

INTRODUCTION.

LITERARY HISTORY.

Measure for Measure was first printed in the Folio of 1623. No external evidence as to its date has been found, and the internal evidence is both slight and doubtful. Tyrwhitt considered that two passages in the early part of the play contain an allusion to the demeanour of James I. on his entry into England at the time of his accession in 1603. In i. 68-73 the Duke says:

I'll privily away. I love the people, But do not love to stage me to their eyes: Though it do well, I do not relish well Their loud applause and Aves vehement; Nor do I think the man of safe discretion That does affect it.

Again, in ii. 4. 24-30 it is observed by Angelo:

So play the foolish throngs with one that swoons; Come all to help him, and so stop the air By which he should revive: and even so The general, subject to a well-wish'd king, Quit their own part, and in obsequious fondness Crowd to his presence, where their untaught love Must needs appear offence.

"I cannot help thinking," says Tyrwhitt, "that Shakspeare, in these two passages, intended to flatter the unkingly weakness of James the First, which made him so impatient of the crowds that flocked to see him, especially upon his first coming, that, as some historians say, he restrained them by a proclamation." The Old-Spelling editors quote in their notes the following corroborative passage: "But our King coming through the North (Banqueting, and Feasting by the way) the applause of the people in so obsequious, and submissive a manner (still admiring Change) was check'd by an honest plain Scotman (unused to such humble accla-
MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

The outline of Whetstone's comedy may be given in the "Argument of the Whole History" prefixed by the author or his publisher. "In the citty of Julio (sometimes vnder the dominion of Corinthus, Kinge of Hungarie and Boemia) there was a law, that what man so euer committed adultery should lose his head, and the woman offender should weepe some disguised apparel during her life, to make her infamouslye noted. This seuer lawe, by the fauour of some mercifull magistrat, became little regarded vntill the time of Lord Promos auctority; who convicing a yong gentleman named Andrugio of incontinency, condemned both him and his minion to the execution of this statute. Andrugio had a very vertuous and beautilful gentlewoman to his sister, named Cassandra; Cassandra to enlarge her brothers life, submitted an humble petition to the Lord Promos: Promos regarding her good behaviours, and fantasying her great beawtie, was much delighted with the sweete order of her talke; and doyng good, that euill might come thereof, for a time he repyu'd her brother; but, wicked man, tournyng his liking vnnto vnlawfull lust, he set downe the spoile of her honour raunsome for her brothers life. Chaste Cassandra, ahdronring both him and his sute, by no perswasion would yeald to this raunsome: but in fine, wonne with the importuntye of hir brother (pleading for life) vpon these conditions she agreede to Promos; first that he should pardon her brother, and after marry her. Promos, as feareles in promisse as careless in performance, with sollemne vowe sygned her conditions: but worse then any infydel, his will satisfied, he performed neither the one nor the other; for, to kepe his authoritye vnsotted with fauour, and to preuent Cassandræs clamors, he commanded the gayler secretly to present Cassandra with her brothers head. The gayler, with the outcryes of Andrugio, ahdronring Promos lewdenes, by the prouidence of God prouided thus for his safety. He presented Cassandra with a felon's head newlie executed, who (being mangled, knew it not from her brother's, by the gayler who was set at libertie) was so agreed at this trecherey, that, at the pointe to kyl her selfe, she spared that stroke to be auenged of Promos: and deuising a way, she concluded to make her fortunes knonwe vnto the kinge. She (executinge this resolution) was so highly fauoured of the kinge, that forthwith he hasted to do justice on Promos: whose judgement was, to marrie Cassandra, to reipare her erased honour; which done, for his hainous offence he should lose his head. This marriage solempnised, Cassandra, tyed in the greatest bondes of affection to her husband, became an earnest suter for his life: the kinge (tendringe the generall benefit of the common weale before her special ease, although he fauoured her much,) would not graunt her sute. Andrugio (disguised amonge the company) sorrowing the griefe of his sister, bewrayde his safetye, and craued pardon. The kinge, to renowe the vertues of Cassandra, pardonned both him and Promos." It will be seen from this summary of the main part of the action that Shakespeare is indebted to Whetstone for the general framework of his plot; it will be seen equally that he has transformed the revoluting incoherencies of the original story into a closely-knit, credible, and artistic whole. Shakespeare's debt to the comedy of his predecessor, beyond the mere framework—the ground-plan of his building—may be set down at practically nothing. Promos and Cassandra is a crude and shapeless cento of ill-digested material; a mere succession of heavy scenes set forth in jolting doggerel; bearing by no means so much relation to the play of Shakespeare as the quarries at Carrara bear to the marbles of Michelangelo. A quarry, a storehouse, we may call it: that at the very outside; but certainly nothing with any pretence to art or vitality, nothing with any right to exist on its proper merits. No hints towards the characterization of any of the dramatics persones common to Shakespeare and to Whetstone could be found in the lifeless pages of the earlier play.

---

1 Hecatommthi ouero Centro Novelle di M. Giovanbattista Giraldi Cinthio. In Venezia, Appresso Enea de Alaria, MDLXXXIII. Pp. 120-135.

2 Probably there is some misprint or omission here.

164

a Crased, i.e. broken, damaged. See Mida. Night's Dream, note 17.
INTRODUCTION.

wright. Wherever for a moment there is the smallest similarity in thought or word—and this is very seldom indeed, considering the strong similarity of the incidents—such likeness is nothing more or less than inevitable, and exists simply in the most obvious truisms, so to speak, of natural action. In Cinthio's version of the story there are one or two natural touches, good enough, if he had seen them, to have suggested a thought to Shakespeare. Epitasia, for instance, the Isabella of Measure for Measure, is spoken of as one to whom Philosophy had taught how the human soul should meet every hap (“cui la Filosofia habeaua insegnato qual debbia essere l'animo humano in ogni fortuna”). Could anything truer be said of Isabella? Altogether Cinthio is very much more graphic and effective than Whetstone, either in the prose or poetry of his English imitator. Hazlitt, in his Shakespeare's Library, quotes two similar stories, told briefly and barely by Goulart, in his Admirable and Memorable Histories, 1607. Other such stories are known, some of them on historical evidence, such as the story of the governor of Flushing, in the old French chronicles. Perhaps, as has been suggested, the very story as we find it in Cinthio was based on an actual occurrence in the dark ages of the Italian despots.

STAGE HISTORY.

Of the performance of Measure for Measure we have no record before the Restoration; and when theatres were again licensed, the only form in which this play appeared on the stage was in the sadly-transformed shape of Davenant's jumble of this play and Much Ado, called The Law against Lovers, which has already been alluded to in the Introduction to Much Ado (vol. iv. p. 172). What amazing devil, as the late Charles Dickens would have said, possessed Sir William Davenant to spoil two plays, so different in their nature but each so good of its kind, by jumbling them together, it is difficult to conceive. It is possible, if the tradition that Davenant was Shakespeare's son be true, that he owed his father a grudge for begetting so extremely ill-looking an offspring. If so, it must be owned that, in this deformation of two of his father's great works, he had his revenge; for he has succeeded to a marvel in destroying all the comedy of Benedick and Beatrice, while at the same time he enfeebled the serious and almost tragical interest of Measure for Measure. It may be as well to give a list of the Dramatis Personae of Davenant's play:

THE DUKE OF SAVOY.
LORD ANGELO, his deputy.
BENEDICK, brother to Angelo.
LUCIO,
BALTHAZAR, his friends.
ESCHALUS, a counsellor.
CLAUDIO, in love with Julietta.
PROVOST.
FRAN SCHEM.
BERNARDSKIN, a prisoner.
JAILOR.
FOOL.
HANGMAN.
BEATRICE, a great heiress.
ISABELLA, sister to Claudio.
JULIETTA, mistress to Claudio.
VIOLA, sister to Beatrice, very young.
FRANCISCA, a nun.

Scene: Turin.

The first act follows the story of Measure for Measure pretty closely as far as the incidents go. The effect of the introduction of Benedick and Beatrice is that they are both entirely deprived of the wit and vivacity which characterized them in Shakespeare’s Much Ado, while nearly all the beautiful poetry of Measure for Measure is ruthlessly deformed into the dreariest prose-verse.

For a specimen of Davenant’s work we may take the following lines from the Duke's speech to Angelo in act i, scene 1:

That victory gives me now free leisure to Pursue my old design of travelling;
Whilst, hiding what I am, in fit disguise,
I may compare the customs, prudent laws,
And managements of foreign states with ours.

The victory alluded to is that which Benedick has just won. The scraps of Shakespeare that are dragged in, whether from Much Ado or Measure for Measure, but especially from the former, seem sadly out of place. Here is a specimen of Davenant's originality. After a scene between Benedick and Beatrice, Viola, who is the young sister of Beatrice, says to Benedick:

Y' are welcome home, my lord. Have you brought
Any pendants and fine fans from the wars?

Bec. What, my sweet bud, you are grown to a blossom!

Vio. My sister has promised me that I shall be
A woman, and that you shall make love to me,
When you are old enough to have a wife.

Bec. This is not a chip of the old block, but will prove
A smart twig of the young branch.

This wretched stuff is printed as verse, though it is difficult to believe it was ever intended to be anything but prose. In the second act it is Benedick that pleads for the life of Claudio. Again the scenes between Benedick and Beatrice, that are dragged in, serve merely to encumber the action without lightening the play. Davenant preserves the scene between Isabella and Angelo, carefully injuring if not utterly destroying, wherever he can, the poetry of Shakespeare's language. The second act concludes with a mutilated version of Angelo's soliloquy in act ii. scene 4 of Shakespeare's play, the last four lines of which are thus improved by Davenant:

The numerous subjects to a well-wish'd King
Quit their own home, and in rude fondness to
His presence crowd, where their unwelcome love
Does an offence, and an oppression prove.

The third act goes straight on with the same scene (from Shakespeare), beginning with the entrance of Isabella. This is followed by a long scene between Benedick and Beatrice, in which Beatrice urges Benedick to steal his brother's signet, and so seal the pardon of Juliet and Claudio. Then Viola comes in and sings a song, apropos des bottes; after which Lucio and Balthazar persuade Beatrice that Benedick is in love with her. The extraordinary dulness of this scene, compared with the one it is founded on in Much Ado, is decidedly original. Then we go back to Measure for Measure, and have a scene between Claudio and Isabella in prison; next to which comes an original scene, in which Benedick brings Beatrice the signed pardon for Juliet and Claudio, which he has obtained through Escalus. The act ends with a short scene in the prison between Viola and Juliet, her cousin.

In this scene, short as it is, Davenant's genius will burst out, as witnessed the following description by the innocent little Viola when speaking of the Jailor:

The fellow looks like a man boil'd
In pump-water. Is he married?

The beginning of the next act is apparently original. It appears that the Friar, i.e. the disguised Duke, is thwarting Benedick's scheme for the release of Juliet and Claudio, so he and Beatrice relieve their feelings by calling in Viola, who dances; the stage-direction being Enter Viola dancing a saraband, awhile with castanets. This is the scene which so much pleased the sapient and tasteful Pepys, who says, under date February 18th, 1661-2: " Saw 'The Law against Lovers,' a good play, and well performed, especially the little girl's (whom I never saw act before) dancing and singing; and were it not for her the losse of Roxalana would spoil the house."

Then we have a scrap of Pompey in the shape of the Fool, and another scrap from Shakespeare in the shape of a scene between the Duke and Lucio; and then a scene between Juliet and Isabella in prison, quite original, in which the author bursts into poetry and, shaking off the trammels of blank verse, indulges in rhymed couples. Juliet thinks that Isabella might make the sacrifice asked by Angelo for Claudio's sake, to which Isabella pointedly answers that she had better make it herself:

The good or ill redemption of his life
Doth less concern his sister than his wife.

Then we have more original elephantine playfulness between Benedick and Beatrice. Then, after a brief return to Shakespeare in a scene between the Duke, Provost, and Barnardine, we have an original scene in which Claudio gives the Fool a thousand pieces of gold as a bribe to help Juliet to escape in a page's dress. He declines to attempt to escape himself. Juliet, not to be outdone in generosity, sends her Maid with a proposal to Claudio to escape by a window in her room with the connivance of the Provost's wife, but she is not to escape herself. All this is, I suppose, to make the character of Claudio more sympathetic. Then we have a sort of parody in rhymed verse of the great scene between Angelo and Isabella, in which we find such gems of poetry as the following speech of Isabella:
INTRODUCTION.

Catch fools in nets without a covert laid;

Can I, who see the treason, be betray'd?

The effect of this exquisite couplet upon Angelo is to make him completely change his tone, and to become suddenly virtuous, declaring that all that had happened before was only his fun. He never meant that Claudio should die; he never meant to make naughty proposals to Isabella. All that he meant was to propose honourable marriage. But Isabella is not to be taken in with these beautiful sentiments; she remarks:

If it be true, you shall not be believ'd,

Lest you should think me apt to be deceiv'd.

Then she goes out, leaving poor Angelo in a very forlorn condition, who comes to the conclusion

Because she doubts my virtue I must die;

Who did with vicious arts her virtue try.

In the fifth act we have more singing, in which Beatrice, Benedick, and Viola all take part, supported by the Chorus; this musical entertainment being, as it appears, for the benefit of Angelo, in order to rouse him from his supposed anchoritic existence. Then we begin to get serious again, and three servants come in, one after another, exhorting Angelo to "Arm, arm, my lord!" for his brother is in open revolt and is besieging the prison where Claudio and Juliet are confined. Now we have a great deal of excitement and something like a pantomime rally by all the characters; and the play ultimately ends with the marriage of Angelo and Isabella! They are kept in countenance by two other pairs of betrothed lovers, Benedick and Beatrice, and Claudio and Juliet. Lucio, who gets very wagghish towards the end, is inclined to marry the Fool's grandmother, but, finding she is dead, decides on remaining a bachelor.

I have given a full account of Davenant's play, because few persons are likely to take the trouble to read it for themselves, and, un-one season. On March 10th, 1737, Quin took his benefit as the Duke at Drury Lane, when Mrs. Cibber was Isabella, a part to which she seems to have been very partial. That wretched creature her husband, Theophilus Cibber, played Lucio at least on one occasion, January 26th, 1738, when, for the first time, Elbow is mentioned in the cast, his representative being Harper. Mrs. Cibber took her benefit as Isabella on April 12th of the same year. On January 4th, 1744, Mrs. Pritchard made her first appearance as Isabella at Covent Garden. She ultimately succeeded Mrs. Cibber in this rôle. At Covent Garden, April 11th, 1746, Measure for Measure was represented for the benefit of Havard and Berry, "not acted 6 years," when Mrs. Woffington played Isabella for the first time; and she repeated the part on more than one occasion, though it could not have been a very suitable one to her. Quin seems to have played the Duke for the last time on December 4th, 1750, when no particulars of the cast are given. It was at this theatre, Covent Garden, that he made his last appearance in 1753, the great success of Barry during the last two seasons had perhaps reminded Quin that it was time for him to retire. On February 22nd, 1755, Measure for Measure was played at Drury Lane, with Yates as Pompey, and Mrs. Cibber as Isabella, Woodward as Lucio, the Duke being Mossoo. It was played once or twice during the three following seasons; but Garrick never took any part in it himself. It was about this time that a singularly tragical occurrence took place in connection with this play. Joseph Peterson, an actor of considerable ability and great versatility, who had been long attached to the Norwich company, was playing the part of the Duke in this play, one of his best parts, some time in October, 1758; when, in the scene with Claudio, played on that occasion by Moody, in the third act, just as he was speaking the lines iii. 1. 6–8:

Reason thus with life:
If I do lose thee, I do lose a thing
That none but fools would keep: a breath thou art.

he dropped dead into Moody's arms. Peterson made his first débüt at Goodman's Fields as Lord Foppington, and played Buckingham to Garrick's Richard on his first appearance as Richard III. He was interred at Bury St. Edmund's, with the lines he last spoke on the stage inscribed on his tomb. The next notable performance of Measure for Measure was on February 12th, 1770, for Woodward's benefit at Covent Garden. It was announced as "Not acted 20 years." Bensley was the Duke, Clarke Angelo, Wroughton Claudio, and the bénéficiaire himself Lucio; Quick played Elbow; Mrs. Bellamy took the part of Isabella, apparently for the first time, and Mrs. Bulkeley was Mariana. The piece was repeated again on the 21st of the same month. At the same theatre in the next season on January 12th, 1771, Yates played Lucio to the Isabella of his wife. During this season it was played three times, and twice in the succeeding one. On March 18th, 1775, this play was revived at Drury Lane, "Not acted 16 years." King was Lucio, Palmer Angelo, Parsons Pompey. It was represented on the 20th April following for Palmer's benefit. It was again acted on January 8th, 1777, "Not acted 5 years," when Lee and Mrs. Jackson appeared for the first time as the Duke and Isabella respectively. Passing over some unimportant performances of the play, we come to October 11th, 1780, when the play was again revived at Covent Garden, with Henderson as the Duke, Lee Lewes Lucio, Clarke Angelo, Wroughton Claudio, Mrs. Yates again playing Isabella, and Mrs. Inchbald appearing in the small part of Mariana. At Bath, in the season 1779–1780, we find the first record of the performance of Mrs. Siddons as Isabella. She played the part six times during that season, and on November 3rd, 1783, she appeared at Drury Lane for the first time in this character. During this season she acted the part five times; in fact it was the only Shakespearean one she attempted in London. In speaking of Mrs. Siddons' impersonations it must not be forgotten that there was another Isabella, a very favourite part of hers. This was the heroine of Southern's Isabella or the Fatal Marriage, altered by Garrick; but though many of her contemporaries seem to have considered this Isabella to be one of her most powerful im-

168
INTRODUCTION.

...personations, there is no doubt that the great actress was especially fine as the heroine of Measure for Measure, notably in the great scenes with Angelo, and in the prison scene with Claudio. The part is one which essentially requires an actress to assume moral dignity, if she has it not. The pretty pathos which serves well enough for Ophelia and Desdemona is of no avail here: indeed there is no part in any of Shakespeare's plays which requires greater elevation both of thought and of style than that of Isabella.

On December 30th, 1794, John Kemble appeared, at Drury Lane, for the first time as the Duke, with a strong cast which included Bannister, jun., as Lucio, Palmer as Angelo, Dicky Suett as Pompey, Parsons as Elbow; Mrs. Siddons, of course, was the Isabella; indeed no one seems to have attempted to rival her in this part for many years. The piece was acted eight times on this occasion. We pass over several performances at Drury Lane during the next eight years, till we come to November 21st, 1803, when the play was revived at Covent Garden, "not acted 20 years." Kemble and Mrs. Siddons again took their old parts, and Cooke appeared for the first time as Angelo; the Claudio was Charles Kemble, and the two comic parts of Elbow and Pompey were played by Blanchard and Emery respectively. The next memorable performance of this play was on October 30th, 1811, the beginning of Mrs. Siddons' last season at Covent Garden. The cast was much the same as on the last-mentioned occasion, except that Barrymore was the Angelo, and, according to Genest, was the only one whose part was not well acted. In this revival Liston was the Pompey, and Emery took the small part of Barnardine. George Daniel says, in his preface to the acting edition of Cumberland's British Theatre: "The few words put into the mouth of this dissolute prisoner were given with astonishing power by Emery, who, in reality, looked the wretch described by the poet, 'Unfit to live or die.'" The piece was played several times during this season; Mrs. Siddons making her last appearance in the part on June 26th, 1812. It is said that she was then so enfeebled by age that, when she knelt to the Duke, she was unable to rise without assistance. With Mrs. Siddons the popularity of Measure for Measure as an acting play seems to have died, at least for a time. No actress since has succeeded in making her mark in the character of Isabella. On February 8th, 1816, Miss O'Neill made her first appearance in the part at Covent Garden, on which occasion Yates played the Duke. The next revival of any importance was that under Macready's management, May 1st, 1824, at Drury Lane, when it was only played twice. Liston, singular to say, was cast for Lucio, and was a dire failure. Phelps produced Measure for Measure in his third season at Sadler's Wells on November 4th, 1844; Miss Addison's Isabella was said to have been a fine performance, but the play was not often repeated; Phelps played the Duke, though he is said to have preferred the part of Angelo. In recent times the only memorable revival of this play was that at the Haymarket, when the late Miss Adelaide Neilson, whose premature death was so much regretted, played Isabella on Saturday, April 1st, 1876. The best features in the cast on this occasion were the Duke of Mr. Howe and the Lucio of Mr. Conway, the best performance in the Shakespearian drama that the latter has ever given. Charles Warner was an earnest Claudio, and Mr. Buckstone himself raised many a laugh as Pompey. Miss Neilson's Isabella was a pretty and graceful performance, and considered by many critics to be her best Shakespearian impersonation; but she scarcely fulfilled the highest requirements of the part. The play had not been represented for 25 years in London, and there is no likelihood at present of its revival. Much virtuous indignation was expended on the nature of the plot by those whose moral susceptibilities had been invigorated by a course of playgoing in Paris. The grand lesson on the weakness of human nature, so powerfully taught in Measure for Measure, came as a shock to those delicate minds, which had been refined by a study of that Lais-worship and deep pornographical science which serve as substitutes for religion and morality on the Paris stage.—F. A. M.
MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

CRITICAL REMARKS.

Measure for Measure is neither the last of the comedies nor the first of the tragedies. It is tragedy and comedy together, inextricably interfused, coexistent in a mutual contradiction; such a tangled web, past hope of unravelling, as our life is, looked at by the actors in it, on the level of its action; with certain suggestions, open or concealed, of the higher view, the aspect of things from a point of tolerant wisdom. The hidden activity of the duke, working for ends of beneficent justice, in the midst of the ferment and corruption of the seething city; this figure of personified Providence, watchfully cognizant of act and motive, has been conceived by Shakespeare—not yet come to his darkest mood, in which man is a mere straw in the wind of Destiny—to give the sense of security indwelling in even such a maze as this. It is not from Isabella that we get any such sense. Her very courage and purity and intellectual light do but serve to deepen the darkness, when we conceive of her as but one sacrifice the more. Just as Cordelia intensifies the pity and terror of King Lear, so would Isabella's helpless virtues add the keenest ingredient to the cup of bitterness—but for the duke. He is a foretaste of Prospero, a Prospero working greater miracles without magic; and he guides us through the labyrinths of the play by a clue of which he has the secret.

That Measure for Measure is a "painful" play (as Coleridge called it) cannot be denied. There is something base and sordid about the villainy of its actors; a villainy which has nothing of the heroism of sin. In Angelo we have the sharpest lesson that Shakespeare ever read self-righteousness. In Claudio we see a "gilded youth" with the gilding rubbed off; and there is not under heaven a more pitiful sight. From Claudio's refined wantonness we sink deeper and deeper, through Lucio, who is a Claudio by trade, and without even the pretense of gilding, to the very lowest depth of a city's foulness and brutality. The "humours" of bawd and hangman and the customers of both are painted with as angry a hand as Hogarth's; bitten in with the etcher's acid, as if into the very flesh. Even Elbow, "a simple constable," a Dogberry of the lower dregs, struts and mauls before us with a desperate imbecility, in place of the engaging silliness, where silliness seemed a hearty comic virtue, of the "simple constable" of the earlier play. In the astonishing portrait of Barnardine we come to the simply animal man; a portrait which in its savage realism, brutal truth to nature, cynical insight into the workings of the contented beast in man, seems to anticipate some of the achievements of the modern realistic novel. In the midst of this crowd of evildoers walks the duke, hooded body and soul in his friar's habit; Escalus, a solitary figure of broad and sturdy uprightness; Isabella, "a thing enaked and sainted," the largest-hearted and clearest-eyed heroine of Shakespeare; and apart, veiled from good and evil in a perpetual solitariness of sorrow, Mariana, at the moated grange.

In the construction of this play Shakespeare seems to have put forth but a part of his strength, throwing his full power only onto the great scenes, and leaving, with less than his customary care (in strong contrast to what we note in Twelfth Night), frayed ends and edges of action and of characterization. The conclusion, particularly, seems hurried, and the disposal of Angelo inadequate. I cannot but think that Shakespeare felt the difficulty, nay, impossibility of reconciling the end which his story and the dramatic conventionalities required with the character of Angelo as shown in the course of the play, and that he slurred over the matter as best he could. With space before him he might have convinced us—for what could not Shakespeare do?—of the sincerity of Angelo's repentance and the rightfulness of his remission; but as it is, crowded as all this conviction and penitence and forgiveness necessarily is into a few minutes of supplementary action, one can hardly think that Coleridge expressed the natural feeling too forcibly when he said that "the strong indignant claim of justice" is baffled by the pardon and marriage of Angelo. Of the scenes in which Angelo appears as the prominent actor—the incomparable second and fourth scenes of the second act, the first the temptation of Angelo, the second Angelo's temptation of Isabella—nothing can be said but that Shakespeare may have equalled, but scarcely can have exceeded them in intensity and depth of natural truth. These, with that other scene between Claudio and Isabella, make the play.
INTRODUCTION.

It is part of the irony of things that the worst complication, the deepest tragedy, in all this tortuous action comes about by the innocent means of the stainless Isabella; who also, by her steadfast heroism, brings light and right at last. But for Isabella, Claudio would simply have died, perhaps meeting his fate, when it came, with a desperate flash of his father's courage; Angelo might have lived securely to his last hour, unconscious of his own weakness—of the fire that lurked in so impenetrable a flint. Shakespeare has sometimes been praised for the subtlety with which he has barbed the hook for Angelo, in making Isabella's very chastity and goodness the keenest of temptations. The notion is not peculiar to Shakespeare, but was hinted at, in his scrambling and uncertain way, by the writer of the old play. In truth, I do not see what other course was open to either, given the facts which were not original in Shakespeare or in Whetstone. Angelo, let us remember, is not a hypocrite; he has no dishonourable intention in his mind; he conceives himself to be firmly grounded on a broad basis of rectitude, and in condemning Claudio he condemns a sin which he sincerely abhors. His treatment of the betrothed Marianna probably be in his own eyes an act of frigid justice; it certainly shows a man not sensually-minded, but cold, calculating, likely to err, if he errs at all, rather on the side of the miserly virtues than of the generous sins. It is thus the nobility of Isabella that attracts him: her freedom from the tenderest signs of frailty, her unbiased intellect, her regard for justice, her religious sanctity; and it is on his noblest side first, the side of him that can respond to these qualities, that he is tempted. I know of nothing more consummate than the way in which his mind is led on, step by step towards the trap still hidden from him, the trap prepared by the merciless foresight of the chance that tries the professions and the thoughts of men. Once tainted, the corruption is over him like leprosy, and every virtue withers into the corresponding form of vice. In Claudio it is the same touchstone—Isabella's unconscious and misdirected Ithuriel-spear—that brings out the basest forms and revelations of evil. A great living painter has chosen the moment of most pregnant import in the whole play—the moment when Claudio, having heard the terms on which alone life can be purchased, murmurs, "Death is a fearful thing," and Isabella, not yet certain, yet already with the grievous fear astir in her, of her brother's weakness, replies, "And shamed life a hateful"—it is this moment that Holman Hunt brings before us in a canvas that, like his scene from the Two Gentlemen of Verona, throws more revealing light on Shakespeare than a world of commentators. Against the stained and discoloured wall of his dungeon, apple-blossoms and blue sky showing through the grated window behind his delicate dishevelled head, Claudio stands; a lute tied with red ribbons hangs beside him, a spray of apple-blossom has fallen on the dark garments at his feet, one hand plays with his fetters—with how significant a gesture!—the other hand pinches, idly affectionate, the two intense hands that Isabella has laid upon his breast; he is thinking—where to debate means shame,—balancing the arguments; and with pondering eyes, thrusting his tongue towards the corner of his just-parted lips with a movement of exquisite naturalness, he halts in indecision: all his mean thoughts are there, in that gesture, in those eyes; and in the warm and gracious youth of his whole aspect, passionately superficial and world-loving, there is something of the pathos of things "sweet, not lasting," a fragile, an unreasonable, an inevitable pathos. Isabella fronts him, an embodied conscience, all her soul in her eyes. Her eyes read him, plead with him, they are suppliant and judge; her intense fearfulness, the intolerable doubt of her brother's honour, the anguish of hope and fear, shine in them with a light as of tears frozen at the source. In a moment, with words on his lips whose far-reaching imagination is stung into him and from him by the sharpness of the impending... death, he will have stooped below the reach of her contempt, uttering those words, "Sweet sister, let me live!"

After all, the final word of Shakespeare in this play is mercy; but it is a mercy which comes of the consciousness of our own need of it, and it is granted and accepted in humiliation. The lesson of mercy taught in the Merchant of Venice is based on the mutual blessing of its exercise, the graciousness of spirit to which it is sign and seal.

It droppeth as the gentle rain from heaven
Upon the place beneath; it is twice blest;
It blesseth him that gives and him that takes.

Here, the claim which our fellow-man has on our commiseration is the sad claim of common guiltiness before an absolute bar of justice.

How would you be
If He, which is the top of judgment, should
But judge you as you are?

And is not the "painfulness" which impresses us in this sombre play, due partly to this very moral, and not alone to the circumstances from which it disengages itself? For it is so mournful to think that we are no better than our neighbours.
MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

ACT I

SCENE I. An apartment in the Duke's palace.

DUKE, ESCALUS, and ATTENDANTS, discovered.

DUKE. [Seated] Escalus!

ESCAL. My lord?

DUKE. Of government the properties to unfold,
Would seem in me to affect speech and discourse;
Since I am put to know that your own science Exceeds, in that, the lists of all advice
My strength can give you: [then no more remains
But that, to your sufficiency, as your worth is able,
And let them work.] The nature of our people,
Our city's institutions, and the terms
For common justice, you're as pregnant in As art and practice hath enriched any
That we remember. There is our commission,

From which we would not have you warp.

[ESCALUS kneels and receives his commission. Call hither,
I say, bid come before us Angelo.

[Exit an Attendant.

What figure of us think you he will bear?
For you must know, we have with special soul Elected him our absence to supply;
Lent him our terror, dress'd him with our love,
And given his deputation all the organs Of our own power: what think you of it?

ESCAL. If any in Vienna be of worth To undergo such ample grace and honour,
It is Lord Angelo.

DUKE. Look where he comes.

Enter ANGELO.

ANG. Always obedient to your grace's will, I come to know your pleasure.

DUKE. Angelo, There is a kind of character in thy life,

---

1 Put, made.  2 Lists, limits.  3 Pregnant in, well acquainted with.
With any scruple: your scope is as mine own,
So to enforce or qualify the laws
As to your soul seems good. Give me your hand: [Angelo gives his hand to the Duke.
I'll privily away. I love the people,
But do not like to stage me to their eyes:
Though it do well, I do not relish well
Their loud applause and Aves' vehement;
Nor do I think the man of safe discretion
That does affect it. Once more, fare you well.
[Going.
Ang. The heavens give safety to your purposes!
Escal. Lead forth and bring you back in happiness!
Duke. I thank you. Fare you well. [Exit.
Escal. I shall desire you, sir, to give me leave
To have free speech with you; and it concerns me
To look into the bottom of my place:
A power I have, but of what strength and nature
I am not yet instructed.
Ang. 'Tis so with me. Let us withdraw together,
And we may soon our satisfaction have Touching that point.
Escal. I'll wait upon your honour.
[Exeunt.

SCENE II. A street.

Enter Lucio and two Gentlemen.

Lucio. If the duke with the other dukes come not to composition with the King of Hungary, why then all the dukes fall upon the king.

First Gent. Heaven grant us its peace, but not the King of Hungary's!
Sec. Gent. Amen.

Lucio. Thou condeemest like the sanctimonious pirate that went to sea with the Ten Commandments, but scrap'd one out of the table.

Sec. Gent. "Thou shalt not steal"?
Lucio. Ay, that he raked.

First Gent. Why, 't was a commandment to command the captain and all the rest from their functions: they put forth to steal. There's not a soldier of us all, that, in the thanksgiving before meat, do relish the petition well that prays for peace.

Sec. Gent. I never heard any soldier dislike it.

Lucio. I believe thee; for I think thou never wast where grace was said. 20

Sec. Gent. No? a dozen times at least.

First Gent. What, in metre?

Lucio. In any proportion or in any language.

First Gent. I think, or in any religion.

Lucio. Ay, why not? Grace is grace, despite of all controversy: as, for example, thou thyself art a wicked villain, despite of all grace.

First Gent. Well, there went but a pair of shears between us.

Lucio. I grant; as there may between the lists and the velvet. Thou art the list. 31

First Gent. And thou the velvet: thou art good velvet; thou 'rt a three-pil'd piece, I warrant thee: I had as lief be a list of an English kersey, as be pil'd, as thou art pil'd, for a French velvet. Do I speak feelingly now?

Lucio. I think thou dost; and, indeed, with most painful feeling of thy speech: I will, out of thine own confession, learn to begin thy health; but, whilst I live, forget to drink after thee. 40

First Gent. I think I have done myself wrong, have I not?

Sec. Gent. Yes, that thou hast, whether thou art tainted or free.

Lucio. Behold, behold, where Madam Mitigation comes! I have purchase'd as many diseases under her roof as come to—

Sec. Gent. To what, I pray?

Lucio. Judge. 49

Sec. Gent. To three thousand dolours1 a year.

First Gent. Ay, and more.

Lucio. A French crown more.

First Gent. Thou art always figuring diseases in me; but thou art full of error; I am sound.

Lucio. Nay, not as one would say, healthy; but so sound as things that are hollow: thy bones are hollow; impiety has made a feast of thee.]

---

Enter Mistress Overdone, crying.

First Gent. How now! which of your hips has the most profound sciatica? 59

Mrs. Ov. Well, well; there's one yonder arrested and carried to prison was worth five thousand of you all.

Sec. Gent. Who's that, I pray thee?

Mrs. Ov. Marry, sir, that's Claudio, Signior Claudio.

First Gent. Claudio to prison! 'tis not so.

Mrs. Ov. Nay, but I know 'tis so: I saw him arrested; saw him carried away; and, which is more, within these three days his head to be chopp'd off. 70

Lucio. But, after all this fooling, I would not have it so. Art thou sure of this?

Mrs. Ov. I am too sure of it: and it is for getting Madam Julietta with child.

Lucio. Believe me, this may be: he promis'd to meet me two hours since, and he was ever precise in promise-keeping.

Sec. Gent. Besides, you know, it draws something near to the speech we had to such a purpose.

First Gent. But, most of all, agreeing with the proclamation. 81

Lucio. Away! let's go learn the truth of it. [Exeunt Lucio and Gentlemen.

Mrs. Ov. Thus, what with the war, what with the sweat, what with the gallows, and what with poverty, I am custom-shrunk.

Enter Pompey.

How now! what's the news with you?

Pom. Yonder man is carried to prison. 59

[Mrs. Ov. Well; what has he done?

Pom. A woman.

Mrs. Ov. But what's his offence?

Pom. Groping for trouts in a peculiar river.]

Mrs. Ov. What, is there a maid with child by him?

Pom. No, but there's a woman with maid by him. You have not heard of the proclamation, have you?

Mrs. Ov. What proclamation, man?

---

1 Dolours, an obvious pun on dolours and dollars.

2 Peculiar, i.e. belonging to an individual.
ACT I. Scene 2.

MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

Pom. All houses in the suburbs of Vienna must be pluck'd down.

Mrs. On. But shall all our houses of resort in the suburbs be pull'd down?

Pom. To the ground, mistress.

Mrs. On. Why, here's a change indeed in the commonwealth! What shall become of me?

Pom. Come; fear not you: good counsellors lack no clients: though you change your place, you need not change your trade; I'll be your tapster still. Courage! there will be pity taken on you: you that have worn your eyes almost out in the service, you will be consider'd.

[Loud voices heard without.

Mrs. On. What's to do here, Thomas tapster? let's withdraw.

Pom. Here comes Signior Claudio, led by the provost to prison; and there's Madam Juliet.

Claud. Fellow, why dost thou show me thus to the world? Bear me to prison, where I am committed.

Prov. I do it not in evil disposition, But from Lord Angelo by special charge.

Claud. Thus can the demigod Authority Make us pay down for our offence by weight. The words of heaven:—on whom it will, it will; On whom it will not, so; yet still 'tis just.

Re-enter Lucio and two Gentlemen.

Lucio. Why, how now, Claudio! whence comes this restraint?

Claud. From too much liberty, my Lucio, liberty:

As surfeit is the father of much fast,

So every scope\(^1\) by the immoderate use

---

\(^1\) Scope, license.
Returns to restraint. Our natures do pursue,
Like rats that ravin down their proper bane,
A thirsty evil; and when we drink we die.

Lucio. If I could speak so wisely under an arrest, I would send for certain of my creditors: and yet, to say the truth, I had as lief have the toppery of freedom as the morality of imprisonment. What’s thy offence, Claudio?

Claud. What but to speak of would offend
again.

Lucio. What, is’t murder?

Claud. No.

Lucio. Lechery?

Claud. Call it so.

Prov. Away, sir! you must go.

Claud. One word, good friend. Lucio, a word with you. [Takes him aside.

Lucio. A hundred, if they’ll do you any good.
Is lechery so look’d after?

Claud. Thus stands it with me:—upon a true contract

I got possession of Julietta’s bed:

You know the lady; she is fast my wife,
Save that we do the denunciation lack
Of outward order: this we came not to,
Only for propagation of a dower
Remaining in the coffer of her friends;
From whom we thought it meet to hide our love
Till time had made them for us. But it chances
The stealth of our most mutual entertainment
With character too gross is writ on Juliet.

Claud. With child, perhaps?

Lucio. Unhappily, even so.

And the new deputy now for the duke—

Whether it be the fault and glimpse of newness,

Or whether that the body public be

A horse whereon the governor doth ride,

Who, newly in the seat, that it may know

He can command, lets it straight feel the spur;

Whether the tyranny be in his place,

Or in his eminence that fills it up,

I stagger in:—but this new governor

Awakes me all the enrolled penalties

Which have, like unscour’d armour, hung by the wall

So long, that nineteen zodiacs have gone round,

1 Ravin, ravenously devour.  3 Proper, own.
2 Denunciation, formal declaration.
4 Propagation, augmentation.

And none of them been worn; and, for a name,
Now puts the drowsy and neglected act
Freshly on me:—’t is surely for a name.

Lucio. I warrant it is: and thy head stands so tickle on thy shoulders, that a milkmaid, if she be in love, may sigh it off. Send after the duke, and appeal to him.

Claud. I have done so, but he’s not to be found.

I prithee, Lucio, do me this kind service:
This day my sister should the cloister enter
And there receive her approbation:
Acquaint her with the danger of my state;
Implore her, in my voice, that she make friends
To the strict deputy; bid herself assay him:
I have great hope in that; for in her youth
There is a prone and speechless dialect,
Such as move men; beside, she hath prosperous art

When she will play with reason and discourse,
And well she can persuade.

Lucio. I pray she may; as well for the encouragement of the like, which else would stand under grievous imposition, as for the enjoying of thy life, who I would be sorry should be thus foolishly lost at a game of tick-tack.‘ I’ll to her.

Claud. I thank you, good friend Lucio.

[Provost advances.

Lucio. Within two hours.

Claud. Come, officer, away! [Exeunt.

Scene III. The entrance to a monastery.

Enter Duke and Friar Thomas.

Duke. No, holy father; throw away that thought;
Believe not that the dribbling dart of love
Can pierce a complete bosom. Why I desire thee
To give me secret harbour, hath a purpose
More grave and wrinkled than the aims and ends
Of burning youth.

Fri. T. May your grace speak of it?

Duke. My holy sir, none better knows than you
How I have ever lov'd the life remov'd
And held in idle price to haunt assemblies,
Where youth, and cost, and witless bravery keeps.

I have deliver'd to Lord Angelo,
A man of stricture and firm abstinence,
My absolute power and place here in Vienna,
And he supposes me travell'd to Poland;
For so I have strew'd it in the common ear,
And so it is receiv'd. Now, pious sir,
You will demand of me why I do this?

Fri. T. Gladly, my lord.

Duke. We have strict statutes and most biting laws,
The needful bits and curbs to headstrong weeds,
Which for this fourteen years we have let slip;
Even like an o'ergrown lion in a cave,
That goes not out to prey. Now, as fond fathers,
Having bound up the threatening twigs of birch,
Only to stick it in their children's sight
For terror, not to use, in time the rod's
More mock'd than fear'd; so our decrees,
Dead to infliction, to themselves are dead,
And liberty plucks justice by the nose;
The baby beats the nurse, and quite athwart
Goes all decorum.

Fri. T. It rested in your grace
To unloose this tied-up justice when you pleas'd:
And it in you more dreadful would have seem'd
Than in Lord Angelo.

Duke. I do fear, too dreadful:
Sith 't was my fault to give the people scope,
'T would be my tyranny to strike and gall them
For what I bid them do: for we bid this be done,
When evil deeds have their permissive pass,
And not the punishment. Therefore, indeed,
my father,
I have on Angelo impos'd the office;
Who may, in the ambush of my name, strike
home,
And yet my nature never in the fight,
To do it slander. And to behold his away,
I will, as 't were a brother of your order,

Visit both prince and people: therefore, I prithee,
Supply me with the habit, and instruct me
How I may formally in person bear
Like a true friar. More reasons for this action
At our more leisure shall I render you;
Only, this one: Lord Angelo is precise;
Stands at a guard with envy; scarce confesses
That his blood flows, or that his appetite
Is more to bread than stone: hence shall we see,
If power change purpose, what our seemers be.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV. A nunnery.

Enter Isabella and Franciscia.

Isab. And have you nuns no further privileges?

Fran. Are not these large enough?

Isab. Yes, truly: I speak not as desiring more;
But rather wishing a more strict restraint
Upon the sisterhood, the votarists of Saint Clare.

Lucio. [Within] Ho! Peace be in this place!

Isab. Who's that which calls?

Fran. It is a man's voice. Gentle Isabella,
Turn you the key, and know his business of him;
You may, I may not; you are yet unworn.
When you have vow'd, you must not speak with men
But in the presence of the prioress:
Then, if you speak, you must not show your face;
Or, if you show your face, you must not speak.

[Lucio calls again within.

He calls again; I pray you, answer him.

[Exit.

Isab. Peace and prosperity! Who is't that calls?

Enter Lucio.

Lucio. Hail, virgin, if you be,—as those cheek-roses
Proclaim you are no less! Can you so stead me
As bring me to the sight of Isabella,
A novice of this place, and the fair sister
To her unhappy brother Claudio?

Bear, behave.

Stead, help.
Isab. Why "her unhappy brother"? let me ask,
The rather for I now must make you know
I am that Isabella and his sister.
Lucio. Gentle and fair, your brother kindly greets you:
Not to be weary with you, he's in prison.

Isab. Woe me! for what?
Lucio. For that which, if myself might be his judge,
He should receive his punishment in thanks:
He hath got his friend with child.
Isab. Sir, make me not your story. ¹
Lucio. ¹

Lucio.
All hope is gone,
Unless you have the grace by your fair prayer
To soften Angelo.—(Act I. 4. 67-69.)

I would not—though 'tis my familiar sin
With maids to seem the lapwing and to jest,
Tongue far from heart—play with all virgins so:
I hold you as a thing ensky'd and sainted,
By your renouncement an immortal spirit,
And to be talk'd with in sincerity,
As with a saint.
Isab. You do blaspheme the good in mocking me.
Lucio. Do not believe it. Fewness and truth,² 'tis thus:
[Your brother and his lover have embrac'd:

As those that feed grow full, as blossoming time
That from the seedness the bare fallow brings
To teeming foison,³ even so her plenteous womb
Expresseth his full tilth ⁴ and husbandry.]

Isab. Some one with child by him? My cousin Juliet?
Lucio. Is she your cousin?
Isab. Adoptedly; as school-maids change their names
By vain though apt affection.
Lucio. She it is.
Isab. O, let him marry her.

¹ Your story, i.e. your jest.
² Fewness and truth, i.e. briefly and truly.
³ Foison, plenty.
⁴ Tilth, tillage.

179
ACT II.

Scene I. A hall in Angelo's house.

Enter Angelo, Escalus, and a Justice; Provost, Officers and Attendants in waiting behind.

Ang. We must not make a scarecrow of the law,
Setting it up to fear the birds of prey,
And let it keep one shape, till custom make it
Their perch, and not their terror.

Escal. Ay, but yet
Let us be keen, and rather cut a little,
Than fall, and bruise to death. Alas, this gentleman,
Whom I would save, had a most noble father!
Let but your honour know,
Whom I believe to be most strait in virtue,

That, in the working of your own affections,
Had time coher'd with place, or place with wishing,
Or that the resolute acting of our blood
Could have attain'd the effect of your own purpose,
Whether you had not sometime in your life
Err'd in this point which now you censure him,
And pull'd the law upon you.

Ang. 'Tis one thing to be tempted, Escalus,
Another thing to fall. [I] not deny,
The jury, passing on the prisoner's life,
May in the sworn twelve have a thief or two Guiltier than him they try. What's open made to justice,
That justice seizes: what knows the law
That thieves do pass on thieves? 'Tis very pregnant,

1. Rebate, abate, flatten, make dull.
2. Censur'd, sentenced.
3. Use, custom.
4. Owe, have.
5. The mother, i.e. the prioress.
6. Soon at night, this very night.
7. Fear, affright.
8. Pregnant, evident.
The jewel that we find, we stoop and take’t,
Because we see it; but what we do not see
We tread upon, and never think of it.]
You may not so extenuate his offence
For I have had such faults; but rather tell me,
When I, that censure him, do so offend,
Let mine own judgment pattern out my death,
And nothing come in partial. Sir, he must die.

Escal. Be it as your wisdom will.
Ang. Where is the provost?
Prov. [Advancing] Here, if it like your honour.
Ang. See that Claudio
Be executed by nine to-morrow morning:
Bring him his confessor, let him be prepar’d;
For that’s the utmost of his pilgrimage.

[Exit Provost.

Escal. [Aside] Well, heaven forgive him!
and forgive us all!
[Some rise by sin, and some by virtue fall;
Some run from breaks of ice, and answer none;
And some condemned for a fault alone.]

Enter Elbow, and Officers with Froth and Pompey.

Elb. Come, bring them away: if these be good people in a commonweal that do nothing but use their abuses in common houses, I know no law: bring them away.
Ang. How now, sir! What’s your name?
and what’s the matter?
Elb. If it please your honour, I am the poor duke’s constable, and my name is Elbow: I do lean upon justice, sir, and do bring in here before your good honour two notorious benefactors.
Ang. Benefactors! Well; what benefactors are they? are they not malefactors?
Elb. If it please your honour, I know not well what they are: but precise villains they are,
that I am sure of; and void of all profanation in the world that good Christians ought to have.
Escal. This comes off well; here’s a wise oficer.
Ang. Go to: what quality are they of?
Elbow is your name? why dost thou not speak,
Elbow?

Pom. He cannot, sir; he’s out at elbow.
Ang. What are you, sir?
Elb. He, sir! a tapster, sir; parcel-bawd; one that serves a bad woman; whose house,
sir, was, as they say, pluck’d down in the suburbs;
and now she professes a hot-house,
which, I think, is a very ill house too.

Escal. How know you that?
Elb. My wife, sir, whom I detest before heaven and your honour,—

Escal. How! thy wife!
Elb. Ay, sir; whom, I thank heaven, is an honest woman,—

Escal. Dost thou detest her therefore?
Elb. I say, sir, I will detest myself also, as well as she, that this house, [if it be not a bawd’s house, it is pity of her life, for it] is a aughty house.

Escal. How dost thou know that, constable?
Elb. Marry, sir, by my wife; who, if she had been a woman cardinally given, might have been accus’d in fornication, adultery, and all uncleanness there.

Escal. By the woman’s means?
Elb. Ay, sir, by Mistress Overdone’s means:
but as she spit in his face, [pointing to Froth]
so she defied him.
Pom. Sir, if it please your honour, this is not so.

Elb. Prove it before these varlets here, thou honourable man; prove it.

Escal. [To Angelo] Do you hear how he misplaces?
Pom. Sir, she came in great with child;
and longing, saving your honour’s reverence, for stew’d prunes; sir, we had but two in the house, which at that very distant time stood, as it were, in a fruit-dish, a dish of some threepence; your honours have seen such dishes;
they are not China dishes, but very good dishes,—

Escal. Go to, go to: no matter for the dish,
sir.
Pom. No, indeed, sir, not of a pin; you are therein in the right: but to the point. As I say, this Mistress Elbow, being, as I say, with child, and being great-bellied, and longing, as I said, for prunes; and having but two in the

1 For, because.
2 A, one.
3 Parcel, part.
4 Hot-house, bagno.
dish, as I said, Master Froth here, this very man, having eaten the rest, as I said, and, as I say, paying for them very honestly; for, as you know, Master Froth, I could not give you three-pence again.

Froth. No, indeed.

Pom. Very well; you being then, if you be remember’d, cracking the stones of the foresaid prunes,— Froth. Ay, so I did indeed.

Pom. Why, very well; I telling you then, if you be remember’d, that such a one and such a one were past cure of the thing you eat of, unless they kept very good diet, as I told you,—

Froth. All this is true.

Pom. Why, very well, then,—

Escal. Come, you are a tedious fool: to the purpose. What was done to Elbow’s wife, that he hath cause to complain of? Come me to what was done to her.

Pom. Sir, your honour cannot come to that yet.

Escal. No, sir, nor I mean it not.

Pom. Sir, but you shall come to it, by your honour's leave. And, I beseech you, look into Master Froth here, sir; a man of fourscore pound a year; whose father died at Hallowmas:—was’t not at Hallowmas, Master Froth?

Froth. All-hallowend eve.

Pom. Why, very well; I hope here be truths. He, sir, sitting, as I say, in a lower chair, 1 sir;—’t was in the Bunch of Grapes, where, indeed, you have a delight to sit,—have you not?

Froth. I have so; because it is an open room, and good for winter.

Pom. Why, very well; then, I hope here be truths.

Ang. This will last out a night in Russia, When nights are longest there: I'll take my leave,

And leave you to the hearing of the cause; Hoping you'll find good cause to whip them all.

Escal. I think no less. Good morrow to your lordship. [Exit Angelo.

Now, sir, come on: what was done to Elbow’s wife, once more?

Pom. Once, sir! there was nothing done to her once.

Elb. I beseech you, sir, ask him what this man did to my wife.

Pom. I beseech your honour, ask me.

Escal. Well, sir; what did this gentleman to her?

Pom. I beseech you, sir, look in this gentleman's face. Good Master Froth, look upon his honour; 'tis for a good purpose. Doth your honour mark his face?

Escal. Ay, sir, very well.

Pom. Nay, I beseech you, mark it well.

Escal. Well, I do so.

Pom. Doth your honour see any harm in his face?

Escal. Why, no.

Pom. I'll be supposed upon a book, his face is the worst thing about him. Good, then, if his face be the worst thing about him, how could Master Froth do the constable's wife any harm? I would know that of your honour.

Escal. He's in the right. Constable, what say you to it?

Elb. First, an it like you, the house is a respected house; next, this is a respected fellow; and his mistress is a respected woman.

Pom. By this hand, sir, his wife is a more respected person than any of us all.

Elb. Varlet, thou liest; thou liest, wicked varlet! the time is yet to come, that she was ever respected with man, woman, or child.

Pom. Sir, she was respected with him before he married with her.

Escal. Which is the wiser here? Justice or Iniquity? Is this true?

Elb. O thou caitiff! O thou varlet! O thou wicked Hannibal! I respected with her before I was married to her! If ever I was respected with her, or she with me, let not your worship think me the poor duke's officer. Prove this, thou wicked Hannibal, or I'll have mine action of battery on thee.

Escal. If he took you a box o’ the ear, you might have your action of slander too.

Elb. Marry, I thank your good worship for it. What is ’t your worship’s pleasure I shall do with this wicked caitiff?

Escal. Truly, officer, because he hath some

---

1 A lower chair, i.e. an easy-chair.

2 Supposed, i.e. deposed.
MEASURE FOR MEASURE.
Act II, Scene 1, line 160

Ford: Doth your honour see any harm in his face?
offences in him that thou wouldst discover if thou coulst, let him continue in his courses till thou knowest what they are.

_Elb._ Marry, I thank your worship for it. Thou seest, thou wicked varlet, now, what's come upon thee: thou art to continue now, thou varlet; thou art to continue. 291

_Escal._ [To Froth] Where were you born, friend? [Pompey pushes Froth forward.]

_Froth._ Here in Vienna, sir.

_Escal._ Are you of fourscore pounds a year?

_Froth._ Yes, an't please you, sir.

_Escal._ So. [To Pompey] What trade are you of, sir? [Froth gets behind Pompey.]

_Pom._ A tapster; a poor widow's tapster.

_Escal._ Your mistress' name?

_Pom._ Mistress Overdone.

_Escal._ Hath she had any more than one husband?

_Pom._ Nine, sir; Overdone by the last. 211

_Escal._ Nine! Come hither to me, Master Froth. [Pompey pushes Froth across to Escalus]

_Master Froth._ I would not have you acquainted with tapsters: they will draw you, Master Froth, and you will hang them. Get you gone, and let me hear no more of you.

_Froth._ I thank your worship. For mine own part, I never come into any room in a taphouse, but I am driven in. 220

_Escal._ Well, no more of it, Master Froth: farewell. [Exit Froth, Pompey pushing him off.] Come hither to me, and master tapster.

_What's your name, master tapster?

_Pom._ [Advancing] Pompey.

_Escal._ [What else?

_Pom._ Bum, sir. 227

_Escal._ Troth, and your bum is the greatest thing about you; so that in the beastliest sense you are Pompey the Great. Pompey, you are partly a bawd, Pompey; howsoever you colour it in being a tapster, are you not? come, tell me true: it shall be the better for you.

_Pom._ Truly, sir, I am a poor fellow that would live.

_Escal._ How would you live, Pompey? by being a bawd? What do you think of the trade, Pompey? is it a lawful trade?

_Pom._ If the law would allow it, sir. 239

_Escal._ But the law will not allow it, Pompey; nor it shall not be allow'd in Vienna.

_Pom._ Does your worship mean to geld and splay all the youth of the city?

_Escal._ No, Pompey.

_Pom._ Truly, sir, in my poor opinion, they will to't, then. If your worship will take order for the drabs and the knaves, you need not to fear the bawds. 248

_Escal._ There are pretty orders beginning, I can tell you: it is but heading and hanging.

_Pom._ If you head and hang all that offend that way but for ten year together, you'll be glad to give out a commission for more heads: if this law hold in Vienna ten year, I'll rent the fairest house in it after three-pence a bay: if you live to see this come to pass, say Pompey told you so. 257

_Escal._ Thank you, good Pompey; and, in requital of your prophecy, hark you:—] I advise you, let me not find you before me again upon any complaint whatsoever; [no, not for dwelling where you do:] if I do, Pompey, I shall beat you to your tent, and prove a shrewd Caesar to you; in plain dealing, Pompey, I shall have you whipt: so, for this time, Pompey, fare you well.

_Pom._ I thank your worship for your good counsel: [Aside] but I shall follow it as the flesh and fortune shall better determine.

 Whip me! No, no; let carman whip his jade: The valiant heart's not whipt out of his trade. [Exit.

_Escal._ Come hither to me, Master Elbow; come hither, master constable. [Elbow advances.] How long have you been in this place of constable?

_Elb._ Seven year and a half, sir.

_Escal._ I thought, by your readiness in the office, you had continued in it some time. You say, seven years together?

_Elb._ And a half, sir. 278

_Escal._ Alas, it hath been great pains to you! They do you wrong to put you so oft upon't: are there not men in your ward sufficient to serve it?

_Elb._ Faith, sir, few of any wit in such matters: as they are chosen, they are glad to choose me for them; I do it for some piece of money, and go through with all.

---

1 Sply, i.e. spay, castrate.
2 After, at the rate of.
3 See note 67.
ACT II. Scene 1.

Escal. Look you bring me in the names of some six or seven, the most sufficient of your parish.

Bll. To your worship's house, sir?

Escal. To my house. Fare you well. [Exit

Elbow.] What's o'clock, think you?

Just. Eleven, sir.

Escal. I pray you home to dinner with me.

Just. I humbly thank you.

Escal. It grieves me for the death of Claudio;
But there's no remedy.

Just. Lord Angelo is severe.

Escal. It is but needful:
Mercy is not itself, that oft looks so;
Pardon is still the nurse of second woe:
But yet,—poor Claudio! There is no remedy.
Come, sir. [Exeunt.

SCENE II. Another room in the same.

Enter Provost and a Servant.

Serv. He's hearing of a cause; he will come straight:
I'll tell him of you.

Prov. Pray you, do. [Exit Servant.] I'll know
His pleasure; may be he'll relent. Alas,
He hath but as offended in a dream!
All sects, all ages smack of this vice; and he
To die for't. [Enter Angelo.

Ang. Now, what's the matter, provost?

Prov. Is it your will Claudio shall die to-morrow?

Ang. Did not I tell thee yea? hadst thou not order?
Why dost thou ask again?

Prov. Lest I might be too rash:
Under your good correction, I have seen,
When, after execution, judgment hath
Repented o'er his doom.

Ang. Go to; let that be mine:

Do you your office, or give up your place,
And you shall well be spar'd.

Prov. I crave your honour's pardon.
What shall be done, sir, with the groaning

Juliet?
She's very near her hour.

Ang. Dispose of her
To some more fitter place; and that with speed.

184

ACT II. Scene 2.

Re-enter Servant.

Serv. Here is the sister of the man condemn'd Desires access to you.

Ang. Hath he a sister?

Prov. Ay, my good lord; a very virtuous maid,
And to be shortly of a sisterhood,
If not already.

Ang. Well, let her be admitted. [Exit Servant.

See you the fornicatress be remov'd:
Let her have needful, but not lavish, means;
There shall be order for't.

Enter Isabella and Lucio.

Prov. Save your honour!

[Offering to retire.

Ang. Stay a little while. [Provost withdraws.]—[To Isabella] You're welcome: what's your will?

[Lucio goes back of stage.

Isab. I am a woeful suitor to your honour,
Please but your honour hear me.

Ang. Well; what's your suit?

Isab. There is a vice that most I do abhor,
And most desire should meet the blow of justice;

For which I would not plead, but that I must;
For which I must not plead, but that I am
At war 'twixt will and will not.

Ang. Well; the matter?

Isab. I have a brother is condemn'd to die:
I do beseech you, let it be his fault,¹
And not my brother.

[Prov. [Aside] Heaven give thee moving graces!]

Ang. Condemn the fault, and not the actor of it?

Why, every fault's condemn'd ere it be done:
Mine were the very cipher of a function, ²
To fine the faults whose fine stands in record,
And let go by the actor.

Isab. O just but severe law!
I had a brother, then,—Heaven keep your honour! [Retiring. Lucio comes down and meets her.

¹ His fault, i.e. his fault that is condemned.
² Fines, punish.
ACT II. Scene 2.

MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

Lucio. [Aside to Isabella] Give't not o'er so: to him again, entreat him; Kneel down before him, hang upon his gown: You are too cold; if you should need a pin, You could not with more tame a tongue desire it: To him, I say.

Isab. [Advancing rapidly to Angelo] Must he needs die?

Ang. Maiden, no remedy.

Isab. Yes; I do think that you might pardon him, And neither heaven nor man grieve at the mercy.

ANG. I will not do't.

Isab. But can you, if you would?

Ang. Look, what I will not, that I cannot do.

Isab. But might you do't, and do the world no wrong,

If so your heart were touch'd with that remorse

As mine is to him?

Ang. He's sentenc'd: 't is too late.

Lucio. [Aside to Isabella] You are too cold.

Isab. Too late! why, no; I, that do speak a word,

May call it back again. Well, believe this, No ceremony that to great ones longs, 1

Isab. To-morrow! O, that's sudden! Spare him, spare him!—(Act ii. 2. 83.)

Not the king's crown nor the deputed sword,
The marshal's truncheon nor the judge's robe,
Become them with one half so good a grace As mercy does.
If he had been as you, and you as he,
You would have slipp'd like him; but he, like you,
Would not have been so stern.

Ang. Pray you, be gone.

Isab. I would to heaven I had your potency,
And you were Isabel! should it then be thus?
No; I would tell what 't were to be a judge,
And what a prisoner.

Lucio. [Aside to Isabella] Ay, touch him; there's the vein.

Ang. Your brother is a forfeit of the law, And you but waste your words.

1 Remorse, pity. 2 Longs, belongs.
Isab. Alas, alas! Why, all the souls that were were forfeit once; And He that might the vantage best have took Found out the remedy. How would you be, If He, which is the top of judgment, should But judge you as you are? O, think on that; And mercy then will breathe within your lips, Like man new made.

Ang. Be you content, fair maid; It is the law, not I condemn your brother: Were he my kinsman, brother, or my son, It should be thus with him: he must die to- morrow.

Isab. To-morrow! O, that’s sudden! Spare him, spare him!

He’s not prepar’d for death. [ Even for our kitchens We kill the fowl of season:¹ shall we serve heaven With less respect than we do minister To our gross selves?] Good, good my lord, bethink you; Who is it that hath died for this offence? There’s many have committed it.

Lucio. [Aside to Isabella] Ay, well said.

Ang. The law hath not been dead, though it hath slept: Those many had not dar’d to do that evil, If the first that did the edict infringe Had answer’d for his deed: [now ’tis awake, Takes note of what is done, and, like a prophet, Looks in a glass, that shows what future evils, Either new, or by remissness new-conceiv’d, And so in progress to be hatch’d and born, Are now to have no successive degrees, But, ere they live, to end.]

Isab. [Kneeling] Yet show some pity.

Ang. I show it most of all when I show justice;

For then I pity those I do not know, Which a dismiss’d offence would after gall; And do him right that, answering one foul wrong,

Lives not to act another. Be satisfied; Your brother dies to-morrow;—be content.

[He raises her.

Isab. So you must be the first that gives this sentence,

And he that suffers. O, it is excellent
To have a giant’s strength; but it is tyrannous
To use it like a giant.

Lucio. [Aside] That’s well said.

Isab. Could great men thunder

As Jove himself does, Jove would ne’er be quiet,

For every pelting petty officer
Would use his heaven for thunder;

Nothing but thunder. Merciful Heaven!

Thou rather with thy sharp and sulphurous bolt
Split’st the unwedgeable and gnarled oak
Than the soft myrtle: but man, proud man,
Drest in a little brief authority,
Most ignorant of what he’s most assur’d,
His glassy essence, like an angry ape,
Plays such fantastic tricks before high heaven
As makes the angels weep; [who, with our spleens,³]
Would all themselves laugh mortal—

Lucio. [Aside to Isabella] O, to him, to him, wench! he will relent;

He’s coming; I perceive’t.

[Prov. [Aside] Pray heaven she win him:]

Isab. We cannot weigh our brother with ourself:

Great men may jest with saints; ’t is wit in them,

But in the less foul profanation.

Lucio. [Aside to Isabella] Thou’rt i’ the right, girl; more o’ that.

Isab. That in the captain’s but a choleric word,

Which in the soldier is flat blasphemy.

Lucio. [Aside to Isabella] Art avis’d⁴ o’, that? more on’t.

Ang. Why do you put these sayings upon me? Isab. Because authority, though it err like others,

Hath yet a kind of medicine in itself, That skins⁵ the vice o’ the top. Go to your bosom; Knock there, and ask your heart what it doth know

That’s like my brother’s fault: if it confess

¹ Of season, i.e. in its season.
² Pelting, paltry.
³ Spleens, supposed to be the seat of mirth.
⁴ Artis’d, i.e. advised, or conscious.
⁵ Skins, covers thinly over.
A natural guiltiness such as is his,
Let it not sound a thought upon your tongue
Against my brother's life.

Ang. [Aside] She speaks, and 'tis
Such sense, that my sense breeds with it.—Fare you well. [Going.

Isab. Gentle my lord, turn back.

Ang. I will bethink me—come again to-tomorrow. [Going to door.

Isab. Hark how I'll bribe you: good my lord, turn back.

Ang. [Returning] How! bribe me!

Isab. Ay, with such gifts that heaven shall share with you.

Lucio. [Aside to Isabella] You had marr'd
all else.

Isab. Not with fond shekels of the tested gold,
Or stones, whose rates are either rich or poor
As fancy values them; but with true prayers,
That shall be up at heaven and enter there
Ere sun-rise, prayers from preserved souls,
From fasting maids, whose minds are dedicate
To nothing temporal.

Ang. [After a pause] Well; come to me tomorrow.

[Lucio [Aside to Isabella] Go to; 'tis well; away!]

Isab. Heaven keep your honour safe!

[Retiring. Amen!

Ang. [Aside]
For I am that way going to temptation,
Where prayers cross.

Isab. [Returning] At what hour to-morrow
Shall I attend your lordship?

Ang. At any time forenoon.

Isab. 'Save your honour!

[Exeunt Isabella, Lucio, and Provost.

Ang. From thee, even from thy virtue!
What's this, what's this? Is this her fault or mine?
The tempter or the tempted, who sins most?
Ha!
Not she; nor doth she tempt: but it is I
That, lying by the violet in the sun,
Do as the carrion does, not as the flower,
Corrupt with virtuous season.] Can it be
That modesty may more betray our sense

1 Fond, foolish, trifling.
Is that temptation that doth goad us on

To sin in loving virtue: [never could the strumpet,
With all her double vigour, art and nature,
Once stir my temper; but this virtuous maid
Subdues me quite.] Ever till now,
When men were fond,¹ I smil'd and wonder'd
how. [Exit.

[Scene III.  A room in a prison.

Enter, severally, Duke disguised as a friar,
and Provost.

Duke. Hail to you, provost! so I think you are.

Prov. I am the provost. What's your will,
good friar?

Duke. Bound by my charity and my best order,
I come to visit the afflicted spirits
Here in the prison. Do me the common right
To let me see them, and to make me know
The nature of their crimes, that I may minister
To them accordingly.

Prov. I would do more than that, if more were needful.

Look, here comes one: a gentlewoman of mine,²
Who, falling in the flaws³ of her own youth,
Hath blister'd her report: she is with child;
And he that got it, sentenced; a young man
More fit to do another such offence
Than die for this.

Enter Juliet.

Duke. When must he die?

Prov. As I do think, to-morrow.

[To Juliet] I have provided for you: stay awhile,
And you shall be conducted.

Duke. Repent you, fair one, of the sin you carry?

Jul. I do; and bear the shame most patiently.

Duke. I'll teach you how you shall arraign your conscience,
And try your penitence, if it be sound,
Or hollowly put on.

Jul. I'll gladly learn.

Duke. Love you the man that wrong'd you?

Jul. Yes, as I love the woman that wrong'd
him.

Duke. So then it seems your most offence-ful act
Was mutually committed?

Jul. Mutually.

Duke. Then was your sin of heavier kind than his.

Jul. I do confess it, and repent it, father.

Duke. 'Tis meet so, daughter: but lest you do repent,
As that⁴ the sin hath brought you to this shame,
Which sorrow is always toward ourselves, not
heaven,
Showing we would not spare heaven as we love it,
But as we stand in fear,—

Jul. I do repent me, as it is an evil,
And take the shame with joy.

Duke. There rest.

Your partner, as I hear, must die to-morrow,
And I am going with instruction to him.

Grace go with you! Benedicite! [Exit.

Jul. Must die to-morrow! O injurious love,
That respite me a life, whose very comfort
Is still a dying horror!

Prov. 'Tis pity of him. [Exeunt.]

Scene IV.  A room in Angelo's house.

Angelo discovered, seated.

Ang. When I would pray and think, I think and pray
To several⁵ subjects. Heaven hath my empty words;
Whilst my invention,⁶ hearing not my tongue,
Anchors on Isabel: Heaven in my mouth,
[As if I did but only chew his name;]
And in my heart the strong and swelling evil
Of my conception. The state, whereon I studied,
Is like a good thing, being often read,
Grown fear'd and tedious; yea, my gravity,
Wherein—let no man hear me—I take pride,
Could I with boot change for an idle plume

¹ Fond, foolishly fond.
² Of mine, i.e. in my custody.
³ Flaws, gusts of passion.
⁴ As that, because.
⁵ Several, separate.
⁶ Invention, imagination.
ACT II. Scene 4.

MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

Which the air beats for vain.
O place, O form,
How often dost thou with thy case, thy habit,
Wrench awre from fools, and tie the wiser souls
To thy false seeming!
Blood, thou art blood:
Let's write good angel on the devil's horn,
Tis not the devil's crest.

Enter Servant.

How now! who's there!

Serv. One Isabel, a sister, desires access to you.

Ang. Teach her the way. [Exit Servant.]

O heavens!

Why does my blood thus muster to my heart,
Making both it unable for itself,
And dispossessing all my other parts
Of necessary fitness?

[Rises.

So play the foolish throngs with one that swoons;
Come all to help him, and so stop the air
By which he should revive: and even so
The general, subject to a well-wish'd king,
Quit their own part, and in obsequious fondness
Crowd to his presence, where their untaught love
Must needs appear offence.]

Enter Isabella.

How now, fair maid!

Isab. I am come to know your pleasure.

Ang. That you might know it, would much better please me

Than to demand what 'tis. Your brother cannot live.

Isab. Even so. Heaven keep your honour!

[Retiring.

Ang. Yet may he live awhile; and, it may be,
As long as you or I:—yet he must die.

Isab. Under your sentence?

Ang. Yes.

Isab. When, I beseech you? that in his reprieve,
Longer or shorter, he may be so fitted
That his soul sicken not.

Ang. Ha! fie, these filthy vices! It were as good
To pardon him that hath from nature stol'n

A man already made, as to remit
Their saucy sweetness that do coin heaven's image
In stamps that are forbid: 'tis all as easy
Falsely to take away a life true made
As to put mettle in restrained means
To make a false one.

Isab. 'Tis set down so in heaven, but not in earth.

Ang. Say you so? then I shall pose you quickly.

Which had you rather, that the most just law
Now took your brother's life; or, to redeem him,
Give up your body to such sweet uncleanness
As she that he hath stain'd?

Isab. Sir, believe this,
I had rather give my body than my soul.

Ang. I talk not of your soul: our compell'd sins
Stand more for number than for accompt.

Isab. How say you?

Ang. Nay, I'll not warrant that; for I can speak

Against the thing I say. ] Answer to this:
I, now the voice of the recorded law,
Pronounce a sentence on your brother's life:
Might there not be a charity in sin
To save this brother's life?

Isab. Please you to do't,
I'll take it as a peril to my soul,
It is no sin at all, but charity.

Ang. Plead'st you to do't at peril of your soul,
Were equal poise of sin and charity.

Isab. That I do beg his life, if it be sin,
Heaven let me bear it! you granting of my suit,
If that be sin, I'll make it my morn prayer
To have it added to the faults of mine,
And nothing of your answer.

Ang. Nay, but hear me.
Your sense pursues not mine: either you're ignorant,
Or seem so, craftily; and that's not good.

Isab. Let me be ignorant, and in nothing good,
But graciously to know I am no better.

1 The general, i.e. the populace.

* Restained, forbidden.
ACT II. Scene 4.

MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

Ang. Thus wisdom wishes to appear most bright
When it doth tax itself; as these black masks
Proclaim an enshied beauty ten times louder
Than beauty could, display'd.] But mark me;
To be received plain, I'll speak more gross:
Your brother is to die.

Isab. So.

Ang. And his offence is so, as it appears,
Accountant to the law upon that pain. 5

Isab. True.

Ang. Admit no other way to save his life,—
As I subscribe not that, nor any other,
But in the loss of question,—that you, his sister,
Finding yourself desir'd of such a person,
Whose credit with the judge, or own great place,
Could fetch your brother from the manacles
Of the all-building law; and that there were
No earthly mean to save him, but that either
You must lay down the treasures of your body
To this suppos'd, or else to let him suffer;
What would you do?

Isab. As much for my poor brother as myself:
That is, were I under the terms of death,
The impression of keen whips I'd wear as rubies,
And strip myself to death, as to a bed
That longing have been sick for, ere I'd yield
My body up to shame.

Ang. Then must your brother die.

Isab. And 't were the cheaper way:
Better it were a brother died at once,
Than that a sister, by redeeming him,
Should die for ever.

Ang. Were not you then as cruel as the sentence
That you have slander'd so?

Isab. Ignomy in ransom and free pardon
Are of two houses: lawful mercy
Is nothing kin to foul redemption.

Ang. You seem'd of late to make the law
a tyrant;
And rather prov'd the sliding of your brother
A merriment than a vice.

Isab. O, pardon me, my lord; it oft falls out,
To have what we would have, we speak not what we mean:
I something do excuse the thing I hate,
For his advantage that I dearly love. 120

Ang. We are all frail.

Isab. Else let my brother die,
[If not a fedary, but only he,
Owe and succeed thy weakness.]

Ang. Nay, women are frail too.

Isab. Ay, as the glasses where they view themselves;
Which are as easy broke as they make forms.
Women! Help heaven! men their creation mar
In profiting by them. Nay, call us ten times frail;
For we are soft as our complexions are,
And credulous to false prints.

Ang. I think it well:
And from this testimony of your own sex,—
Since, I suppose, we are made to be no stronger
Than faults may shake our frames,—let me be bold;
I do arrest your words. Be that you are,
That is, a woman; if you be more, you're none;
If you be one, as you are well express'd
By all external warrants, show it now,
By putting on the destin'd livery.

Isab. I have no tongue but one: gentle my lord,
Let me entreat you speak the former language.

Ang. Plainly conceive, I love you.

Isab. My brother did love Juliet; and you tell me
That he shall die for 't.

Ang. He shall not, Isobel, if you give me love.

Isab. I know your virtue hath a license in't,
Which seems a little fouler than it is,
To pluck on others.

Ang. Believe me, on mine honour,
My words express my purpose.

Isab. Ha! little honour to be much believ'd,
And most pernicious purpose! Seeming, seeming!

Retreating.
I will proclaim thee, Angelo; look for 't; 131
Sign me a present pardon for my brother,
Or with an outstretch'd throat I'll tell the world aloud
What man thou art.

1 Enshied, enshelde, i.e. covered.

2 Pain, penalty.

3 Subscribe, admit.

4 Fedary, vassal.

190
Ang. Who will believe thee, Isabel? My unsoul’d name, the austereness of my life, My vouch against you, and my place i’ the state, Will so your accusation overweigh, That you shall stiffe in your own report, And smell of calumny. I have begun,

And now I give my sensual race\(^1\) the rein: Fit thy consent to my sharp appetite; 161 Lay by all nicety and prolixious\(^2\) blushes, That banish what they sue for; redeem thy brother By yielding up thy body to my will; Or else he must not only die the death,

\[\text{Isab.} \text{ I will proclaim thee, Angelo; look for 't.} - (\text{Act II. 4. 161.})\]

But thy unkindness shall his death draw out Tolerings sufferance. Answer me to-morrow, Or, by the affection\(^3\) that now guides me most, I’ll prove a tyrant to him. As for you, Say what you can, my false o’erweighs your true. \[\text{Exit.}\]

Isab. To whom should I complain? Did I tell this, 171 Who would believe me? O perilous mouths, That bear in them one and the self-same tongue, Either of condemnation or approof; Bidding the law make court’sy to their will;

Hooking both right and wrong to the appetite, To follow as it draws! I’ll to my brother: Though he hath fall’n by prompture of the blood,

Yet hath he in him such a mind of honour, That, had he twenty heads to tender down On twenty bloody blocks, he’d yield them up, Before his sister should her body stoop To such abhor’d pollution. 183

Then, Isabel, live chaste, and, brother, die: More than our brother is our chastity. I’ll tell him yet of Angelo’s request, And fit his mind to death, for his soul’s rest.

3. \textit{Affection}, impulse.
ACT III.

SCENE I. A room in the prison.

Enter Duke disguised as before, Claudio, and Provost.

Duke. So then you hope of pardon from Lord Angelo?

Claud. The miserable have no other medicine
But only hope:
I have hope to live, and am prepar'd to die.

Duke. Be absolute for death;¹ either death or life
Shall thereby be the sweeter. Reason thus with life:
If I do lose thee, I do lose a thing
That none but fools would keep: a breath thou art,
Servile to all the skyey influences, ²
That dost this habitation, where thou keep'st,
Hourly afflict: merely, thou art death's fool;
For him thou labour'st by thy flight to shun
And yet runnest toward him still. Thou art not noble;
For all the accommodations that thou bear'st
Are nurs'd by baseness. Thou 'rt by no means valiant;
For thou dost fear the soft and tender fork
Of a poor worm. Thy best of rest is sleep,
And that thou oft provok'st; yet grossly fear'st
Thy death, which is no more. Thou art not thyself;
For thou exist'st on many a thousand grains
That issue out of dust. Happy thou art not;
For what thou hast not, still thou striv'st to get,
And what thou hast, forgett'st. Thou art not certain;
For thy complexion shifts to strange effects,³
After the moon. If thou art rich, thou 'rt poor;
For, like an ass whose back with ingots bows,
Thou bear'st thy heavy riches but a journey,
And death unloads thee. [Friend hast thou none;
For thine own bowels, which do call thee sire,
The mere effusion of thy proper loins. ⁴

Do curse the gout, serpigo, ⁵ and the rheum,
For ending thee no sooner. Thou hast nor youth nor age,
But, as it were, an after-dinner's sleep,
Dreaming on both; for all thy blessed youth
Becomes as aged, and doth beg the alms
Of palsied eld; and when thou art old and rich,
Thou hast neither heat, affection, limb, nor beauty,
To make thy riches pleasant. What's yet in this
That bears the name of life? Yet in this life
Lie hid mee thousand deaths:⁶ yet death we fear,
That makes these odds all even.

Claud. I humbly thank you.
To sue to live, I find. I seek to die;
And, seeking death, find life: let it come on.

Isab. [Within] What, ho! Peace here; grace and good company!

Prov. Who's there? come in: the wish deserves a welcome. [Goes to door.

Duke. Dear sir, ere long I'll visit you again.

Claud. Most holy sir, I thank you.

Isab. [Outside door] My business is a word or two with Claudio.

Prov. And very welcome. [Returns from door, ushering in Isabella] Look, signior, here's your sister.

Duke. Provost, a word with you.

Prov. As many as you please.

Duke. Bring me to hear them speak, where I may be conceal'd.

[Exeunt Duke and Provost; Duke is seen from time to time, listening.

Claud. Now, sister, what's the comfort?

Isab. Why, as all comforts are; most good, most good indeed.

Lord Angelo, having affairs to heaven,
Intends you for his swift ambassador,
Where you shall be an everlasting leiger.⁷

¹ Be absolute for death, i.e. be certain you will die.
² Effects, expressions.
³ Serpigo, a creeping eruption of the skin.
⁴ Moe thousand deaths, i.e. a thousand more deaths.
⁵ Leiger (or lieger), resident ambassador.
Therefore your best appointment make with speed;

To-morrow you set on.

Claud. Is there no remedy?

Isab. None, but such remedy as, to save a head,

To cleave a heart in twain.

Claud. But is there any?

Isab. Yes, brother, you may live:

There is a devilish mercy in the judge,

If you'll implore it, that will free your life,

But fetter you till death.

Claud. Perpetual durance?

Isab. Ay, just; perpetual durance, a restraint,

Though all the world's vastidity you had,

To a determin'd scope.

Claud. But in what nature?

Isab. In such a one as, you consenting to it,

Would bark your honour from that trunk you bear,

And leave you naked.

Claud. Let me know the point!

Isab. O, I do fear thee, Claudio; and I quake,

Lest thou a feverous life shouldst entertain,

And six or seven winters more respect

Than a perpetual honour. Dar'st thou die?

[A pause. Claudio turns his face away.

The sense of death is most in apprehension;

And the poor beetle that we tread upon,

In corporal sufferance finds a pang as great

As when a giant dies.

Claud. Why give you me this shame?

Think you I can a resolution fetch

From flowery tenderness? If I must die,

I will encounter darkness as a bride,

And hug it in mine arms.

Isab. There spake my brother; there my father's grave

Did utter forth a voice! [Embracing him]

Yes, thou must die:

Thou art too noble to conserve a life

In base appliances. This outward sainted deputy,

Whose settled visage and deliberate word

Nips youth i'the head, and folliedoth emmew[

As falcon doth the fowl, is yet a devil;

[His fitth within being cast, he would appear

A pond as deep as hell.]

Claud. The prentice Angelo?

Isab. O, 'tis the cunning livery of hell,

The damned'st body to invest and cover

In prentice's guards! Dost thou think, Claudio?

If I would yield him my virginity,

Thou mightest be freed.

Claud. O heavens! it cannot be.

Isab. Yes, he would give't thee, from this rank offence,

So to offend him still. This night's the time

That I should do what I abhor to name,

Or else thou diest to-morrow.

Claud. Thou shalt not do't.

Isab. O, were it but my life,

I'd throw it down for your deliverance

As frankly as a pin.

Claud. [Embracing her] Thanks, dear Isabel.

Isab. Be ready, Claudio, for your death to-morrow.

Claud. [Yes. Has he affections in him,

That thus can make him bite the law by the nose,

When he would force it? Sure, it is no sin;

Or of the deadly seven it is the least.

Isab. Which is the least?

Claud. If it were damnable, he being so wise,

Why would he for the momentary trick

Be perdurably fin'd? — [Despairingly]

Isabel!

Isab. What says my brother?

Claud. Death is a fearful thing.

Isab. And shamed life a hateful.

Claud. Ay, but to die, and go we know not where;

To lie in cold obstruction, and to rot;

This sensible warm motion to become

A kneaded clod; and the delighted spirit

To bathe in fiery floods, or to reside

In thrilling region of thick-ribbed ice;

To be imprison'd in the viewless winds,

And blown with restless violence round about

The pendent world; or to be worse than worst

Of those that lawless and uncertain thought

Imagine howling: 'tis too horrible!

The weariest and most loathed worldly life

That age, ache, penury, and imprisonment

---

1 Appointment, equipment.

8 Prentice, a word of doubtful meaning; perhaps - prince.

4 Perdurably fin'd, everlasting punished.

Delighted, accustomed to delight.
Can lay on nature is a paradise
To what we fear of death.

Isab. Alas, alas!

Claud. Sweet sister, let me live:
What sin you do to save a brother's life,
Nature dispenses with the deed so far
That it becomes a virtue.

Isab. O faithless coward! O dishonest wretch!
Wilt thou be made a man out of my vice?
Is't not a kind of incest, to take life
From thine own sister's shame? [What should I think?
Heaven shield my mother play'd my father fair!

For such a warped slip of wilderness
Ne'er issued from his blood. ] Take my defiance;
Die, perish! Might but my bending down
Reprieve thee from thy fate, it should proceed:
I'll pray a thousand prayers for thy death,
No word to save thee.

Claud. Nay, hear me, Isabel.

Isab. O, fie, fie, fie!

Thy sin's not accidental, but a trade.
Mercy to thee would prove itself a bawd:
'Tis best that thou diest quickly. [Going.

Claud. O, hear me, Isabella!

1 Wilderness, wildness.
had never the purpose to corrupt her; only he hath made an assay of her virtue to practise his judgment with the disposition of natures: she, having the truth of honour in her, hath made him that gracious denial which he is most glad to receive. I am confessor to Angelo, and I know this to be true; therefore prepare yourself to death: do not satisfy your resolution with hopes that are fallible: tomorrow you must die; go to your knees, and make ready.

Claud. Let me ask my sister pardon. [Crosses to Isabella, kneels, and kisses her hand.] I am so out of love with life, that I will sue to be rid of it.

Duke. Hold you there: farewell. [Exit Claudio; Duke comes down.] Provost, a word with you!

Re-enter Provost.

Prov. What's your will, father?

Duke. That now you are come, you will be gone. Leave me a while with the maid: my mind promises with my habit no loss shall touch her by my company.

Prov. In good time.

Duke. The hand that hath made you fair hath made you good: the goodness that is cheap in beauty makes beauty brief in goodness; but grace, being the soul of your complexion, shall keep the body of it ever fair. The assault that Angelo hath made to you, fortune hath convey'd to my understanding; and, but that frailty hath examples for his falling, I should wonder at Angelo. How will you do to content this substitute, and to save your brother?

Isab. I am now going to resolve him, I had rather my brother die by the law than my son should be unlawfully born. But O how much is the good duke deceiv'd in Angelo! If ever he return, and I can speak to him, I will open my lips in vain, or discover his government.

Duke. That shall not be much amiss: yet, as the matter now stands, he will avoid your accusation: "he made trial of you only." Therefore fasten your ear on my advisings: to the love I have in doing good a remedy presents itself. I do make myself believe that you may most uprightly do a poor wronged lady a merited benefit; redeem your brother from the angry law; do no stain to your own gracious person; and much please the absent duke, if peradventure he shall ever return to have hearing of this business.

Isab. Let me hear you speak further. I have spirit to do any thing that appears not foul in the truth of my spirit.

Duke. Virtue is bold, and goodness never fearful. Have you not heard speak of Mariana, the sister of Frederick the great soldier who miscarried at sea?

Isab. I have heard of the lady, and good words went with her name.

Duke. She should this Angelo have married; was affianced to her oath, and the nuptial appointed: between which time of the contract and limit of the solemnity, her brother Frederick was wreck'd at sea, having in that perished vessel the dowry of his sister. But mark how heavily this befell to the poor gentlewoman: there she lost a noble and renowned brother, in his love toward her ever most kind and natural; with him, the portion and sinew of her fortune, her marriage-dowry; with both, her combine husband, this well-seeming Angelo.

Isab. Can this be so? did Angelo so leave her?

Duke. Left her in her tears, and dried not one of them with his comfort; swallowed his vows whole, pretending in her discoveries of dishonour: in few, bestow'd her on her own lamentation, which she yet wears for his sake; and he, a marble to her tears, is washed with them, but relents not.

Isab. What a merit were it in death to take this poor maid from the world! What corruption in this life, that it will let this man live! But how out of this can she avail?

Duke. It is a rupture that you may easily heal: and the cure of it not only saves your brother, but keeps you from dishonour in doing it.

Isab. Show me how, good father.
Duke. This forenamed maid hath yet in her the continuance of her first affection: his unjust unkindness, that in all reason should have quenched her love, hath, like an impediment in the current, made it more violent and unruly. Go you to Angelo; answer his requiring with a plausible obedience; agree with his demands to the point; only refer yourself to this advantage, first, that your stay with him may not be long; that the time may have all shadow and silence in it; and the place answer to convenience. This being granted in course,—and now follows all,—we shall advise this wronged maid to stand up your appointment, go in your place; if the encounter acknowledge itself hereafter, it may compel him to her recompense: and here, by this, is your brother saved, your honour untainted, the poor Mariana advantaged, and the corrupt deputy sealed. The maid will I frame and make fit for his attempt. If you think well to carry this as you may, the doubleness of the benefit defends the deceit from reproof. What think you of it?

Isab. The image of it gives me content already; and I trust it will grow to a most prosperous perfection.

Duke. It lies much in your holding up. Haste you speedily to Angelo: if for this night he entreat you to his bed, give him promise of satisfaction. I will presently to Saint Luke’s: there, at the moated grange, resides this dejected Mariana. At that place call upon me; and dispatch with Angelo, that it may be quickly.

Isab. I thank you for this comfort. Fare you well, good father.

[Exeunt severally.

Scene II. The street before the prison.

Enter, on one side, Duke disguised as before; on the other, Elbow, and Officers with Pompey; the Duke keeps, at first, in the background.

Elb. Nay, if there be no remedy for it, but that you will needs buy and sell men and women like beasts, we shall have all the world drink brown and white bastard.

Duke. O heavens! what stuff is here?

Pom. Twas never merry world since, of two usuries, the merriest was put down, and the worser allow’d by order of law: a fur’d gown to keep him warm; and fur’d with fox and lamb-skins too, to signify, that craft, being richer than innocency, stands for the facing.

Elb. Come your way, sir. [Duke advances]

Bless you, good father friar.

Duke. And you, good brother father. What offence hath this man made you, sir?

Elb. Marry, sir, he hath offended the law: and, sir, we take him to be a thief too, sir; for we have found upon him, sir, a strange pick-lock, which we have sent to the deputy.

Duke. Fie, sirrah! [a bawd, a wicked bawd! The evil that thou causest to be done,
That is thy means to live. Do thou but think
What ‘tis to cram a maw or clothe a back
From such a filthy vice: say to thyself,
From their abominable and beastly touches
I drink, I eat, array myself, and live.
Canst thou believe thy living is a life,
So stinkingly depending? Go mend, go mend.

Pom. Indeed, it does stink in some sort, sir; but yet, sir, I would prove—

Duke. Nay, if the devil have given thee proofs for sin,
Thou wilt prove him. Take him to prison, officer:
Correction and instruction must both work
Ere this rude beast will profit.

Elb. He must before the deputy, sir; [he has given him warning: the deputy cannot abide a whoremaster: if he be a whoremonger, and comes before him, he were as good go a mile on his errand.

Duke. That we were all, as some would seem to be,
From our faults, as faults from seeming, free!

Elb. His neck will come to your waist,—a cord, sir.

Pom. I spy comfort; I cry bail. Here’s a gentleman and a friend of mine.

Enter Lucio.

Lucio. How now, noble Pompey! What, at the wheels of Caesar! art thou led in triump'fh? [What, is there none of Pygmalion's images, newly made woman, to be had now, for putting the hand in the pocket and extracting clutch'd? What reply, ha? What sayest thou to this tune, matter, and method? Is 't not drown'd i' the last rain, ha? What say'st thou, Trot? Is the world as it was, man?

Which is the way? Is it sad, and few words?
or how? The trick of it?

Duke. Still thus, and thus; still worse!

Lucio. How doth my dear morsel, thy mistress? Procures she still, ha?

Pom. Troth, sir, she hath eaten up all her beef, and she is herself in the tub.

Lucio. Why, 'tis good; it is the right of it;

Duke. Canst thou believe thy living is a life,
So stinkingly depending? Go mend, go mend.—(Act III. 2. 27, 28.)

it must be so: ever your fresh whore and your powder'd bawd: an unshunn'd consequence;

Esb. For being a bawd, for being a bawd.

Lucio. Well, then, imprison him: if imprisonment be the due of a bawd, why, 'tis his right: bawd is he doubtless, and of antiquity too; bawd-born.] Farewell, good Pompey.
Commend me to the prison, Pompey: you will turn good husband\(^1\) now, Pompey; you will keep the house.

Pom. I hope, sir, your good worship will be my bail.

Lucio. No, indeed, will I not, Pompey; it is not the wear.\(^2\) I will pray, Pompey, to increase your bondage: if you take it not patiently, why, your mettle is the more.
Adieu, trusty Pompey. Bless you, friar.

Duke. And you.

\(^1\) Husband, i.e. house-band.
\(^2\) The wear, i.e. the fashion.
ACT III. Scene 2.

Lucio. Does Bridget paint still, Pompey, ha?

Elb. Come your ways, sir; come.

[^Constables advance.]

Pom. You will not bail me, then, sir?

Lucio. Then, Pompey, nor now. What news abroad, friar? what news?

Elb. Come your ways, sir; come.

[^Constables seize Pompey.]

Lucio. Go to kennel, Pompey, go. [Exeunt Elbow, and Officers with Pompey.] What news, friar, of the duke? [Duke turns his face away.

Duke. I know none. Can you tell me of any?

Lucio. Some say he is with the Emperor of Russia; other some, he is in Rome: but where is he, think you?

Duke. I know not where; but whereasover, I wish him well.

Lucio. It was a mad fantastical trick of him to steal from the state, and usurp the beggary he was never born to. Lord Angelo dukes it well in his absence; he puts transgression to 't.

Duke. He does well in 't.

Lucio. A little more lenity to lechery would do no harm in him: something too crabbed that way, friar.

Duke. It is too general a vice, and severity must cure it.

Lucio. Yes, in good sooth, the vice is of a great kindred; it is well allied: but it is impossible to extirp it quite, friar, till eating and drinking be put down. They say this Angelo was not made by man and woman, after this downright way of creation: is it true, think you?

Duke. How should he be made, then?

Lucio. Some report a sea-maid spawned him; [some, that he was begot between two stock-fishes. But it is certain that, when he makes water, his urine is congealed ice; that I know to be true: and he is a motion[1] generative; that's infallible.] 119

Duke. You are pleasant, sir, and speak apace.

Lucio. Why, what a ruthless thing is this [in him, [for the rebellion of a codpiece to take away the life of a man!]] Would the duke that is absent have done this? Ere he would have hanged a man for the getting a hundred bus-

[^1] _Motion_, puppet.

198

tards, he would have paid for the nursing a thousand: [he had some feeling of the sport; he knew the service, and that instructed him to mercy.]

Duke. I never heard the absent duke much detected[2] for women; he was not inclin'd that way.

Lucio. O, sir, you are deceiv'd.

Duke. T is not possible.

Lucio. Who, not the duke? yes, your beggar of fifty; and his use was to put a ducat in her clack-dish: the duke had crochets in him. He would be drunk too; that let me inform you.

Duke. You do him wrong, surely.

Lucio. Sir, I was an inward[3] of his. A shy fellow was the duke: and I believe I know the cause of his withdrawing.

Duke. What, I prithee, might be the cause?

Lucio. No, pardon; 't is a secret must be lock'd within the teeth and the lips: but this I can let you understand, the greater file of the subject held the duke to be wise.

Duke. Wise! why, no question but he was.

Lucio. A very superficial, ignorant, unwielding fellow.

Duke. Either this is envy in you, folly, or mistaking: the very stream of his life and the business he hath helmed[4] must, upon a warranted need, give him a better proclamation. Let him be but testimonied in his own bringings-forth, and he shall appear to the envious a scholar, a statesman, and a soldier. Therefore you speak unskilfully; or if your knowledge be more, it is much darken'd in your malice.

Lucio. Sir, I know him, and I love him.

Duke. Love talks with better knowledge, and knowledge with dearer love.

Lucio. Come, sir, I know what I know.

Duke. I can hardly believe that, since you know not what you speak. But, if ever the duke return, as our prayers are he may, let me desire you to make your answer before him. If it be honest you have spoke, you have courage to maintain it: I am bound to call upon you; and, I pray you, your name?

[^4] Helmed, i.e. steered through.
Lucio. Sir, my name is Lucio; well known to the duke. 170
Duke. He shall know you better, sir, if I may live to report you.
Lucio. I fear you not.
Duke. O, you hope the duke will return no more; or you imagine me too unhurtful an opposite. But, indeed, I can do you little harm; you'll forswear this again.
Lucio. I'll be hang'd first: thou art deceiv'd in me, friar. [But no more of this. Canst thou tell if Claudio die to-morrow or no? 180
Duke. Why should he die, sir?
Lucio. Why, for filling a bottle with a tundish, 1 I would the duke we talk of were return'd again: this ungenitur'd agent will unpeople the province with continency; sparrows must not build in his house-eaves, because they are lecherous. The duke yet would have dark deeds darkly answered; he would never bring them to light: would he were return'd! Marry, this Claudio is condemned for untrustiness. Farewell, good friar: I prithee, pray for me. The duke, I say to thee again, would eat mutton on Fridays. He's now past it; yet (and I say to thee) he would mouth with a beggar, though he smelt brown bread and garlic: say that I said so. Farewell. [Exit.
Duke. No might nor greatness in mortality Can censure escape; back-wounding calumny The whitest virtue strikes. What king so strong Can tie the gall up in the slanderous tongue? But who comes here? 190
[He retires.

Enter Escalus, Provost, and Officers [with Mistress Overdone]

Escal. [Go; away with her to prison!
Mrs. Ov. Good my lord, be good to me; your honour is accounted a merciful man; good my lord.
Escal. Double and treble admonition, and still forfeit 2 in the same kind? This would make mercy swear and play the tyrant.
Prov. A bawd of eleven years' continuance, may it please your honour. 200
Mrs. Ov. My lord, this is one Lucio's information against me. Mistress Kate Keepdown

---

1 Tundish, funnel. 2 Forfeit, liable to penalty.
with divines, and have all charitable preparation. If my brother wrought by my pity, it should not be so with him.

Prov. [Pointing to Duke] So, please you, this friar hath been with him, and advis'd him for th' entertainment of death.

Esca. Good even, good father.

Duke. [Advancing] Bliss and goodness on you!

Esca. Of whence are you?

Duke. Not of this country, though my chance is now

To use it for my time: I am a brother
Of gracious order, late come from the See
In special business from his holiness.

Esca. What news abroad i' the world?

Duke. None, but that there is so great a fever on goodness, that the dissolution of it must cure it: novelty is only in request; and it is as dangerous to be aged in any kind of course, as it is virtuous to be constant in any undertaking: there is scarce truth enough alive to make societies secure; but security is enough to make fellowship accursed: much upon this riddle runs the wisdom of the world. This news is old enough, yet it is every day's news. I pray you, sir, of what disposition was the duke?

Esca. One that, above all other strife, contended especially to know himself.

Duke. What pleasure was he given to?

Esca. Rather rejoicing to see another merry, than merry at any thing which profess'd to make him rejoice: a gentleman of all temperance. But leave we him to his events, with a prayer they may prove prosperous: and let me desire to know how you find Claudio prepar'd. I am made to understand that you have lent him visitation.

Duke. He professes to have received no sinister measure from his judge, but most willingly humbles himself to the determination of justice: yet had he fram'd to himself, by the instruction of his frailty, many deceiving promises of life; which I, by my good leisure, have discredited to him, and now is he resolv'd to die.

Esca. You have paid the heavens your function, and the prisoner the very debt of your calling. I have labour'd for the poor gentleman to the extreme shore of my modesty: but my brother justice have I found so severe, that he hath forc'd me to tell him he is indeed Justice.

Duke. If his own life answer the straitness of his proceeding, it shall become him well; wherein if he chance to fail, he hath sentenc'd himself.

Esca. I am going to visit the prisoner. Fare you well.

Duke. Peace be with you!

[Exeunt Escaus and Provost.

He who the sword of heaven will bear
Should be as holy as severe;
Pattern in himself to know,
Grace to stand, and virtue go;
More nor less to others paying
Than by self-offences weighing.

 Shame to him whose cruel striking
Kills for faults of his own liking!
Twice treble shame on Angelo,
'To weed my vice, and let his grow!
O, what may man within him hide,
Though angel on the outward side!
How may likeness, made in crimes,
Making practice on the times,
To draw with idle spiders' strings
Most ponderous and substantial things!
Craft against vice I must apply:
With Angelo to-night shall lie
His old betrothed but despised;
So disguise shall, by the disguised,
Pay with falsehood false exacting,
And perform an old contracting.]

[Exit.
ACT IV.

[SCENE I. The Moated Grange at St. Luke's.]

Enter Mariana and a Boy singing.

Song.
Take, O, take those lips away,
That so sweetly were forsworn;
And those eyes, the break of day,
Lights that do mislead the morn:

But my kisses bring again,
Bring again;
Seals of love, but seal'd in vain,
Seal'd in vain.

Mari. Break off thy song, and haste thee quick away:
Here comes a man of comfort, whose advice
Hath often still'd my brawling discontent.

[Exit Boy.

Enter Duke disguised as before.

I cry you mercy, sir; and well could wish
You had not found me here so musical.
Let me excuse me, and believe me so,
My mirth it much displeas'd, but pleas'd my woe.

Duke. T is good: though music oft hath such a charm
To make bad good, and good provoke to harm.
I pray you, tell me, hath any body inquired for me here to-day? much upon this time have I promised here to meet.

Mari. You have not been inquired after: I have sat here all day.

Duke. I do constantly believe you. The time is come even now. I shall crave your forbearance a little: may be I will call upon you anon, for some advantage to yourself.

Mari. I am always bound to you. [Exit.

---

1 Constantly, firmly.
Enter Isabella.

Duke. Very well met, and welcome.
What is the news from this good deputy?
Isab. He hath a garden circummur'd with brick,
Whose western side is with a vineyard back'd;
And to that vineyard is a planched gate, 30
That makes his opening with this bigger key:
This other doth command a little door
Which from the vineyard to the garden leads;
There have I made my promise
Upon the heavy middle of the night
To call upon him.
Duke. But shall you on your knowledge find this way? 40
Isab. I have ta'en a due and wary note upon't:
With whispering and most guilty diligence,
In action all of precept, he did show me
The way twice o'er.
Duke. Are there no other tokens
Between you greed concerning her observance?
Isab. No, none, but only a repair i' the dark;
And that I have possessed him my most stay
Can be but brief; for I have made him know
I have a servant comes with me along,
That stays upon me; whose persuasion is
I come about my brother.
Duke. 'Tis well borne up.
I have not yet made known to Mariana
A word of this. What, ho! within! come forth!

Re-enter Mariana.

I pray you, be acquainted with this maid;
She comes to do you good.
Isab. I do desire the like.
Duke. Do you persuade yourself that I respect you?
Mari. Good friar, I know you do, and have found it.
Duke. Take, then, this your companion by the hand,
Who hath a story ready for your ear.
I shall attend your leisure: but make haste;
The vaporous night approaches.
Mari. Will 't please you walk aside?

[Exeunt Mariana and Isabella.

Duke. O place and greatness, millions of false eyes
Are stuck upon thee! volumes of report
Run with these false and most contrarious quests
Upon thy doings: thousand escapes of wit
Make thee the father of their idle dream,
And rack thee in their fancies.

Re-enter Mariana and Isabella.

Welcome! How agreed!
Isab. She'll take the enterprise upon her,
father,
If you advise it.
Duke. It is not my consent,
But my entreaty too.
Isab. Little have you to say
When you depart from him, but, soft and low,
"Remember now my brother."
Mari. Fear me not.
Duke. Nor, gentle daughter, fear you not at all.
He is your husband on a pre-contráct:
To bring you thus together, 'tis no sin,
Sith that the justice of your title to him
Doth flourish the deceit. Come, let us go:
Our corn's to reap, for yet our tilth's to sow.

[Exeunt.]

Scene II. A room in the prison.

Enter Provost and Pompey.

Prov. Come hither, sirrah. Can you cut off a man's head?
Pom. If the man be a bachelor, sir, I can;
but if he be a married man, he's his wife's head,
and I can never cut off a woman's head.

Prov. Come, sir, leave me your snatches, and yield me a direct answer. To-morrow morning are to die Claudio and Barnardine. Here is in our prison a common executioner, who in his office lacks a helper: if you will take it on you to assist him, it shall redeem you from your gyves; if not, you shall have your full time of imprisonment, and your deliverance with an unpitied whipping, [for you have been a notorious bawd.]

---

1 Planched, made of planks or boards.
2 Greed, i.e. agreed.
3 Possess'd, informed.
4 Escapes, sallies.
5 Flourish, colour, varnish.
6 Snatches, scraps of wit.
Pom. Sir, [I have been an unlawful bawd time out of mind; but yet] I will be content to be a lawful hangman. I would be glad to receive some instruction from my fellow partner.

Prov. What, ho, Abhorson! Where's Abhorson, there?

Enter Abhorson.

Abhor. Do you call, sir?

Prov. Sirrah, here's a fellow will help you to-morrow in your execution. If you think it meet, compound with him by the year, and let him abide here with you; if not, use him for the present, and dismiss him. [He cannot plead his estimation with you; he hath been a bawd.]

Abhor. [A bawd, sir?] fie upon him! he will discredit our mystery.

Prov. Go to, sir; you weigh equally; a feather will turn the scale.

[Exit.

Pom. Pray, sir, by your good favour,—for surely, sir, a good favour you have, but that you have a hanging look,—do you call, sir, your occupation a mystery?

Abhor. Ay, sir; a mystery.

Pom. Painting, sir, I have heard say, is a mystery; [and your whores, sir, being members of my occupation, using painting, do prove my occupation a mystery:] but what mystery there should be in hanging, if I should be hang'd, I cannot imagine.

Abhor. Sir, it is a mystery.

Pom. Proof?

Abhor. Every true man's apparel fits your thief.

Pom. If it be too little for your thief, your true man thinks it big enough; if it be too big for your thief, your thief thinks it little enough: so every true man's apparel fits your thief.

Re-enter Provost.

Prov. Are you agreed?

Pom. Sir, I will serve him; [for I do find your hangman is a more penitent trade than your bawd; he doth oftener ask forgiveness.]

Prov. You, sirrah, provide your block and your axe to-morrow four o'clock.

Abhor. [Come on, bawd;] I will instruct thee in my trade; follow.

Pom. I do desire to learn, sir: and I hope, if you have occasion to use me for your own turn, you shall find me yare;¹ for, truly, sir, for your kindness I owe you a good turn.

Prov. Call hither Barnardine and Claudio:

[Exeunt Pompey and Abhorson.

---

¹ Yare, ready.

203
Thou must be made immortal. Where's Barnardine?

Claud. As fast lock'd up in sleep as guiltless labour

When it lies starkly in the traveller's bones:
He will not wake.

Prov. Who can do good on him?
Well, go, prepare yourself. [Knocking within.]
But, hark, what noise?
Heaven give your spirits comfort! [Exit Claudio.] By and by!
I hope it is some pardon or reprieve
For the most gentle Claudio.

Enter Duke disguised as before, with a letter having a large seal.

Welcome, father.

Duke. The best and wholesomest spirits of the night
Envelop you, good provost! Who call'd here of late?

Prov. None, since the curfew rung.
Duke. Not Isabel?
Prov. No.
Duke. They will, then, ere 't be long.
Prov. What comfort is for Claudio?
Duke. There's some in hope.
Prov. It is a bitter deputy.
Duke. Not so, not so; his life is parallel'd
Even with the stroke and line of his great justice:
He doth with holy abstinencc subdue
That in himself which spurs on his power
To qualify in others: were he meal'd with that
Which he corrects, then were he tyrannous;
But this being so, he's just. [Knocking within.]
Now are they come.

[Exit Provost.

This is a gentle provost: seldom when
The steeled gaoler is the friend of men.

[Knocking within.

How now! what noise? That spirit's possess'd with haste
That wounds the unsisting postern with these strokes.

1 Qualify, temper, abate.
2 Meal'd, sprinkled, defiled.
3 Unsisting, perhaps = shaking.
let me have Claudio's head sent me by five. Let this be duly performed; with a thought that more depends on it than we must yet deliver. Thus fail not to do your office, as you will answer it at your peril."

What say you to this, sir?

Duke. What is that Barnardine who is to be executed in the afternoon?

Prov. A Bohemian born, but here nurs'd up and bred; one that is a prisoner nine years old.

Duke. How came it that the absent duke had not either deliver'd him to his liberty or executed him? I have heard it was ever his manner to do so.

Prov. His friends still wrought reprieves for him: and, indeed, his fact, till now in the government of Lord Angelo, came not to an undoubted proof.

Duke. It is now apparent?

Prov. Most manifest, and not denied by himself.

Duke. Hath he borne himself penitently in prison? how seems he to be touch'd?

Prov. A man that apprehends death no more dreadfully but as a drunken sleep; careless, reckless, and fearless of what's past, present, or to come; insensible of mortality, and desperately mortal.

Duke. He wants advice.

Prov. He will hear none: he hath evermore had the liberty of the prison; give him leave to escape hence, he would not: drunk many times a day, if not many days entirely drunk. We have very oft awak'd him, as if to carry him to execution, and showed him a seeming warrant for it: he hath not moved him at all.

Duke. More of him anon. There is written in your brow, provost, honesty and constancy: if I read it not truly, my ancient skill beguiles me; but, in the boldness of my cunning, I will lay myself in hazard. Claudio, whom here you have warrant to execute, is no greater forfeit to the law than Angelo, who hath sentenced him. To make you understand this in a manifested effect, I crave but four days' respite; for the which you are to do me both a present and a dangerous courtesy.

Prov. Pray, sir, in what?

Duke. In the delaying death.

Prov. Alack, how may I do it, having the hour limited, and an express command, under penalty, to deliver his head in the view of Angelo? I may make my case as Claudio's, to cross this in the smallest.

Duke. By the vow of mine order I warrant you, if my instructions may be your guide. Let this Barnardine be this morning executed, and his head borne to Angelo.

Prov. Angelo hath seen them both, and will discover the favour.²

Duke. O, death's a great disguiser; and you may add to it. Shave the head, and tie the beard; and say it was the desire of the penitent to be so bar'd before his death: you know the course is common. If any thing fall to you upon this, more than thanks and good fortune, by the saint whom I profess, I will plead against it with my life.

Prov. Pardon me, good father; it is against my oath.

Duke. Were you sworn to the duke, or to the deputy?

Prov. To him, and to his substitutes.

Duke. You will think you have made no offence, if the duke avouch the justice of your dealing?

Prov. But what likelihood is in that?

Duke. Not a resemblance, but a certainty. Yet since I see you fearful that neither my cost, integrity, nor persuasion can with ease attempt² you, I will go further than I meant, to pluck all fears out of you. Look you, sir, [showing him the letter] here is the hand and seal of the duke: you know the character, I doubt not; and the signet is not strange to you.

Prov. I know them both.

Duke. The contents of this is the return of the duke; you shall anon over-read it at your pleasure; where you shall find, within these two days he will be here. This is a thing that Angelo knows not; for he this very day receives letters of strange tenour; perchance of the duke's death, perchance entering into some monastery, but by chance nothing of what is writ. Look, the unfolding star calls up the

---

1 Fact, deed, crime.
2 Discover the favour, recognize the face.
3 Attempt, tempt.
shepherd. Put not yourself into amazement how these things should be: all difficulties are but easy when they are known. Call your executioner, and off with Barnardine's head: I will give him a present shrift, and advise him for a better place. Yet you are amaz'd; but this shall absolutely resolve you. Come away; it is almost clear dawn. [Exeunt.

SCENE III. A corridor in the prison; at back door of Barnardine's cell in the same.

Enter Pompey.

Pom. I am as well acquainted here as I was in our house of profession: one would think it were Mistress Overdone's own house, for here be many of her old customers. First, here's young Master Raish; he's in for a commodity of brown paper and old ginger, nine-score and seventeen pounds; of which he made five marks, ready money: marry, then ginger was not much in request, for the old women were all dead. Then is there here one Master Cap'er, at the suit of Master Three-pile the mercer, for some four suits of peach-coloured satin, which now peaches him a beggar. Then have we here young Dizy, and young Master Deep-vow, and Master Copper-spur, and Master Starve-lackey the rapier and dagger man, and young Drop-heir that killed lusty Pudding, and Master Forthlight the tilter, and brave Master Shooty the great traveller, and wild Half-can that stabbed Pots, and, I think, forty more; all great doers in our trade, and are now "for the Lord's sake."

Enter Abhorson.

Abhor. Sirrah, bring Barnardine hither.

Pom. [Calling outside door of cell] Master Barnardine! you must rise and be hang'd, Master Barnardine!

Abhor. What, ho, Barnardine!

[ Goes up and opens door of cell. ]

Bar. [Within] A pox o' your throats! Who makes that noise there? What are you?

Pom. Your friends, sir; the hangman. You must be so good, sir, to rise and be put to death.

1 Resolve, convince. 2 Peaches, i.e. impeaches.
MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

ACT IV. Scene 3.

Re-enter Provost.

Prov. Now, sir, how do you find the prisoner?

Duke. A creature unprepar'd, unmeet for death;
And to transport him in the mind he is
Were damnable.

Prov. Here in the prison, father,
There died this morning of a cruel fever
One Ragozine, a most notorious pirate,
A man of Claudio's years; his beard and head
Just of his colour. What if we do omit
This reprobate till he were well inclin'd;
And satisfy the deputy with the visage
Of Ragozine, more like to Claudio?

Duke. O, 'tis an accident that heaven provides!
Dispatch it presently; the hour draws on Prefix'd by Angelo: see this be done,
And sent according to command; whiles I
Persuade this rude wretch willingly to die.

Prov. This shall be done, good father, present
But Barnardine must die this afternoon:
And how shall we continue Claudio,
To save me from the danger that might come
If he were known alive?

Duke. Let this be done.
Put them in secret holds, both Barnardine and Claudio:

Ere twice the sun hath made his journal\(^1\) greeting
To the under generation, you shall find
Your safety manifested.

Prov. I am your free dependant.
Duke. Quick, dispatch, and send the head to Angelo. \([	ext{Exit Provost.}

Now will I write letters to Angelo,—
The provost, he shall bear them,—whose contents
Shall witness to him I am near at home,
And that, by great injunctions, I am bound

---

\(^1\) Journal, diurnal.
MEASURE FOR MEASURE.  ACT IV. Scene 3.

To enter publicly: him I'll desire To meet me at the consecrated fount, A league below the city; and from thence, By cold gradation and well-balanced form, We shall proceed with Angelo.

Re-enter Provost with Ragiozio's head in bag.

Prov. Here is the head; I'll carry it myself.
Duke. Convenient's it. Make as swift return; For I would commune with you of such things That want no ear but yours.

Prov. I'll make all speed. [Exit.
Isab. [Within] Peace, ho, be here!
Duke. The tongue of Isabel. She's come to know If yet her brother's pardon be come hither: But I will keep her ignorant of her good, To make her heavenly comforts of despair, When it is least expected.

Enter ISABELLA.

Isab. Ho, by your leave!
Duke. Good morning to you, fair and gracious daughter.
Isab. The better, given me by so holy a man. Hath yet the deputy sent my brother's pardon?
Duke. He hath releas'd him, Isabel, from the world:
His head is off, and sent to Angelo.
Isab. Nay, but it is not so.
Duke. It is no other: show your wisdom, daughter, In your close patience.

Isab. O, I will to him and pluck out his eyes!
Duke. You shall not be admitted to his sight.
Isab. Unhappy Claudius! wretched Isabel!
Injurious world! most dam'd Angelo!

[Ducking about agitatedly.

Duke. This nor hurts him nor profits you a jot; Forbear it therefore; give your cause to heaven.
Isabel comes down to him.

Mark what I say, which you shall find By every syllable a faithful verity: The duke comes home to-morrow;—nay, dry your eyes; One of our convent, and his confessor, Gives me this instance: already he hath carried

Notice to Escalus and Angelo; Who do prepare to meet him at the gates, There to give up their power. If you can, pace your wisdom
In that good path that I would wish it go; And you shall have your bosom* on this wretch, Grace of the duke, revenges to your heart, And general honour.

Isab. I am directed by you.
Duke. This letter, then, to Friar Peter give; Tis that he sent me of the duke's return: Say, by this token, I desire his company At Mariana's house to-night. Her cause and yours I'll perfect him withal; and he shall bring you Before the duke; and to the head of Angelo Accuse him home and home. For my poor self, I am combined by a sacred vow, And shall be absent. Wende you with this letter:

Command these fretting waters from your eyes With a light heart; trust not my holy order, If I pervert your course. Who's here?

Enter LUCIO.

Lucio. Good even. Friar, where's the provost?
Duke. Not within, sir.
Lucio. O pretty Isabella, I am pale at mine heart to see thine eyes so red: thou must be patient. I am fain to dine and sup with water and bran; I dare not for my head fill my belly; one fruitful meal would set me to't. But they say the duke will be here to-morrow. By my troth, Isabel, I lov'd thy brother: if the old fantastical duke of dark corners had been at home, he had lived. [Exit Isabella.
Duke. Sir, the duke is marvellous little beholding to your reports; but the best is, he lives not in them.

Lucio. Friar, thou knowest not the duke so well as I do: he's a better woodman than thou tak'st him for.
Duke. Well, you'll answer this one day. Fare ye well.

Lucio. Nay, tarry; I'll go along with thee: I can tell thee pretty tales of the duke.

Duke. You have told me too many of him

---

1 Convenient, becoming.  2 Shall not, i.e. will not.  3 Covert, convent.  4 Instance, intimation.

* Bosom, i.e. heart's desire.  * Combined, pledged.
already, sir, if they be true; if not true, none were enough.

Lucio. I was once before him for getting a wench with child.

Duke. Did you such a thing?

Lucio. Yes, marry, did I: but I was fain to forswear it; they would else have married me to the rotten medlar.

Duke. Sir, your company is fairer than honest. Rest you well.

Lucio. By my troth, I'll go with thee to the lane's end: [If bawdy talk offend you, we'll have very little of it.] Nay, friar, I am a kind of burr; I shall stick.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV. A room in Angelo's house.

Enter Angelo and Escalus, with letters.

Escalus. Every letter he hath writ hath disvouch'd other.

Angelo. In most uneven and distracted manner. His actions show much like to madness: pray heaven his wisdom be not tainted! And why meet him at the gates, and reliver our authorities there?

Escalus. I guess not.

Angelo. And why should we proclaim it in an hour before his entering, that if any crave redress of injustice, they should exhibit their petitions in the street?

Escalus. He shows his reason for that; to have a dispatch of complaints, and to deliver us from devices hereafter, which shall then have no power to stand against us.

Angelo. Well, I beseech you, let it be proclaimed:

Betwixt a' the morn I'll call you at your house:

Give notice to such men of sort and suit As are to meet him.

Escalus. I shall, sir. Fare you well.

Angelo. Good night. [Exit Escalus.

This deed unshapes me quite, makes me un

pregnant,

And dull to all proceedings. A deflower'd maid!

And by an eminent body that enforc'd The law against it! But that her tender shame

Will not proclaim against her maiden loss,

How might she tongue me! Yet reason dares her no;

For my authority bears of a credent bulk,

That no particular scandal once can touch

But it confounds the breather. He should have liv'd,

Save that his riotous youth, with dangerous sense,

Might in the times to come have ta'en revenge,

By so receiving a dishonour'd life

With ransom of such shame. Would yet he had liv'd!

Alack, when once our grace we have forgot,

Nothing goes right: we would, and we would not!

[Exit. Note:

1. Reliever, redeliver.

2. Unpregnant, unready.

VOL. V.

3. Tongue me, speak of me.

4. Particular, personal.

209 126
ACT IV. Scene 5.

MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

[SCENE V. Fields without the town.

Enter Duke in his own habit, and Friar Peter.

Duke. [Giving letters] These letters at fit time deliver me:
The provost knows our purpose and our plot.
The matter being afoot, keep your instruction,
And hold you ever to our special drift;
Though sometimes you do blemish1 from this to that,
As cause doth minister. Go call at Flavius’ house,
And tell him where I stay: give the like notice
To Valentius, Rowland, and to Crassus,
And bid them bring the trumpets2 to the gate;
But send me Flavius first.

Fri. P. It shall be speeded well. [Exit.

Enter Varrius.

Duke. I thank thee, Varrius; thou hast made good haste:
Come, we will walk. There’s other of our friends
Will greet us here anon, my gentle Varrius.

[Exeunt.]

[SCENE VI. Street near the city gate.

Enter Isabella and Mariana.

Isab. To speak so indirectly I am loth:
I would say the truth; but to accuse him so,
That is your part: yet I am advis’d to do it;
He says, to veil full purpose.

Mari. Be rul’d by him.

Isab. Besides, he tells me, if peradventure
He speak against me on the adverse side,
I should not think it strange; for ‘tis a physic
That’s bitter to sweet end.

Mari. I would Friar Peter—

Isab. O, peace! the friar is come.

Enter Friar Peter.

Fri. P. Come, I have found you out a stand
most fit,
Where you may have such vantage on the duke,
He shall not pass you. Twice have the trumpets sounded;
The generous and gravest citizens
Have hent3 the gates, and very near upon
The duke is entering: therefore, hence, away!

[Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE I. Before the gates of Vienna. Flourish of trumpets and drums.

Enter from one side, Duke, Varrius, Lords, Officers; from the city gates, Soldiers, then Angelo and Escalus, Lucio, Provost, &c. At the back, Friar Peter, Isabella, and Mariana veiled.

[Angelo and Escalus kneel and deliver up their commissions, which the Duke hands to an Officer. Angelo and Escalus rise.

Duke. My very worthy cousin, fairly met!
Our old and faithful friend, we are glad to see you.

Ang. Happy return be to your royal grace!

Escal. Many and hearty thankings to you both.
We have made inquiry of you; and we hear
Such goodness of your justice, that our soul
Cannot but yield you forth to public thanks,
Forerunning more requital.

Ang. You make my bonds still greater.

Duke. O, your desert speaks loud; [and I should wrong it,
To lock it in the wards of covert bosom, 10
When it deserves, with characters of brass,
A forted residence ‘gainst the tooth of time
And raze of oblivion.] Give me your hand,
And let the subject see, to make them know
That outward courtesies would fain proclaim Favour that keep within. Come, Escalus, [Takes the hands of both of them, placing Angelo on one side of him, Escalus on the other.

---

1 Blemish, start off.
2 Trumpets, trumpeters.
3 Hent, seized, taken possession of.

210
ACT V. Scene 1.

MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

You must walk by us on our other hand;
And good supporters are you.

FRIAR PETER and ISABELLA come forward.

Fri. P. Now is your time: speak loud and kneel before him.

Isab. Justice, O royal duke! Vail your regard [Kneeling.]

Upon a wrong'd, I would fain have said, a maid!
O worthy prince, dishonour not your eye
By throwing it on any other object
Till you have heard me in my true complaint,
And given me justice, justice, justice, justice!

Duke. Relate your wrongs; in what? by whom? be brief.

Here is Lord Angelo shall give you justice:
Reveal yourself to him.

Isab. O worthy duke,
You bid me seek redemption of the devil:
Hear me yourself; for that which I must speak
Must either punish thee, not being believing,
Or wring redress from you: hear me, O, hear me, here!

Ang. My lord, her wits, I fear me, are not firm:
She hath been a suitor to me for her brother
Cut off by course of justice,—

Isab. By course of justice! [Rising.

Ang. And she will speak most bitterly and strange.

Isab. Most strange, but yet most truly, will
I speak:
That Angelo's forsworn; is it not strange?
That Angelo's a murderer; is't not strange?
That Angelo is an adulterous thief,
An hypocrite, a virgin-violator;
Is it not strange and strange?

Duke. Nay, it is ten times strange.

Isab. It is not truer he is Angelo
Than this is all as true as it is strange:
Nay, it is ten times true; for truth is truth
To the end of reckoning.

Duke. Away with her! Poor soul,
She speaks this in the infirmity of sense.

The Officers are about to seize her;
she waves them back.

Isab. O prince, I conjure thee, as thou believest There is another comfort than this world,

That thou neglect me not, with that opinion
That I am touch'd with madness! Make not impossible
That which but seems unlike: 't is not impossible.

But one, the wicked'at caitiff on the ground,
May seem as shy, as grave, as just, as absolute
As Angelo; even so may Angelo,
In all his dressings, characts, titles, forms,
Be an arch-villain. Believe it, royal prince:
If he be less, he's nothing; but he's more,
Had I more name for badness.

Duke. By mine honesty,
If she be mad,—as I believe no other,—
Her madness hath the oddest frame of sense,
Such a dependency of thing on thing,
As e'er I heard in madness.

Isab. O gracious duke,
Harp not on that; nor do not banish reason
For inequality; but let your reason serve
To make the truth appear where it seems hid,
And hide the false, seems true. 4

Duke. Many that are not mad Have, sure, more lack of reason. What would you say?

Isab. I am the sister of one Claudio,
Condemn'd upon the act of fornication
To lose his head; condemn'd by Angelo:
I, in probation of a sisterhood,
Was sent to by my brother; one Lucio
As then the messenger,—

Lucio. [Comes down, taking his cap off to the Duke] That's I, an 't like your grace:
I came to her from Claudio, and desir'd her
To try her gracious fortune with Lord Angelo
For her poor brother's pardon.

Isab. That's he indeed.

Duke. You were not bid to speak.

Lucio. No, my good lord;
Nor wish'd to hold my peace.

Duke. I wish you now, then;
Pray you, take note of it: and when you have
A business for yourself; pray heaven you then
Be perfect.

Lucio. I warrant your honour.

Duke. The warrant 's for yourself; take heed to 't.

1 Vail, lower.

2 Characts, i.e. characters, distinctive marks.
3 As, i.e. that.
4 The false, seems true, i.e. the false that seems true.
ACT V. Scene 1.

Isab. This gentleman told somewhat of my tale,— Lucio. Right.
Duke. It may be right; but you are i' the wrong
To speak before your time. [Lucio bows and retires.] Proceed.
Isab. I went
To this pernicious caitiff deputy,— Duke. That's somewhat madly spoken.
Isab. Pardon it;
The phrase is to the matter. 90
Duke. Mended again. The matter; proceed.
Isab. In brief, to set the needless process by,
How I persuaded, how I pray'd, and kneel'd,
How he refus'd me, and how I replied,—
For this was of much length,—the vile conclusion
I now begin with grief and shame to utter:
He would not, but by gift of my chaste body
To his concupiscible intemperate lust,
Release my brother; and, after much deba-lement,
My sisterly remorse^1 confutes mine honour,
And I did yield to him: but the next morn be-
times,
His purpose surfeiting, he sends a warrant
For my poor brother's head.
Duke. This is most likely!
Isab. O, that it were as like as it is true!
Duke. By heaven, fond wretch, thou know'st not what thou speak'st,
Or else thou art suborn'd against his honour
In hateful practice. 9 First, his integrity Stands without blemish. Next, it imports no reason
That with such vehemency he should pursue
Faults proper to himself: if he had so offended,
He would have weigh'd thy brother by himself,
And not have cut him off. Some one hath set you on:
Confess the truth, and say by whose advice
Thou cam'st here to complain.
Isab. And is this all?

Then, O you blessed ministers above,
Keep me in patience, and with ripen'd time
Unfold the evil which is here wrapt up

In countenance! Heaven shield your grace from woe,
As I, thus wrong'd, hence unbelieved go!

[Going.
Duke. I know you 'd be gone. An officer!
[The officers advance.
To prison with her! Shall we thus permit
A blasting and a scandalous breath to fall
On him so near us? This needs must be a practice.
Who knew of your intent and coming hither?
Isab. One that I would were here, Friar Lodowick.
Duke. A ghostly father, belike. Who knows that Lodowick?
Lucio. My lord, I know him; 't is a meddling friar;
I do not like the man: had he been lay, my
lord,
For certain words he spoke against your grace
In your retirement, I had swenged him soundly.
Duke. Words against me! this is a good friar, belike!
And to set on this wretched woman here
Against our substitute! Let this friar be found.
Lucio. But yesternight, my lord, she and that friar,
I saw them at the prison: a saucy friar,
A very scurvy fellow.
Fri. P. Blessed be your royal grace!
I have stood by, my lord, and I have heard
Your royal ear abuse'd. First, hath this woman
Most wrongfully accus'd your substitute,
Who is as free from touch or soil with her
As she from one ungot.
Duke. We did believe no less.
Know you that Friar Lodowick that she speaks
of?
Fri. P. I know him for a man divine and holy;
Not scurvy, nor a temporary meddler,
As he's reported by this gentleman;
And, on my trust, a man that never yet
Did, as he vouches, misreport your grace.
Lucio. My lord, most villainously; believe it.
Fri. P. Well, he in time may come to clear himself;

---

1 Refus'd (Latin, refell), rebutted.
2 Remorse, pity.
3 Practice, plotting.
4 Countenance, false appearance, hypocrisy.
5 Swenged, whipt.
6 This', i.e., this is.
ACT V. Scene 1.

MEASURE FOR MEASURE. ACT V. Scene 1.

But at this instant he is sick, my lord, Of a strange fever. Upon his mere request, Being come to knowledge that there was complaint Intended 'gainst Lord Angelo, came I hither, To speak, as from his mouth, what he doth know Is true and false; and what he with his oath And all probation will make up full clear, Whene'er he's convicted. 1 First, for this woman, To justify this worthy nobleman, So vulgarly* and personally accus'd, Her shall you hear disproved to her eyes, Till she herself confess it.

Duke. Good friar, let's hear it. [Exit Isabella, guarded.]

Do you not smile at this, Lord Angelo?
O heaven, the vanity of wretched fools!
Give us some seats. [The attendants bring two chairs of state from within the city gates.]
Come, cousin Angelo;
In this I'll be impartial; be you judge
Of your own cause.

[Mariana advances, veiled. Duke and Angelo seat themselves.]

Is this the witness, friar?

First, let her show her face, and after speak.

Mari. Pardon, my lord; I will not show my face

Until my husband bid me.

Duke. What, are you married?

Mari. No, my lord.

Duke. Are you a maid?

Mari. No, my lord.

Duke. A widow, then?

Mari. Neither, my lord.

Duke. Why, you are nothing, then: neither maid, widow, nor wife?

Lucio. [Behind Duke's chair.] My lord, she may be a punk; for many of them are neither maid, widow, nor wife.

Duke. Silence that fellow: I would he had some cause
To prattle for himself.

Lucio. Well, my lord.

Mari. My lord, I do confess I ne'er was married;

And I confess, besides, I am no maid:
I have known my husband; yet my husband knows not
That ever he knew me.

Lucio. He was drunk, then, my lord: it can be no better.

Duke. For the benefit of silence, would thou wert so too!

Lucio. Well, my lord.

Duke. This is no witness for Lord Angelo.

Mari. Now I come to't, my lord:
She that accuses him [of fornication,]
In self-same manner doth accuse my husband;
And charges him, my lord, with such a time
When I'll depose I had him in mine arms

[With all the effect of love.]

Ang. Charges she more than me?

Mari. Not that I know.

Duke. No? say your husband. 201

Mari. Why, just, my lord, and that is Angelo,

[Who thinks he knows that he ne'er knew my body,
But knows he thinks that he knows Isabel's.]

Ang. This is a strange abuse. 3 Let's see thy face.

Mari. My husband bids me; now I will unmask. [Unveils.]

This is that face, thou cruel Angelo,
Which once thou swor'st was worth the looking on;

This is the hand which, with a vow'd contract,
Was fast belock'd in thine; this is the body
That took away the match from Isabel,
And did supply thee at thy garden-house 4

In her imagin'd person.

Duke. Know you this woman?

Lucio. [Behind chair] Carnally, she says.

Duke. Sirrah, no more!

Lucio. Enough, my lord. [Goes to Peter.

Ang. My lord, I must confess I know this woman:

And five years since there was some speech of marriage
Betwixt myself and her; which was broke off,
Partly for that her promised proportions 5

1 Consented, summoned. 2 Vulgarly, publicly.

8 Abuse, deception, delusion.
4 Garden-house, summer-house.
5 Proportions, shares of real and personal estate, i.e. marriage portion.

213
ACT V. Scene 1.

MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

Duke. Go do it instantly.

[Exit Provost.]

And you, my noble and well-warranted cousin, Whom it concerns to hear this matter forth, Do with your injuries as seems you best, In any chastisement: I for a while will leave you; But stir not you till you have well determin'd Upon these slanderers.

Escal. My lord, we'll do it thoroughly.

[Exit Duke. Angelo and Escalus sit.] Signior Lucio, did not you say you knew that Friar Lodowick to be a dishonest person?

Lucio. Cucullus non facit monachum: honest in nothing but in his clothes; and one that hath spoke most villainous speeches of the duke.

Escal. We shall entreat you to abide here till he come, and enforce them against him: we shall find this friar a notable fellow.

Lucio. As any in Vienna, on my word.

Escal. [To an Officer] Call that same Isabel here once again: I would speak with her.

[Exit Officer through city gates.] Pray you, my lord, give me leave to question; you shall see how I'll handle her.

[Lucio. Not better than he, by her own report.

Escal. Say you?

Lucio. Marry, sir, I think, if you handled her privately, she would sooner confess: perchance, publicly, she'll be ashamed.

Escal. I will go darkly to work with her.

Lucio. That's the way; for women are light at midnight.]

Re-enter Officer with Isabella.

Escal. [To Isabella] Come on, mistress: here's a gentlewoman denies all that you have said.

Lucio. My lord, here comes the rascal I spoke of; here with the provost.

Escal. In very good time: speak not you to him till we call upon you.

Lucio. Mum.

Re-enter Provost, with the Duke in his friar's habit.

Escal. Come, sir: did you set these women

"The cowl does not make the monk."
on to slander Lord Angelo? they have confessed you did.

_Duke._ 'Tis false.

_Escal._ How! know you where you are?

_Duke._ Respect to your great place! and let the devil

Be sometime honour'd for his burning throne!

Where is the duke? 'tis he should hear me speak.

_Escal._ The duke's in us; and we will hear you speak:

Look you speak justly.

_Duke._ Boldly, at least. But, O, poor souls,
Come you to seek the lamb here of the fox?
Good night to your redress! Is the duke gone?
Then is your cause gone too. The duke's unjust,

Thus to retort your manifest appeal,
And put your trial in the villain's mouth
Which here you come to accuse.

_Lucio._ This is the rascal; this is he I spoke of.

_Escal._ Why, thou unrevenged and unhallow'd friar,
Is't not enough thou hast suborn'd these women
To accuse this worthy man, but, in foul mouth,
And in the witness of his proper ear,

To call him villain? and then to glance from him
To the duke himself, to tax him with injustice?
Take him hence; [Officers advance] to the rack with him! We'll touse you
Joint by joint, but we will know his purpose.
What, unjust?

_Duke._ Be not so hot; the duke
Dare no more stretch this finger of mine than he Dare rack his own: his subject am I not,
Nor here provincial. My business in this state
Made me a looker-on here in Vienna,

Where I have seen corruption boil and bubble
Till it o'er-run the stew; laws for all faults,
But faults so countenance'd, that the strong _statutes

Stand like the forfeits in a barber's shop,
As much in mock as mark.

_Escal._ Slander to the state! Away with him to prison!

[TWO OFFICERS APPROACH THE DUKE.

Ang. What can you vouch against him,
Signor Lucio? Is this the man that you did tell us of?

_Lucio._ 'Tis he, my lord. Come hither, goodman baldpate: do you know me?

[They advance towards each other.

_Duke._ I remember you, sir, by the sound of your voice: I met you at the prison, in the absence of the duke.

_Lucio._ O, did you so? And do you remember what you said of the duke?

_Duke._ Most notably, sir.

_Lucio._ Do you so, sir? And was the duke a fleshmonger, a fool, and a coward, as you then reported him to be?

_Duke._ You must, sir, change persons with me, ere you make that my report: you, indeed, spoke so of him; and much more, much worse.

_Lucio._ O thou damnable fellow! Did not I pluck thee by the nose for thy speeches?

_Duke._ I protest I love the duke as I love myself.

Ang. Hark, how the villain would close now, after his treasonable abuses!

_Escal._ Such a fellow is not to be talked withal. Away with him to prison! Where is the provost? [Provost advances.] Away with him to prison! lay bolts enough upon him: let him speak no more. Away with those giglotes too, and with the other confederate companion!

[Officers advance to seize Isabella and Mariana. The Provost arrests the _Duke._

_Duke._ [To Provost] Stay, sir; stay awhile.

_Lucio._ Come, sir; come, sir; come, sir; foh, sir! Why, you bald-pated, lying rascal, you must be hooded, must you? Show your knave's visage, with a pux to you! show your sheep-biting face, and be hanged an hour! Will't not off?

[Pulls off the friar's hood, and discovers the Duke. Angelo and Escalus start up from their seats. Lucio steps back amazed.

_Duke._ Thou art the first knave that e'er
mad'st a duke.
First, provost, let me bail these gentle three.

[Officers release Isabella and Mariana. Lucio is stealing away.]

[To Lucio] Sneak not away, sir; for the friar and you Must have a word anon. Lay hold on him.

[Officers seize Lucio and bring him back.]

Lucio. This may prove worse than hanging.

Duke. [To Escalus] What you have spoke I pardon; sit you down:
We’ll borrow place of him. [To Angelo] Sir, by your leave.

[Takes Angelo’s chair. Escalus sits. Hast thou word, or wit, or impudence, Isab. O, give me pardon,
That I, your vassal, have employ'd and pain'd
Your unknown sovereignty!

Duke. You are pardon'd, Isabel:
And now, dear maid, be you as free to us.
Your brother's death, I know, sits at your heart;
And you may marvel why I obscur'd myself,
Labouring to save his life, and would not rather
Make rash remonstrance of my hidden power
Than let him so be lost. O most kind maid,
It was the swift celerity of his death,
Which I did think with slower foot came on,
That brain'd my purpose. But peace be with
him:

That life is better life, past fearing death,
Than that which lives to fear: make it your comfort,
So happy is your brother.

Isab. I do, my lord.

Re-enter Angelo, Mariana, Friar Peter,
and Provost.

Duke. For this new-married man, approaching here,
Whose salt imagination yet hath wrong'd
Your well-defended honour, you must pardon
For Mariana's sake: but as he adjudg'd your brother,—
Being criminal, in double violation
Of sacred chastity, and of promise-breach
Thereon dependent, for your brother's life,—
The very mercy of the law cries out
[Most audible, even from his proper tongue,]
"An Angelo for Claudio, death for death!
"Haste still pays haste, and leisure answers leisure;
Like doth quit like, and Measure still for Measure.
[Then, Angelo, thy fault 's thus manifested;
Which, though thou wouldst deny, denies thee
vantage.]
We do condemn thee to the very block
Where Claudio stoop'd to death, and with life haste.
Away with him!

[Officers advance and stand by Angelo's side.

1 Pain'd, put to labour.
2 Remonstrance, demonstration.
3 Salt, lustful.

Mari. [O my most gracious lord,
I hope you will not mock me with a husband.

Duke. It is your husband mock'd you with a husband.

Consenting to the safeguard of your honour,
I thought your marriage fit; else imputation,
For that he knew you, might reproach your life,
And choke your good to come: for his possessions,
Although by confutation they are ours,
We do instate and widow you withal,
To buy you a better husband.]

Mari. O my dear lord,
I crave no other, nor no better man. 431

Duke. Never crave him; we are definitive. 6

Mari. [Kneeling] Gentle my liege,—

Duke. You do but lose your labour.

Away with him to death! [[To Lucio] Now,
sir, to you.]

[Officers about to remove Angelo.

Mari. O my good lord! Sweet Isabel, take my part;
Lend me your knees, and all my life to come
I'll lend you all my life to do you service.

Duke. Against all sense you do importune herself:
Should she kneel down in mercy of this fact,
Her brother's ghost his paved bed would break,
And take her hence in horror.

Mari. Isabel, 441

Sweet Isabel, do yet but kneel by me;
Hold up your hands, say nothing; I'll speak all.

They say, best men are moulded out of faults;
And, for the most, become much more the better
For being a little bad: so may my husband.
O Isabel, will you not lend a knee? —

Duke. He dies for Claudio's death.

Isab. [Kneeling] Most bounteous sir,
Look, if it please you, on this man condemn'd,
As if my brother liv'd. I partly think 450
A due sincerity govern'd his deeds,
Till he did look on me: since it is so,
Let him not die. My brother had but justice,
In that he did the thing for which he died:
For Angelo,
His act did not o'ertake his bad intent,
And must be buried but as an intent

4 Confutation, conviction. 6 Definitions, resolved.
217

Digitized by Google
That perish'd by the way: thoughts are no subjects,
Intents but merely thoughts.

Mari. Merely, my lord.

Duke. Your suit's unprofitable; stand up, I say. [Mariana and Isabella rise.
I have bethought me of another fault.
Provost, how came it Claudio was beheaded
At an unusual hour?

Prov. It was commanded so.

Duke. Had you a special warrant for the deed?
Prov. No, my good lord; it was by private message.

Duke. For which I do discharge you of your office:
Give up your keys.

Prov. Pardon me, noble lord:
I thought it was a fault, but knew it not;
Yet did repent me, after more advice:¹

For testimony whereof, one in the prison,
That should by private order else have died,
I have reserv'd alive.

Duke. What's he?
Prov. His name is Barnardine.

Duke. I would thou hadst done so by Claudio.
Go fetch him hither; let me look upon him.
[Exit Provost. Duke talks apart with Isabella.

Escal. I am sorry, one so learned and so wise
As you, Lord Angelo, have still appear'd,
Should slip so grossly, both in the heat of blood,
And lack of temper'd judgment afterward.

Ang. I am sorry that such sorrow I procure:
And so deep sticks it in my penitent heart
That I crave death more willingly than mercy;
’Tis my deserving, and I do entreat it. ⁴⁸²

Re-enter from the city, Provost, with Barnardine, Claudio muffled, and Juliet.

Duke. Which is that Barnardine?
Prov. This, my lord.

Duke. There was a friar told me of this man.
Sirrah, thou art said to have a stubborn soul,
That apprehends no further than this world,
And squar'st thy life according. Thou’rt condemn’d:
But, for those earthly faults, I quit them all;
And pray thee take this mercy to provide

For better times to come. Friar, advise him;
I leave him to your hand. [Exeunt Barnardine and Friar into the city.] What muffled fellow's that? ⁴⁹¹

Prov. This is another prisoner that I sav'd,
Who should have died when Claudio lost his head;
As like almost to Claudio as himself.

[Begin to unmuffle Claudio.

Duke. [To Isabella] If he be like your brother, for his sake
Is he pardon'd,—[Claudio discovers himself to Isabella—she rushes into his arms, and then kneels to Angelo,—] and, for your lovely sake;
Give me your hand, [raising her] and say you will be mine,
He is my brother too: [taking Claudio's hand] but fitter time for that.

By this Lord Angelo perceives he's safe;
[Crossing to Angelo.

Methinks I see a quickening in his eye.

Well, Angelo, your evil quite you well:
Look that you love your wife; her worth worth yours.
I find an apt remission in myself;
And yet here's one in place² I cannot pardon.
[To Lucio] You, sirrah, that knew me for a fool, a coward,
One all of luxury, an ass, a madman;
Wherein have I so deserv'd of you,
That you extol me thus?

Lucio. Faith, my lord, I spoke it but according to the trick. If you will hang me for it, you may; but I had rather it would please you I might be whipt.

Duke. Whipt first, sir, and hang'd after.
Proclaim it, provost, round about the city,
If any woman's wrong'd by this lewd fellow,
As I have heard him swear himself there's one
Whom he begot with child, let her appear,
And he shall marry her: the nuptial finish'd,
Let him be whipt and hang'd. ⁵¹⁹

Lucio. [I beseech your highness, do not marry me to a whore!] Your highness said even now; I made you a duke: good my lord, do not re-compense me in making me a cuckold.

¹ Advice, consideration.
² In place, present.
Duke. Upon mine honour, thou shalt marry her.
Thy slanders I forgive; and therewithal
Remit thy other forfeits. Take him to prison;
[Officers seize Lucio.
And see our pleasure herein executed.
Lucio. Marrying a punk, my lord, is pressing to death, whipping and hanging.
Duke. Slander a prince deserves it. 530
[Execut Officers with Lucio.
She, Claudio, that you wrong'd, look you restore.
Joy to you, Mariana! Love her, Angelo:
I have confess'd her, and I know her virtue.
Thanks, good friend Escalus, for thy much goodness:

There's more behind that is more gratulate. 1
Thanks, provost, for thy care and secrecy:
We shall employ thee in a worthier place.
Forgive him, Angelo, that brought you home
The head of Ragozin for Claudio's:
The offence pardons itself. Dear Isabel, 540
[Taking her hand and kissing it.
I have a motion much imports your good;
Whereto if you'll a willing ear incline,
What's mine is yours, and what is yours is mine.
So, bring us to our palace; where we'll show
What's yet behind, that's meet you all should know.

1 Gratulate, gratifying.

219
NOTES TO MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

ACT I. SCENE I.

1. Line 5: Since I am put to know.—Compare Cymbeline, ii. 3. 110:
   You put me to forget a lady’s manners.

2. Line 6: the lists of all advice; i.e. the limits. Compare Henry IV. iv. 1. 51, 52:
   The very list, the very utmost bound Of all our fortunes.

3. Lines 7-10:
   then no more remains
   But that, to your sufficiency, as your worth is able,
   And let them work.

This clause in the Duke’s first sentence has proved a more awkward stumbling-block to commentators than almost any passage in Shakespeare. The Cambridge editors chronicle twelve conjectural emendations in their foot-note, and five others in the supplementary notes as the end of the play. It has been proved, however, by the Old-Spelling editors that the lines as they stand are capable of explanation—an explanation, it is true, which leaves the whole passage (lines 3-9) an example of the most contorted and arbitrary syntax. I give their note: “The words ‘my strength’ include (1) the Duke’s science, his knowledge of the properties of government; (2) his ducal authority, which is his sole prerogative. ‘Your own science,’ he says to Escalus, ‘exceeds in that’ (in that province of my strength which embraces my administrative skill) all that my ‘advice’ (counsel) can give you. ‘Then,’ he continues, ‘no more remains (is needful) but that (my strength per se, which is mine alone) to your sufficiency’ (legal science),—your ‘worth’ (character and rank) making you fit for the post,—and you may henceforth let ‘them’ (your prior sufficiency and my now departed power) work together.”

[This explanation of the Old-Spelling editors seems to me quite involved and obscure as the text which it professes to explain. It is evident that the text is corrupt, probably through there having been some interpolation in the MS. from which it was printed; nor can I believe that Shakespeare would have wished such a hideously unrhymed verse as line 8 to be spoken by any actor. If by my strength the Duke means “my power,” or “my authority,” we may imagine that the passage stood something like this:

   then no more remains
   But that (i.e. my strength) to add to your sufficiency,
   And, as your worth is able, let them work.

The rest of line 9, The nature of our people, would then form an imperfect line by itself.—F. A. M.]

4. Line 11: the terms.—“Terms mean the technical language of the courts. An old book called Les Termes de la Ley (written in Henry the Eighth’s time) was in Shakespeare’s days, and is now, the accidence of young students in the law” (Blackstone).

5. Line 18: with special soul.—This metaphorical use of soul (meaning preference or regard) may be compared with a similar use of the word in The Tempest, iii. 1. 42-46:
   for several virtues
   Have I lik’d several women; never any
   With so full soul, but some defect in her
   Did quarrel with the noblest grace she ow’d
   And put it to the foil.

6. Line 21: proper; i.e. proprius, peculiar to one’s self. Compare Timon, i. 2. 106, 107: “what better or properer can we call our own than riches of our friends?” and below, in this play, v. 1. 110: “Faults proper to himself.”

7. Line 41: use.—Use was in Shakespeare’s time a customary word for interest. Compare Venus and Adonis, 708:
   But gold that’s put to use more gold begets.

8. Lines 41, 42: But I do bend my speech
   To one that can my part in him advertise.

The Duke has been giving Angelo advice; he now breaks off, intimating gracefully that, after all, he is speaking to one who can instruct him in such matters.

9. Line 43: Hold, therefore, Angelo.—This is generally supposed to be spoken by the Duke as he hands his commission to Angelo. Grant White conjectures that a part of the line is lost, and he restores it thus:
   Hold therefore, Angelo, our place and power;
   basing his guess on l. 8. 11-13 below:
   I have deliver’d to Lord Angelo . . .
   My absolute power and place here in Vienna.

But this is juggling with the text, not editing. Dyce quotes Gifford, on the words “Hold thee, drunkard” (i.e. take the letter) in Jonson’s Catiline: “There is no expression in the English language more common than this, which is to be found in almost every page of our old writers; yet the commentators on Shakespeare, with the exception of Steevens, who speaks doubtfully on the subject, misunderstand it altogether. In Measure for Measure, the Duke, on producing Angelo’s commission, says: ‘Hold, therefore, Angelo’” (Jonson’s Works, vol. iv. p. 347).

10. Lines 45, 46:
   Mortality and mercy in Vienna
   Live in thy tongue and heart.

Douce rightly emphasizes the importance of these words—“the privilege of exercising mercy,” conferred by the Duke upon his deputy. See also lines 65-67 below:

   your scope is as mine own,
   So to enforce or qualify the laws
   As to your soul seems good.

The Duke thus renders it impossible for Angelo to make the excuse—such as it would be—that his instructions were precise and without margin of mercy.
NOTES TO MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

ACT I. Scene 1.

11. Line 58: We have with a leaven’d and prepared choice. — A leavened choice is explained by Johnson as one "not declared as soon as it fell into the imagination, but suffered to work long in the mind." The metaphor may no doubt have this meaning, as leaven or yeast does take some hours to ferment; but may it not mean as well, or more primarily, that the choice was based on a thorough and scrupulous scrutiny, as leaven works up through and permeates the whole mass of dough?

12. Lines 68, 69: I love the people, But do not like to stage me to their eyes.

Stage is used again as a verb in two passages of Antony and Cleopatra, iii. 13. 29-31: Yes, like enough, high-battled Caesar will Unstate his happiness, and be staged to the show Against a swindler; and v. 2. 216, 217: the quick comedians Extemporally will stage us.

ACT I. Scene 2.

13. Line 15: the thanksgiving before meat. — Hammer reads after, and his reading, say the Cambridge editors, "is recommended by the fact that in the old forms of 'graces' used in many colleges, and as we are informed, at the Inns of Court, the prayer for peace comes always after, and never before, meat. But as the mistake may easily have been made by Shakespeare, or else deliberately put into the mouth of the 'First Gentleman,' we have not altered the text."

14. Line 58: Well, there went but a pair of shears between us. — An expression, which may almost be termed proverbial for, We are both of one piece. Steevens cites Marston, The Malcontent, 1604: "There goes but a pair of shears betwixt an emperor and the sonne of a bagge-piper; onely the dying, dressing, pressing, glossing, makes the difference" (Works, vol. ii. p. 270). Compare, too, Dekker, The Gull's Hornbook, ch. 1: "there went but a pair of shears between them."

15. Line 55: as be pil’d, as thou art pil’d. — "A quibble between pil’d = peeled, stripped of hair, bald (from the French disease), and pil’d as applied to velvet, threepiled velvet meaning the finest and costliest kind of velvet" (Dyce). Compare Chancer, Prologue, Line 627:

With skilful broses baize, and pil’d herd.

16. Line 59: forget to drink after these. — That is, for fear of the contagion.

17. Lines 45, 46, 48. — These lines are given by Pope to the First Gentleman, and there is a good deal of probability in the surmise; still, it is only a probability; and, as the Cambridge editors remark, "It is impossible to discern any difference of character in the three speakers, or to introduce logical sequence into their buffoonery."

18. Line 52: A French crown; i.e. the corona Venetia. Compare Midsummer Night's Dream, i. 2. 99: "Some of your French crowns have no hair at all."

19. Line 64: the sweat. — This very likely refers to the plague or "sweating-sickness," which ravaged London in 1668, carrying off about a fifth of the population. The war, above, may also refer to the war with Spain, which came to an end in the autumn of 1604.

20. Lines 99, 100: All houses in the suburbs of Vienna must be pluck’d down. — Tyrwhitt, quite unnecessarily, as I take it, would read all basely-houses. There is no doubt that this is meant, but when we remember who the speakers were, and how much a meaning look or an extra accent can convey, we may well suppose that Pompey said merely all houses, and that when he said houses Mrs. Overdone quite understood what he meant. As a matter of fact, houses of ill-fame were chiefly in the suburbs. Compare Heywood, The Rape of Lucrece, i. 3: "Bru... he removes himself from the love of Brutus that shrinks from my side till we have had a song of all the pretty suburbs" (p. 194)—a prelude to Valerius' rattling song of Molly, Nelly, Betty, Dolly, Nanny, Rachel, and Biddy.

21. Line 116: Thomas tapster. — Douce expresses his surprise that Mrs. Overdone "should have called the clown by this name when it appears by his own showing that his name was Pompey." But of course it is a mere class-name, no more peculiar to one man than John Barleycorn or Tommy Atkins. For a contemporary instance of the precise alliterative form, compare Fletcher's Rollo, iii. 1 (end of scene), where a song, expanded from the Three merry men snatch, is sung by a Yeoman or "Page of the Cellar," a Butler, a Cook, and a Pantler. The last sings:

O man or beast, or you at least
That wear a brow or antler,
Prick up your ears unto the tears
Of me poor Paul the Pantler.

22. Line 119. — The Follo after this line begins a new scene (Scena Tertia) with the entrance of the Provost, &c. The Collier MS. omits Juliet from the persons who enter here, since, if present, she is silent, and, as appears from Claudio's words to Lucio, out of sight and hearing. Yet Pompey has just said, "There's Madam Juliet." The Cambridge editors "suppose that she was following at a distance behind, in her anxiety for the fate of her lover. She appears again," they add, "as a mute personage at the end of the play."

[It looks very much here as if the author had originally intended to make some use of Julietta or Juliet in this scene, but in the course of working it out had changed that intention. It is evident, from act ii. scene 3, that Juliet was arrested as well as Claudio, and that, for some time at any rate, she was kept "under observation." In the acting edition Juliet does not come on with the Provost and Claudio; but there is no reason why she should not be on the stage; for it is quite clear that the dialogue between Lucio and Claudio is spoken aside. Only one would certainly expect, if Juliet were at that time present on the stage, that Claudio would have made some allusion to the fact. — F. A. M.]

23. Lines 124-127:

Thus can the demigod Authority
Make us pay down for our offence by law.

The words of heaven:—on whom it will, it will;
On whom it will not, so; yet still 'tis just.

221
NOTES TO MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

In the F1. there is no stop after weight, and this pointing is preserved in the Cambridge Shakespeare. Davenant, in his Law Against Lovers, gives the reading in the text, and he has been generally followed. He omits the next two lines altogether. Dr. Roberts, Provost of Eton, conjectured that “The words of heaven” should be “The sword of heaven.” Henley, however, explains the passage as it stands, by an apt reference to the words in Romans ix. 15, 18: “For He saith to Moses, I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy;” and “Therefore hath He mercy on whom He will have mercy, and whom He will He hardeneth.”

24. Line 138: Like rats that ravin down their proper bone.—Compare Macbeth, i. 4. 28, 29:
Thine own life’s means!

and Cymbeline, 1. 6. 49: “raving first the lamb.”

25. Line 138: the morality of imprisonment.—F1. have mortality, an obvious misprint, rectified by Davenant, and adopted into the text by Rowe.

26. Line 138: the denunciation.—This word, meaning proclamation or formal declaration (“To denounce or declare,” Minshew, 1617), is only used here by Shakespeare. Dyce quotes from Todd’s Johnson’s Dictionary, s.v. Denunciation. “This publick and reiterated denunciation of bans before matrimony” (Hall, Cases of Conscience). Boyer (French Dictionary) has “To Denounce, V. A. (or declare) dénoncer, declare, signifier, faire savoir,” and “Denunciation, or Denouncing, F. Dénunciation, déclaration, Signification, L’Action de dénoncer, &c.”

27. Line 154: Only for propagation of a dower.—F1. has propagation, corrected to propagation by F. 2. Various emendations have been proposed, e.g. propagation by Malone, procurement by Jackson, and preservation by Grant White. Surely there is no need for any change in the text. Shakespeare does not use the substantive in any other passage; but he uses the verb to propagate three times, in All’s Well, ii. 1. 200; Rom. and Jul. i. 1. 198; Timon, i. 1. 67. In these three passages it certainly seems to have the sense of “to improve” or “to increase.” Only once, in Pericles, i. 2. 78. From whence an issue I might propagate.

Shakespeare uses the verb in the sense of “to begat.” Steevens, in his note, makes the curious statement, apparently on the authority of an article in the Edinburgh Magazine, November, 1786,—that “Propagation being here used to signify payment, must have its root in the Italian word pagare” (Var. Ed. vol. ix. p. 24). Propagation is derived from the Latin pro, before, forward, and pag, the root of pango, to fix. But surely either “increase,” or “bring to its maturity,” is the sense which best suits this passage; the meaning being that Claudio and Juliet had not declared their marriage because her dower yet remained in the absolute control of her friends; and, till their approval was gained, the two lovers thought it best to hide their love in case she should lose her dower.—P. A. M.

28. Line 159: Whether it be the faulty and glimpse of newness.—Malone explains this by assuming fault and glimpse to be used, by the figure known as hendiadys, for faulty glimpses. But may not the fault of newness mean simply the result of novelty and inexperience? •

29. Line 171: like unsavour’d armour.—Compare Troilus and Cressida, iii. 3. 122, 158:

“Quite out of fashion, like a rusty mail In monumental mockery.”

30. Line 172: nineteen zodiacs.—Claudio states here that the law has been in abeyance for nineteen years; in i. 3. 21 the Duke says that he has let it slip for fourteen years. No satisfactory explanation of this disagreement has been found before Dr. Brinley Nicholson’s acute suggestion, recorded in the Old-Spelling Shakespere, that the law was made nineteen years ago, but that the duke has reigned only fourteen years.

31. Line 177: tickle.—Tickle for ticklish is used again by Shakespeare in II. Henry VI. i. 1. 215, 216:

the state of Normandy Stands on a tickle point.

32. Line 183: receive her approbation; i.e. enter upon her probation. Compare The Merry Devil of Edmonton, ii. 2. 70:

And I must take a twelve months’ approbation;

and iii. 1. 17, 18:

Madam, for a twelve months’ approbation We mean to make this trial of our child.

33. Line 185: in my voice; i.e. in my name. Compare As You Like It, ii. 4. 87:

And in my voice most welcome shall you be.

34. Line 198: There is a PRONE and speechless dialect. —Editors are much at variance as to the exact sense of the word prone as here used, some taking it to mean “prompt, ready,” and others (as I think with more likelihood) understanding it as “humble, appealing,” from the analogy of prone = prostrate, as in supplication.

ACT I. SCENE 3.

35. Line 2: DRIBBLING dart.—The sense is evident: a weak and ineffectual missile. But while dribbling may be used figuratively in its modern sense, it is perhaps an allusion to a dribber in archery, i.e., according to Steevens, one who shoots badly.

36. Line 12: stricture; i.e. strictness. Warburton proposes strict use (ure = use, practice); a word used in Promos and Cassandra, but not anywhere by Shakespeare.

37. Lines 20, 21:

The needful bits and curbs to headstrong WEEKS, Which for this fourteen years we have let slip.

This, which is the reading of the F1., is frequently altered by editors (followng Theobald) from weeks to steeds, and from slip to sleep. Mr. W. G. Stone writes me on this passage: “Shakespeare was careless in linking metaphors. I think it possible that he combined the idea of a well-blotted horse (literally equivalent to enforcement of law), and the picture of a rank, nolose growth of weeds, suffered to spring up in a fair garden (literally equivalent to relaxation of law). I do not evade the difficulty by accepting Collin’s suggestion (quoted in Schmidt’s Sh.
ACT I. Scene 3.

NOTES TO MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

Lex. s.v. Weed) that weed is a term still commonly applied to an ill-conditioned horse; because this term denotes, I believe, a weak horse; and if weed = horses, the context shows that they are figured as robust animals. Sleep is a specious emendation,—more consistent, no doubt, with the metaphor of an old, drowsy lion,—but sleep = let pass, makes sense."

38. Lines 26, 27:

in time the rod's
More mock'd than fear'd.

Fr. read
in time the rod
More mock'd than fear'd.

The Cambridge editors adopt Pope's conjecture and read the rod BECOMES more mock'd. The reading in the text is that adopted by the Old-Spelling editors, on the ground that becomes was not so likely to be overlooked as the inconspicuous 's after rod, which gives the same sense.

29. Line 30: The baby beats the nurse.—"This allusion," says Steevens, "was borrowed from an ancient print, entitled The World turn'd Up-side Down, where an infant is thus employed." It may be questioned whether Shakespeare's powers of observation and invention were ever at so low a zero as to oblige him to "borrow from an ancient print" when he wanted to speak of a baby beating its nurse.

40. Lines 42, 43:

And yet my nature never in the fight,
To do it slander.

Fr. To do it slander. The correction is Hamner's, it referring to nature. Sight instead of fight is adopted by many editors, after Pope.

41. Lines 47, 48:

How I may formally in person bear
Like a true friar.

So Fr. It is almost universally altered by modern editors, after Capell, to bear me. Furnivall and Stone read bear, adopting Schmidt's explanation, that it means "behave."

42. Line 51: Stands at a guard with.—This probably means, "stands on his guard against," is careful not to lay himself open.

ACT I. Scene 4.

43. Line 30: Sir, make me not your story.—This admirable expressive phrase, perfectly obvious in meaning ("make me not your jest"), has been oddly misunderstood by some editors, who have altered story to "soor," and even "sport." Compare Merry Wives, v. 5. 170, where Falstaff, jeered at by his expected dupes, replies: "Well, I am your theme: you have the start of me."

44. Lines 51-53:

though 'tis my familiar sin
With maids to seem the lapwing and to jest,
Tongue far from heart.

The allusion here is probably to the lapwing's way of deceiving sportsmen by running along the ground for some distance before taking wing. Compare Comedy of Errors, iv. 2. 27, 28:

Far from her nest the lapwing cries away;
My heart prays for him, though my tongue do curse;
and see note 101 on that play.

46. Line 40: Your brother and his lover.—Lover in Shakespeare's time was used for a woman as well as a man. Compare As You Like It, iii. 4. 48: "O, that's a brave man! he writes brave verses, speaks brave words, swears brave oaths, and breaks them bravely, quite transverse, athwart the heart of his lover." Coles, in his Latin Dictionary, has: "A Lover, amator, amasius, m. amatrix, amasia, fem."

46. Lines 51, 52:

Bore many gentlemen, myself being one,
In hand and hope of action.

To bear in hand means, according to Schmidt, "to abuse with false pretences or appearances." Compare Much Ado, iv. 1. 306: "What, bear her in hand until they come to take hands; and then, with public accusation," &c.

47. Line 60: But doth rebate and blunt his natural edge.—I am indebted to Mr. Stone for the following note on this word: "Cotgrave (ed. 1632) has: RABATRE. To abate, deduct, defaulte, diminish, lessen, extenuate; remit, bate; give or draw backs; also, a horse to rebate his curvet . . . RABATRE: m. n. f. Rebated, bated, abated, deducted, defaulted, diminished; given, taken, or drawn backs." Under Rabatre Boyer (ed. 1725) has: 'Cheval qui rebat ses Courbettes de bonne grace, (en Termes de Menage), a Horse that rebates his curvets handsomely, or finely.' Amongst the senses of 'Rabattre, v. a.' Bellows (Fr. Dict. ed. 1877) gives, 'aplaitir, to soften,' and 'Rabattre—é, a. fastened; smoothed.' Bellows's gloss admits of literal application to this line—for an edge flattened is blunted—but I think that Cotgrave's renderings—and you will observe that he uses the English rebate—are near enough; for, if an edge be abated, diminished, or lessened, clearly it is blunted. Compare Greene's Orlando Furioso:

And what I dare, let say the Portingale, And Spaniard tell, who, man'd with mighty feet, Came to subdue their islands to my king, Filling our seas with stately argosies, Calvans and magars, bulks of burden great; Which Brandimart rebated from his coast, And sent them home balless'd with their wealth.

—Works, ed. Dyce, 1851, p. 90, col. 2.

This is the city of great Babylon, Which proud Darius was rebated from. —id. p. 101, col. 1.

Collier wanted to read rebuffed for rebated in both these passages. Dyce says: 'Mr. Collier is greatly mistaken: the old copies are right in both passages. Greene uses rebate in the sense of beat back (which is its proper sense, —Fr. rebattre). So again in the first speech of the next play (a Looking-Glass for London and England, p. 117, col. 1) we find,—

Great Jewry's God, that foll'd stout Benhadad, Could not rebate the strength that Rasim brought.' &c.

I suspect that Rolfe and Dyce are both wrong in connecting Eng. rebate with 'rebattre,' to beat back again. 'Rabattre' seems to be nearer the sense required." Compare Massinger, The Roman Actor, iv. 2:

223

(Polonius) to Laertes in act i. sc. 3 are printed with inverted commas before them; and, in the Quartos of 1604, though none of the lines in the speech of Polonius to Laertes are so marked, three of the lines in the speech to Ophelia are. This rhymed quatrains, spoken by Es- carus, was probably meant to embody some well-known apothegms; and therefore the reading "brakes of wise" seems to me more suitable to the context; especially as Row's emendation involves such a very slight alteration of the text, and the missprint of sos for sise is one very likely to have occurred. I should take brakes to mean here not so much "engines of torture" as "means for restraint of vice," the general sense of the line being, "some escape from all restraints of vice and yet have to answer for none," while some are condemned for a single fault. We might have expected, in line 40, "for one fault alone;" but the author seems to have purposely avoided that because one would have rhymed to none at the end of the preceding line. [F. A. M.]

56. Line 54: precies villasina.—Holbe well remarks on this: "He means of course that they are pre cisely or literally villasina; but, as Clarke notes, the word gives the impression of 'strict, severely moral,' as in i. 1. 50 above: 'Lord Angelo is precise.'"

57. Line 61: he's out at elbou.—This, as Clarke observes, is "a hit at the constable's threadbare coat, and at his being startled and put out by Angelo's peremptory repetition of his name."

58. Line 68: parcell-bayed.—Parsel for part is again used by Shakespeare in ii. Henry IV. ii. 1. 94: "Thou diest swear to me upon a parcel-gilt goblet." It is not used with unfruitfully in the dramatic literature of the period. Compare Day, Humour out of Breath, i. 1. 68-60:

Nay, my sister would make a rare beggar.
\textit{Fram.} True, she's a parcel poet, parcel sadder already; and they commonly sing three parts in one.

59. Lines 89 and 76: detest.—The same blundering use of detest for protest or attest is given to Mrs. Quickly in Merry Wives, i. 4. 160: "but, I detest, an honest maid as ever broke bread."

60. Line 99: stowed prunes.—A dish proverbial in Eliza- bethan literature for its prevalence in brothels. It is referred to by Shakespeare in Merry Wives, i. 1. 296; ii. Henry IV. i. 3. 136; and ii. Henry IV. ii. 4. 139.

61. Line 97: China dishes.—"A China dish, in the age of Shakespeare, must have been such an uncommon thing, that the Clown's exemption of it, as no utensil in use in a common brothel, is a striking circumstance in his absurd and taxological degradation." (Steevans.)

62. Line 128: the Bunch of Grapes.—The practice of giving names to particular rooms in an inn seems to have been common. Compare i. Henry IV. ii. 4. 30: "Score a pint of bastard in the Half-moon;" and see the London Prodigal, i. 3, where Sir Lancelot, stopping at the George, and entering, says: "This room shall serve;" and having given his order to the drawer for a pint of sack, the drawer recapitulates, "A quart of sack in the Three Tuns" (ed. Taschmin, p. 229). According to the Return of a Jury

63. Line 190: Justice or Iniquity!—Escaulus is of course referring to Elbow and Pompey. Ritson thinks that by \textit{Iniquity} is meant the old \textit{Vice} of the Moralitys. Compare Richard III. III. iii. 82, 83:

Thus, like the formal \textit{Vice}, \textit{Iniquity},
I moralize two meanings in one word;

and see note 305 to that play.

64. Line 200: thou art to continue.—Steevens suggests that Elbow, misinterpreting the language of Escaulus, supposes that the Clown is to continue in confinement.

65. Line 215: they will draw you.—"Draw has here a cluster of senses. As it refers to the tapster, it signifies to drain, to empty; as it is related to hang ('they will draw you, Master Froth, and you will hang them'), it means to be conveyed to execution on a hurdle" (Johnson). In Froth's reply, drawn in is probably equivalent to "taken in."

66. Line 222: the greatest thing about you.—An allusion, it is generally supposed, to the "monstrous hose," as an old ballad calls them, or ridiculously large breeches, which were worn in the early part of Elizabeth’s reign. See the lengthy note in the Variorum Shakespeare on this passage; and compare Romeo and Juliet, note 99.

67. Line 256: a bay.—Usually taken to mean the architectural term bay; i.e., according to Johnson, "the space between the main beams of the roof;" according to Dyce, a term used "in reference to the frontage." Boyer, in his French Dictionary, has "Bay or empty Place in Masonry for a Door or Window." Colles (Lat. Dict.) has "A bay of building, \textit{Menarae} viniti quoautur pauesm." Furnivall and Sline suggest "a partitioned space, box."

(Pope's most obvious emendation day for bay may be noticed, only because it is so obvious, and because Pompey, \textit{cateris paribus}, would be more likely to talk about "three pence a day" for a house than "three pence a bay," even were it, as Jonson says, a common term in many parts of England. It certainly would be more satisfactory if the commentators could have found any instance of bay being used distinctly as part of a house, and not, as in the only passage quoted by Steevens, as a term of measurement. If one could come across such an expression, for instance, as "a house with many bays in it" in any work of Shak- espere's time; or if we could discover any evidence of such a phrase so used in the vernacular, it would relieve one of the doubt which every editor must now feel that such an extremely common misprint of b for d may be really the only ground for admitting into the text what is a highly characteristic expression, and one which we certainly should not wish to get rid of for the sake of so ordinary a phrase as "three pence a day." Perhaps Pompey here only means by \textit{bay} a room. [F. A. M.]

68. Line 275: your readiness.—\textit{Fr.} \textit{la readiness; an evident misprint of the common contraction \textit{yer} (your), which was taken for \textit{yer} (the). The emendation is Pope's.}
ACT II. Scene 2.

70. Line 4: He hath but as offended in a dream.—Grant White reads, He hath offended but as in a dream, that being of course the sense; but why change? The beauty of the line is gone, and I scarcely see that it is even made appreciably clearer.

71. Line 60: To fine the faults whose fine stands in record.—Fine, both as verb and noun, is several times used by Shakespeare in the sense of general, not necessarily of pecuniary, punishment. It is used again in iii. 1. 114, 115:

Why would he for the momentary trick
Be perdurable find'd?

Compare Coriolanus, v. 6. 64, 65:

What faults he made before the last, I think
Might have found easy fine.

72. Line 55: But might you do't.—Might you be merely a transposition of you might, perhaps for the sake of euphony. [In the Cambridge Shakespeare the passage is printed with a full stop at the end of the speech; but F. all agree in printing the sentence with a note of interrogation at the end after him. Walker (Critical Examination, &c., vol. ii. p. 250) suggested the emendation: "But you might do't," which the Cambridge editors should certainly have adopted if they altered the punctuation of the F. If the line is to be spoken as printed in the text it must be spoken as a question, or it would not be intelligible to the audience. I cannot see any reason why the author should not have written "But you might do't," if he did not mean Isabella to ask a question. The fact that this sentence begins, like that above in line 51, with But makes it probable that, like that also, it is intended to be interrogative. On the other hand Dyce, who adopts Walker's emendation and does away with the note of interrogation, points to Isabella's speech above (line 49):

Yes; I do think that you might pardon him.

—F. A. M.]

73. Line 58: May call it back again. Well, believe this.

—F. 1 reads may call it again;—back, which improves alike metre and sense, was added in F. 2.

Well, believe this, the reading of the F., is altered by Theobald to Well believe this (i.e. "be thoroughly assured of this"), and the reading is adopted by some editors. It is a very good reading, but the F. is, to say the least, quite as good, and I think better.

74. Line 70: If He, which is the top of judgment.—Dyce quotes from Danie, Purgatorio, vi. 57:

Che cima di giudizio non s'arriva; precisely the same phrase, top of judgment. The word top is often used by Shakespeare to express the highest point; compare the Tempest, iii. 1. 28: "the top of admiration;" King John, iv. 3. 46-47:

This is the very top,
The height, the crest, or crest unto the crest, Of murder's arms.

75. Line 79: Like man new made; i.e. in Johnson's common-sense phrase, "You would be quite another man." I think the references made by some commentators to Adam (as the man new made) are rather far-fetched. [Most certainly I cannot see what Adam has to do with it; but may not new made here have the scriptural sense of "regenerated?" Shakespeare is in a decidedly theological vein of mind in this speech, and it is natural, having just spoken of the effect of the Redemption, he should have in his mind "regeneration," such as our Lord explained to Nicodemus (John iii. 3-5).—F. A. M.]

76. Line 90: The law hath not been dead, though it hath slept.—Holt White compares the maxim in law, Dormient aliquando lege, moriturur nuncuam.

77. Line 92: If the first that did the edict infringe.—Several emendations of this line have been proposed, where none is needed. It is one of those lines, so frequent in Shakespeare, and so ruthlessly handled by his editors, where the first unaccented half of the first foot is wanting. If we remember this—making sufficient pause on the first word to make it accentually equal to two syllables—and lay the accent of edict on the second syllable (as Shakespeare does whenever the measure requires it), we shall see that the line is strictly rhetorical and very expressive in its solemn slowness. [This is all quite true as far as the study is concerned, but no actor could speak the line, as it stands, with any effect. Of the various emendations suggested, the best perhaps is that of Capell's: "If he the first," and Grant White's: "If but the first." Davenant altered the line to "If he who first." Shakespeare is very fond of the phrase "If that," and it is quite possible that he first wrote "If that the first," but, seeing he had too many that's in the sentence, struck out the that after If. Certainly, for stage purposes, the words If and first require to be emphasized. The emendation that would transpose the position of the last three words and read "infringe the edict," making the line end with a trochee, are, I think, much less probable. Out of eight passages in verse in which Shakespeare uses the word edict, including this one, it is accentuated five times on the second syllable.—F. A. M.]

78. Lines 94, 95: and, like a prophet, Looks in a glass.

An allusion to the beryl-stone, in which it was supposed that the future might be seen, and the absent brought before the eyes. This picturesque superstition has been often utilized in romances and poems; the latest and greatest instance being Rossetti's ballad, "Rose Mary."

79. Line 99: But, ere they live, to end.—F. print here,
NOTES TO MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

ACT II. Scene 2.

doubtless a misprint, though the Old-Spelling editors resolutely adhere to it. The correction was introduced by Hamner.

90. Line 112: pelting. — Pelting, in the sense of peltry, is used several times by Shakespeare (e.g. Lear, ii. 3. 18: "Poor pelting villages"); and Steevens quotes the phrase "a pelting jade" from Lyly's Mother Bombye (1594), iv. 2. The passage runs: "If thou be a good hackneyman, take all our foure bonds for the payment, thou knowest we are town-borne children, and will not shrinke the cite for a pelting jade" (Works, vol. ii. p. 128).

91. Lines 113, 114:

Would use his heaven for thunder;
Nothing but thunder. Merciful Heaven!

Dyce arranged these lines, perhaps preferably, so as to leave Merciful Heaven! in a line to itself.

92. Line 122: As makes the angels weep. — So Fr., usually altered to the modern grammatical makes. But such constructions are not uncommon in Shakespeare; comp. Henry V. i. 2. 118, 119. They are apparently a survival of the Northern plural in -se. In some cases the plural noun may be regarded as equivalent, in thought, to the singular.

93. Lines 135: We cannot weigh our brother with ourselves.
—This is not, as might be supposed at first sight, a reference of Isabella's to her own brother, but a general statement — our brother meaning "our fellow-man," whom she says we cannot weigh as we should, impartially, with ourselves, passing on each an equal judgment.

94. Line 137: Art avide'd o' that! — Avided is used several times by Shakespeare in the same sense as here (i.e. advised, aware); e.g. Merry Wives, i. 4. 106: "Are you avid'd o' that!"

95. Line 138: That skins the vice. — Shakespeare uses the word skin (as a verb) only here and in a very similar passage in Hamlet, iii. 4. 147: "It will but skin and film the ulcerous place." In both places the verb has the meaning of "to cover with a skin;" not that which it usually has in our time, viz. "to take off the skin."

96. Line 149: shekels. — This word appears in the Fr. as sickles, a spelling used in Wycliffe's Bible.

97. Line 154: dedicate. — This form of the participle is also used in II. Henry VI. v. 2. 37, 38: He that is truly dedicate to war Hath no self-love.

98. Line 172: selfs; i.e. privies. Used again in Henry VIII. ii. 1. 67:
Nor build their selfs on the graves of great men.

Henley remarks: "The desecration of edifices devoted to religion, by converting them to the most abject purposes of nature, was an Eastern method of expressing contempt. See 2 Kings, x. 27."

ACT II. Scene 3.

90. Line 11: the fæva. —Here Warburton (after Davenant) reads flames, which is certainly a help to the metaphor, and was perhaps in the original text. But, as Johnson says of Warburton's emendations: "Who does not see that, upon such principles, there is no end of correction?"

91. Lines 30-34:

but lest you do repent,
As that the sin hath brought you to this shame,
Which sorrow is always toward ourselves, not heaven,
Shewing we would not spare heaven as we love it,
But as we stand in fear.

This passage is so broken up by parentheses that it appears more obscure than it really is; and besides, there is an apophasis, for the sentence is not finished; the meaning, however, is tolerably clear. The Duke, in his assumed character of spiritual adviser, wishes to impress upon Juliet that her repentance, to be effective, should be based upon the sorrow that she feels for having offended God, and not on account of the shame which her sin has brought upon herself. F. 1, F. 2, F. 3 read least instead of last, which is the correction of F. 4. Steevens calls it "a kind of negative imperative." The meaning is: "In case you only repent as that (a) because the sin has brought you to this shame;" and then he points out that the sorrow is merely selfish sorrow. The only difficulty in the remainder of the passage is the expression "spare heaven," which may mean either, as Malone explains it, "spare to offend heaven," or "spare heaven (i.e. God) the pain that sin causes to Him." Juliet interrupts the Duke at this point without letting him finish his advice in the sense above. —F. A. M.

91. Lines 40-42:

Must dis to-morrow! O injurious love,
That requites me a life, whose very comfort
Is still a dying horror!

This passage is certainly very difficult to explain; Hamner's emendation law for love is a very plausible one, and gets rid of the difficulty in the simplest manner. The meaning then would be plain enough, Juliet exclaiming on the law which spares her life, but takes that of her lover. Johnson supposes Juliet to refer to the fact that her execution was respite on account of her pregnancy; but it does not appear that the law, so greedily revived by the Immaculate Angelo, inflicted any penalty upon the woman, further than the disgrace involved in exposure. If we refer to scene 2 of this act (lines 16, 17):

Dispose of her
To some more fitter place; and that with speed;

and again, lines 23-25:

See you the fornicatress be remov'd;
Let her have needful, but not lavish, means;
There shall be order for;

we find that Angelo does no more than direct that Juliet shall be taken care of till she has given birth to her child; but, if we refer to the story, we find that the penalty for the woman was that she "should ever after be infamous not only by the wearing of some disguised apparel!" (Hazlitt's Shak. Lib. vol. iii. pt. 1, p. 156). It is possible, however, that Juliet may, in this passage, refer to her unborn child, which should be her comfort, but who will now only remind her of the horrid death of her lover. — F. A. M.
ACT II. SCENE 4.

93. Line 9: Grown fear’d and tedious.—So F. Many editors read sear’d, after Hamer, and Collier states that such is actually the reading in Lord Elyssmere’s copy of the First Folio. Fear’d means, no doubt, just what it says on the surface, for, as Johnson says, “what we go to with reluctance may be said to be fear’d.”

93. Line 11: with boot.—This expression occurs again in Lear, v. 3. 301, and boot, in the same sense, is used several times by Shakespeare. The meaning, according to Schmidt, is “something given over,” a difference of sense from boot, meaning “profit, advantage.”

94. Line 17: ‘Tis not the devil’s crest.—This phrase is no doubt used ironically; and there is nothing in the expression so obscure as to give warrant for the two pages of annotation in the Variorum Shakespeare, and the conjectural emendations of Hamner and Johnson.

95. Line 27: The general.—This word, for “the people,” occurs twice elsewhere in Shakespeare: Hamlet, i. 1. 467: “caviare to the general;” and Julius Caesar, i. 1. 10–13:
and, for my part, I know no personal cause to spurn him, But for the general,

96. Line 53: or.—FI. and, an obvious error, corrected by Davenant, whose correction is adopted into the text by Rowe.

97. Line 55: I had rather give my body than my soul.—This is perhaps (Intentionally) misunderstood by Angelo; Isabella means, I had rather die (give my body to death) than thus forfeit my soul.

98. Line 75: Or seem so, craftily.—FI. craftly; corrected by Rowe, after Davenant.

99. Line 77: Let me be ignorant.—Me was omitted in F. 1, added in F. 2.

100. Lines 79, 80:

as these black masks
Proclaim an ENSHIELD beauty.

Various conjectures have been made as to the precise meaning of these black masks; but I think we may reasonably take the word these to be equivalent to no more than an emphatic the—as indeed was its original significance. Compare Romeo and Juliet, i. 1. 226, 237:
These happy masks, that kind fair ladies’ brows,
Being black, put us in mind they hide the fair.

ENSHIELD is simply a contraction of ENSHIELD. Similar contractions are not uncommon in Shakespeare. See, on the masks, Romeo and Juliet, note 22.

101. Line 90: But in the loss of question.—Schmidt understands this phrase to mean “as no better arguments present themselves to my mind, to make the point clear;” Steevens, however, seems nearer the mark in explaining it to mean “in idle supposition, or conversation that leads to nothing;” as we should say now, “for the sake of argument.”

102. Line 94: the ALL-BUILDING law.—So F.; best explained in the Old-Spelling editors’ alteration of Schmidt’s definition: “being the foundation and bond of all.” Rowe

228

ACT II. SCENE 4.

103. Line 103: That longing HAVE been sick for.—So F. Many editors follow Rowe’s emendation I’ve; but the ellipse of have for I have is perhaps intentional. The Cambridge editors (note xi.) say: “The second person singular of the governing pronoun is frequently omitted by Shakespeare in familiar questions, but, as to the first and third persons, his usage rarely differs from the modern. If the text be genuine, we have an instance in this play of the omission of the third person singular, i. 4. 72: ‘Has casued him.’ See also the early Quarto of the Merry Wives of Windsor, sc. xiv. l. 40, p. 226 of our reprint:
lie cloath my daughter, and advertise Stüder To know her by that signe, and steale her thesee, And unknoue to my wife, shall marrie her.”

104. Lines 111–113:

Ignomy in ransom and free pardon
Are of two houses: lawful mercy
Is nothing kin to foul redemption.

This is the arrangement and reading of F. 1, which I have not felt justified in disturbing, though Steevens’s rearrangement, as follows, is plausible:

lawful mercy is
Nothing akin to foul redemption.

Ignomy is, of course, merely another form of ignominy (by which it is replaced in F. 2); but the spelling is preserved in many modern editions. It occurs also in I. Henry IV. v. 4. 100:
Thy ignomy sleep with thee in the grave;

and in Troilus and Cressida, v. 10. 33, 34:
ignomy and shame
Pursue thy life;
as well as in the Qu. of Titus Andronicus, iv. 2. 115:
I blush to think upon this ignomy.

105. Line 122, 123:

If not a FEDARY, but only he.
Owe and succeed thy weakness.

Fedary (or fodoxy, as the later FI. have it) originally meant a vassal; in Cymbeline, III. 2. 21, it is certainly used in the sense of accomplice: “Art thou a fedary for this act?” Mr. Stone writes me: “I incline to the view that F. fedaries (F. 2 fodoxy) means a vassal, not an accomplice. If succeeded could be supposed to mean follow—in a moral sense—Fodoxy is better understood as meaning accomplice. Accepting the other interpretation of fodoxy, Isabella may mean: If my brother be not an inheritor of frailty, but frailty begins and ends with him, let him die. As if a man could be heir to himself, and by this title hold his property. With either explanation we must take thy (line 123) to mean you men, since Angelo has not yet revealed himself.”

106. Line 130: credulous to false prints.—Compare Twelfth Night, ii. 2. 81; and see my note on that passage (78).

107. Line 160: And now I give my sensual race the rein.—For the use of the word race in the sense here given to it—i.e. “natural disposition” (Schmidt)—compare the only other instance in Shakespeare, The Tempest, i. 2. 358-360:
NOTES TO MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

ACT III. Scene 1.

(Proverbs, ch. v. v. 22) is beneath the cut: "Quasi agnas lascivias, et ignoras, nescis quod ad vincula stultus trahatur" (see p. 261). Another illustration of the subject is in an alphabet ornamented with subjects from the Dance of Death, which was introduced into books printed at Basle by Bebellus and Cratander about 1530. In Bohn's edition of the Dance of Death there is a reprint of this alphabet. The design for the letter Et has for its subject Death seated in the fool, who strikes at him with his bladder-bauble and seems to strive to escape. English readers would be familiarized with this, since in an edition of Coverdale's Bible printed by James Nicolson in Southwark, the same design is used for the letter A. It is found in other English books, and even as late as 1618 in an edition of Stowe's Survey of London. (See pp. 214-218.) Besides this, the so-called Queen Elizabeth's prayer-book, printed by J. Day in 1569, of which there are other editions dated 1570, 1581, 1590, has at the end a "Dance of Death of singular interest, as exhibiting the costume of its time with respect to all ranks and conditions of life." Among the characters are both the Fool and the Female Fool (p. 147). Douce gives also (p. 185) from the Stationers' Registers, under date January 5th, 1567, the entry to the Purfootes of "The roll of the Daunce of Death, with pictures, and verses upon the same." See also Richard II. note 220.

112. Line 24: For thy complexion shifts to strange effects.—Johnson would read affects, i.e. "affections of mind." But the word in the text, in its natural meaning of "natural manifestations, expressions," is very little in need of improvement.

113. Line 29: sirs.—So F. 4. The reading of the earlier Fr. is sirs.

114. Lines 34-36:

for all thy blessed youth

Becomes as aged, and doth beg the alms

Of pained old.

This passage has given rise to a great deal of conjecture, and many unsatisfactory substitutions for aged have been brought forward. The meaning seems to me to be simply this. The Duke, with a pessimism worthy of Leopardi, is going over the catalogue of miseries, cunningly extracting poison from the fairest flowers of life, and finally declares that neither in youth nor age is there anything enjoyable, at least according to man's way of dealing with the seasons; for even in youth he is devoted with the unwill and care proper to age, and is as feeble and nerveless as a pained beggar-man, with strength neither of body nor of will.

115. Line 40: Mon thousand deaths; i.e. a thousand more deaths. Mon is frequently used in Shakespeare for more. Compare Henry VIII. ii. 3. 97: "That promises mons thousands." Compare Julius Cesar, note 101.

116. Line 51: Bring me to hear them speak, where I may be conceald.—F. 1 reads Bring them to hear me speak, an obvious transposition, which, however, was not set right before the conjecture of Steevens, adopted by Malone.

1 The word necis is not in the Vulgate
NOTES TO MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

117. Lines 57-59:

Lord Angelo, having affairs to heaven,
Intends you for the swift ambassador,
Where you shall be an everlasting Leiger.

Leiger, lieger, or legger, means "a resident ambassador."
Compare Cymbeline, i. 5. 80: "Leigera for her sweete."
Steevens cites Look About You, a comedy, 1600: "as leiger to solicit for your absent love." and Leicester's Commonwealth, "a special man of that hasty king, who was his legger, or agent, in London." The word is used for "resident" in Shirley's Lady of Pleasure, iv. 2:

Fools are a family over all the world;
We do affect one naturally; indeed
The fool is legier with us.

118. Lines 66-70:

a restraint,
THOUGH all the world's vastidity you had,
To a determined scope.

This magnificent conception of life fettered and confined within the limits of its remorse may be compared with the feeble, more rhetorical, but still fine image of Byron in The Glaciar:

The mind that broods o'er guilty woes
Is like the scorpion girl by fire,
In circle narrowing as it glows, &c.

Fl. print Through, a misprint which was corrected by Pope.

119. Lines 83, 84:

Good; I can a resolution fetch
From FLOWERY TENDERNESS!

The phrase flowery tenderness appears to be used by Claudio in mockery or resentment of his sister's stolc counsels, coming, as they do, from her, a mere woman, a creature tender as a flower, to him, a man, supposing himself valiant.

120. Line 88: conserve; i.e. preserve, a word used by Shakespeare only here and in Othello, iii. 4. 76: "Conserve'd of maidens' hearts." Chaucer uses the word in The Knight's Tale, 1471:

Syn thos art mayde, and kepere of us alle,
My mayeden shode thou kepe and wel conserv,
And whil I live a mayde I wil the serve.

121. Line 92: His strait within being cast. — "As a hawk is made to cast out her 'casting,' a pellet put down her throat to test the state of her digestion" (Furnivall and Stone, Old-Spelling Shakspere, note).

122. Line 94: The PRENZE Angesl — Few words in Shakespeare have given rise to so much controversy as this word prenzie, repeated again in line 97 below. F. 1 has princely, and various conjectural emendations have been adopted, of which princely (Hammer's conjecture) is, justly, the most widely accepted. Accepting the word in the text as accurate, many attempts have been made to explain it. The Cambridge editors say: "It may be etymologically connected with pris, in old French, meaning demure; also with princes, a coxcomb, and with the word prender, which occurs more than once in Skelton, e.g.:

This pernysh proud, this prender gest,
When he is well, yet can he not rest.

Mr. Bullock mentions, in support of his conjecture, that prenzie is still used in some north-country districts. Prinzie is also found in Burns' poems (as 'prinzie Macle'; in Hallow'en) with the significance of 'demure, precise,' according to the Glossary." Dr. Brinley Nicholson suggests that the word prenzie may stand for the old Italian Prenzie, a variant for Principe; and his suggestion is given in the note to the word in the Old-Spelling Shakspere, from which I have adopted, at line 97, the reading prenzie's guards, for the prenzie's gardes of F. 1; prenzie's guards in this case meaning a prince's guards—the face on his robe. Compare Love's Labour's Lost, iv. 3. 58:

O, rhymes are guards on wondrous Cupid's hose.

123. Line 116: PERDURABLY AWD. — This is the only instance of the word perdurable in Shakespeare, but we have perdurable in Henry V. iv. 5. 7: "O perdurable shame!" and in Othello, i. 3. 323: "cables of perdurable toughness."

124. Lines 129-130:

To bathe in fiery floods, or to reside
In thrilling REGION of thick-ribbed ice;
To imprison'd in the viewless winds,
And blown with restless violence round about
The pendent world; or to be worse than worst
Of those that loveless and uncertain THOUGHT
IMAGINE HOWLING.

Region, the reading of the F., was altered by Rowe to regions, and Dyce, who follows him, declares that the plural is "positively required" here, also in thought, line 127. "We contend," says Dr. Ingleby, "that Region is used in the abstract, and in the radical sense; and that it means restricted place, or confinement; also that thought is used in the abstract, and that it is the objective governed by imagine" (The Still Lion, 1874, pp. 97, 98). With the latter statement I cannot agree. Perhaps we should read thoughts Imagine or thought Imagine. With regard to the possible sources of Shakespeare's conception of future punishment, see the numerous interesting quotations from medieval visions of hell and purgatory, given in the notes to the play in the Old-Spelling Shakspere, with special reference to "alternate torments of heat and cold," such as the fiery floods and thick-ribbed ice point to. An extract from Macrobius, whose commentary on Cicero's Dream of Scipio was well known in Shakespeare's time, affords a curious parallel to the sentence "blown with restless violence."

(Perhaps one of the descriptions that Shakespeare had in his mind was that contained in The Revelation of the Monk of Evesham, published in 1482. (See Arber's reprint of this curious work from the unique copy in the British Museum, and compare, especially, chapters 15, 17, 24, in which the Three Places of Pains and Torments of Purgatory are described.) As to the word howling, it is worth while, perhaps, to quote the well-known lines in Hamlet, addressed to the Priest by Laertes over his sister's grave, v. 1. 293-295:

I tell thee, charitie priest,
A ministering angel shall my sister be
When thou liest howling.

With the whole of the passage quoted above we may compare the following lines from Milton's Paradise Lost:
NOTES TO MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

ACT III. SCENE 1.

Thither by harpy-footed furies hail’d,
At certain revolutions, all the damn’d
Are brought; and feel by turns the bitter change
Of fierce extremes, extremes by chance more fierce,
From beds of raging fire, to starve in ice
Their soft ethereal warmth, and there to pine
Immovable, unaid’d, and frozen round,
Periods of time, thence hurried back to fire.

—Book II. lines 596–603.

—P. A. M.]

126. Line 190: penury.—This is the correction by F. 2 of the misprint perry in F. 1.

126. Line 141: Heaven shield my mother play’d my father fair!—For shield in the sense of forbid, compare All’s Well, i. 3. 174: “God shield, you mean it not!” and Romeo and Juliet, iv. 1. 41:

God shield I should disturb devotion!

127. Line 142: slip of wilderness; i.e. wild slip. Wilderness is used for wildness in Old Fortunatus, 1600, iv. 1:

But in wilderness trotter’d out my youth,
And therefore must turn wild, must be a beast.

Steevens cites another line in which the word wilderness occurs, from Beaumont and Fletcher’s Maid’s Tragedy, v. 4; but the word may there be used in its modern sense.

128. Line 148: I am going to resolve him, I had rather, &c.—So most editors; the Cambridge editors follow the pointing of the F.: “I am now going to resolve him: I had rather,” &c.

129. Line 217: Frederick the great soldier who miscarried at sea; i.e. was lost. Compare Merchant of Venice, ii. 8. 29, 30:

there miscarried

A vessel of our country richly fraught.

130. Line 221: She should this Angelo have married; was affianced to her oath.—She is of course used, by a grammatical license, for her. See Abbott’s Shakespearean Grammar, par. 111. Very likely the latter clause is merely a misprint for “was affianced to her by oath” (as F. 2 corrects it), and so most editors read; the Old-Spelling editors retain the reading of F. 1, and Mr. Stone suggests that here “Mariana’s betrothal vow to Angelo may be regarded as a quasi-agent, instead of the person who took the oath.”

133. Line 306: the corrupt deputy sealed.—The meaning of this word is very doubtful. The verb is used by Shakespeare in its ordinary sense of “to climb” with a ladder in four passages, and in a peculiar sense in Coriolanus, i. 1. 95–96:

I shall tell you
A pretty tale: it may be you have heard it;
But, since it serves my purj os, I will venture
To scale’s a little more,

where many modern editors read stale, an emendation which Halliwell in his Archaic Dictionary, under Scale, says is undoubtedly right, and is strongly supported also by Dyce. In another passage in the same play, ii. 3. 257, the word occurs,

Sealing his present bearing with his past, where it is undoubtedly used in the sense of “to weigh;” a sense which seems to suit the passage in our text very well.

Johnson says: “To scale is certainly to reach as well as to disperse or spread abroad, and hence its application to a routed army which is scattered over the field.” Ritson says: “The Duke’s meaning appears to be, either that Angelo would be over-reached, as a town is by the scaleade; or, that his true character would be spread or lay’d open, so that his villainy would become evident.” This latter meaning suggested by Johnson has been adopted by many editors, and also makes very good sense. Richardson in his Dictionary, under Scale, says: “In Meas. for Meas.—‘The corrupt deputy was sealed, by separating from him, or stripping off his covering of hypocrisy.’ The tale of Menenius (in Coriolanus) was ‘sealed a little more,’ by being divided more into particulars and degrees; more circumstantially or at length.—‘Sealing his present bearing with his past,’ (also in Coriolanus,) looking separately at each, and, thence, comparing them.”

In a passage in Hall, copied by Hollinshead, we have this verb used in a very peculiar sense; he is referring to the dispersion of the army of Welshmen collected together at the beginning of Buckingham’s insurrection: “the Welshmen lyngerynge ydely and without money, vityale, or wages sodaynely scaled and departed” (Reprint, p. 394). The meaning there seems to be simply “separated.” It is difficult to decide authoritatively between the various meanings assigned to the word in the text; but “over-reached” or “exposed” both would suit the context. Grant White gets out of the difficulty by reading foiled; an emendation for which, however, there seems no necessity.—P. A. M.

134. Line 277: the moated grange.—A grange is a solitary house, frequently a farm-house; “some one particular house,” says Ritson, “immediately inferior in rank to a hall, situated at a small distance from the town or village from which it takes its name.” Compare Othello, i. 1. 106, 106:

What tellst thou me of robbing? This is Venice;
My house is not a grange.

The word is used again in Winter’s Tale, iv. 4. 309:

Or thou guest to the grange or mill.

The “lonely moated grange” of Mariana is equally familiar to the readers of the two most popular English poets, Tennyson as well as Shakespeare.

ACT III. SCENE 2.

135. Line 4: brown and white bastard.—Bastard is a sweet Spanish wine. Compare I. Henry IV. ii. 4. 50: “a pint of bastard;” line 82: “your brown bastard is your only drink." Coles (Latin Dictionary) has "Bastard wine, vinum poenem." Nares quotes Beaumont and Fletcher, The Tamer Tamed, ll. 1:

I was drunk with bastard,
Whose nature is to form things like itself,
Heady and monstrous.

—Yf. eat away myself. The reading in the text, an unexceptionable and universally followed emendation, was first adopted into the text by Theobald, after Bishop's conjecture.

137. Lines 40, 41:
That we were all, as some would seem to be,
From our faults, as faults from seeming, free!
This is the reading of F. 1, followed by the Cambridge and the Old-Spelling editors. F. 2 and F. 3 read "Free from our faults," and F. 4 "Free from all faults." The latter part of the line should be, according to Hamner, as from faults seeming free—a widely-accepted emendation which has this among other drawbacks, that it turns a line of blank verse into a regular dactylic canter. Furnivall and Stone give, I think, the plain meaning of the Folio text in their foot-note: "Would that we were as free from faults, as our faults are from seeming (hypoocrisy)."

—A double allusion to the story of Pygmalion's image coming to life, and to a meaning sometimes given to the word woman, like the primary meaning of the Latin mulier. See Cotgrave under Dame du milieu.

139. Line 53: Sayest thou, Trot?—Needlessly altered by some editors to "Say'st thou to' t?" Trot (a contemptuous term for an old woman, used in Taming of Shrew, i. 2. 80) is no unlikely epithet for the irreverent Lucio to use to his patron. Boyer (French Dictionary) has "an old Trot (or decrepit Woman) Une vieille."

140. Line 69: in the tub.—Compare Henry V. ii. 1. 79: "the powdering tub of infamy"—an allusion to the treatment for the French disease; referred to again in Timon, iv. 3. 96.

141. Line 107: extirp.—Used only here and in I. Henry V. iii. 3. 24: "extirped from our provinces." Extirpate is only used in The Tempest, i. 2. 125, 126:

extirpate me and mine
Out of the dukedom.

142. Line 119: a motion generative.—Compare Two Gent. of Verona, ii. 1. 100: "O excellent motion! O exceeding puppet!"—which explains the word by giving a synonym for it. Theobald reads "a motion ungenerative," but the change seems unnecessary.—indeed, I think the force of the expression is weakened rather than heightened by the alteration.

143. Line 128: I never heard the absent duke much detected for women.—Detected is usually explained as meaning "suspected;" but Verplanck (quoted by Rolfe) remarks: "The use of this word, in the various extracts from old authors, collected by the commentators, shows that its old meaning was (not suspected, as some of them say, but) charged, arraigned, accused. Thus, in Greenway's Tacitus (1622), the Roman senators, who informed against their kindred, are said 'to have detected the dearest of their kindred.'"

144. Line 135: clack-dish.—A dish with a cover, clacked to call attention to the beggars who carried it.

145. Line 135: A shy fellow was the duke.—Compare V. i. 53, 54:

the wick'dest catiff on the ground,
May seem as shy, as grave, as just, as absolute.
This closely parallel passage (the only other instance of the word in Shakespeare) quite disallows, I think, the emendation shy, adopted in the present passage by Hamner.

146. Line 160: dearer.—This is Hamner's correction of the reading of F. 1, dearer. F. 2 follows F. 1; F. 3 and F. 4 read dear.

147. Lines 191, 192: The duke, I say to thee again, would eat motion on Fridays.—The double entendre (mutton, or laced mutton, being slang for a courtesan) is a common one in plays of the period. It occurs in Shakespeare's original, Promos and Cassandra, pt. i. 1. 5:

I heard of one Phalaris,
A man esteem'd, of Pronos very much;
Of whose Nature, I was so bold to ssea,
And I smelt, he loved lace mutton well.

148. Line 198: He's now past it; yet (and I say to thee) as would, &c.—This is the reading of the F. 1, preserved by the Old-Spelling editors, but almost universally abandoned in favour of Hamner's plausible emendation: "He's not past it yet, and I say to thee, he would," &c.—plausible, but surely less characteristic of Lucio and his reckless scandal-mongering than the expression in the Folio; an expression explained well enough by Points' remark concerning Falstaff (II. Henry IV. ii. 4. 283, 284): "Is it not strange that desire should so many years outlive performances?" The parenthetical "and I say to thee" is merely an emphatic pressing home of the point.

149. Line 233: the sea.—F. read Sea, a spelling not uncommon at the time. Furnivall and Stone quote Hall's Chronicles, 1548, ed. 1800, p. 780, l. 3: "the Sea Apostolick;" and Stow's Annals, 1605, p. 1068, l. 14: "the sea of Rome."

150. Line 237: and it is as dangerous . . . as.—This is the correction of F. 3 and F. 4 of the reading of F. 1 and F. 2: "as is it as dangerous.

151. Line 278: Grace to stand, and virtue go; i.e. "to go." «He should have grace to withstand temptation, and virtue to go (walk) uprightly» (Furnivall and Stone, note).

152. Line 287: How may likeness, made in crimes, &c.—Many attempts have been made to amend this passage or to explain it. Mr. W. G. Stone attempts a paraphrase in his notes on Measure for Measure (New Shakespeare Society's Transactions, part III. p. 115): "How may a real affinity of guilt (like that which attaches to Angelo, who meditates the same crime for which he has condemned Claudio), practising upon the world, draw with such gosamer threads as hypocritical pretences the solid advantages of honour, power," &c. The addition of is in line
NOTES TO MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

ACT IV. SCENE 1.

289 is not without confirmation in the usage of Shakespeare's time.

ACT IV. SCENE 1.

153. Line 1: Take, O, take these lips away.—This song appears again in Fletcher's Bloody Brother, v. 2, with the addition of the following stanza:

Hide, O hide those hills of snow
Which thy frozen bosom bears,
On whose tops the pinks that grow
Are of those that April wears;
But first set my poor heart free.
Bound in these icy chains by thee.

The two stanzas are also found in the spurious edition of Shakespeare's Poems, 1640; and it has been supposed by some that the same hand wrote the whole poem. It seems equally certain that Shakespeare did write the first stanza, and that he did not write the second. In the first place, the added stanza is of obviously poorer stuff than the original one—as inferior as Fletcher is to Shakespeare. In the second place, the original stanza is so written as to afford a very beautiful refrain in the last two lines:

But my kisses bring again,
Bring again;
Sails of love, but soon'd in vain,
Soon'd in vain.

The added stanza is written with no such intention; and a refrain is impossible, without a perfect dislocation of sense, thus: "poor heart free," and "chains by thee." I do not think there is anything very surprising in Fletcher's using and continuing a song of Shakespeare's. Literary property was not then very strictly guarded; and both before and since there have been instances of apparently unfinished poems completed by other hands.

154. Line 18: much upon this time have I promised here to meet.—Meet is used intrinsically in Merry Wives, ii. 2. 5: "'Tis past the hour, sir, that Sir Hugh promised to meet;" and in As You Like It, v. 2. 159: "as you love Zephie, meet: and as I love no woman, I'll meet."

155. Line 21: I do constantly believe you.—Constantly here means firmly; the word is used in the same sense in Trollius and Cressida, iv. 1. 40-42:

I constantly do think—
Or, rather, call my thought a certain knowledge—
My brother Trollius lodges there to-night.

In the other sense of firmly, i.e. with firmness of mind, it is used in Julius Caesar, v. 1. 92:

To meet all perils very constantly.

Like a proud Courser bred in Thrace,
Accustomed to the running race,
Who when he hears the Trumpets noise,
The shouts and cries of men and boys,
(Though in the stable close vp-vent)
Yet, with his hooves, doth beat and rent
The flanchèd bowre, the barres and chaines,
V&uell he have got loose the raines.

157. Lines 34-36:

There have I made my promise
Upon the heavy middle of the night
To call upon him.

The F. arrange these lines thus:

There have I made my promise, upon the Heavy middle of the night, to call upon him.

The arrangement adopted in the text was proposed by Dyce by Lord Tennison in 1844. It is adopted by Dyce, the Cambridge, and the Old-Spelling editors, &c., and seems unquestionably right.

158. Line 40: in action all of precept.—"Showing the several turnings of the way with his hand" (Warburton).

159. Line 62: contrarious.—Used only here and in Henry IV. v. 1. 52:

And the contrarious winds that held the king.

Quota is F. 2's correction of the quest of F. 1.

160. Line 64: make thee the father of their title DREAM.

—So F. and Old-Spelling editors; Pope's emendation dreams is almost universally followed. It seems to me more probable than not, but not certain, and I have allowed the original reading to stand.

161. Lines 74, 75:

Sith that the justice of your title to him
Doth flourish the deceit.

This is the only instance of flourish used as a verb in the sense obviously intended here. But flourish is often used as a noun with somewhat the same signification; e.g. Sonnet ix. 9:

Time doth transfix the flourish set on youth;

i.e. the "varnish, gloss, ostentatious embellishment" (Schmidt).

162. Line 76: Our corn's to reap, for yet our TILTH's to sow.—F. 1, F. 2, F. 3 print tithe; F. 4 tythes, which Knight, the Cambridge editors, &c., retain. Johnson takes the word by metonymy for harvest, and Knight suggests that tithe may be understood as meaning "the proportion that the seed which is sown bears to the harvest." The reading adopted in the text is Warburton's very probable conjecture, to which great support is given by the passage in Markham's English Husbandman, 1635 (quoted in the Variorum Sh. ix. 145): "After the beginning of March you shall begin to sow your barley upon that ground which the year before did lie fallow, and is commonly called your tilth or fallowfield."

(I cannot find tilth in any of the numerous provincial glossaries that I have searched; but Halliwell in his Archaic and Provincial Dictionary gives a quotation from Gower:

So that the tilth is nye borne,
Whiche Criste sewe with his owen honde.

—MS. Soc. Asi. 134 f. 138, which seems very appropriate, for there he speaks of sowing tilth; and Richardson, sub vocc, gives a quotation from Appollonius Rhodius, Argon. b. iv.:

O'er the rough tilth he cast his eyes around,
And soon the plough of adamant he found,
And yokes of brass,
where it seems to mean "ground to be tilled." Fawkes appears to have published his translation in 1761.—F. A. M.]

ACT IV. SCENE 2.

163. Line 39: mystery.—The word mystery is used by Shakespeare several times for trade or profession; three times in the present scene; once in Othello, iv. 2. 30; and twice in Timon, iv. 1. 18; iv. 2. 458. [It is well to remember that the word mystery in the sense of a trade, occupation, or art, is quite a different word from mystery in its ordinary sense—"anything kept concealed, a secret rite;" the latter being derived through the Latin mysterium, from the Greek μυστηριον; while mystery, or mistery, as it should be spelt, is from the Middle English misterie, a word used by Chaucer, and is no doubt adapted from the old French maistrie, which Colgrave translates "a trade, occupation, mistery." As Skeat says, the two words have been badly confused. Spenser uses mysterie = "the soldier’s occupation" in Prosopopela or Mother Hubberds Tale:

Shame light on him that through so false illusion,
Doth turn the name of Souldiers to abusion,
And that which is the noblest mysterie,
Brings to reproach and common infamous.

—P. A. M.]

164. Lines 45-50:
Abhor. Every true man’s apparel fits your thief.
Porn. If it be too little, &c.

The distribution of speakers in the text is that of the F1. Almost all the editors since Capell, including even the Old-Spelling editors, have given the whole passage, from Every true man’s apparel to so every true man’s apparel fits your thief, to Abhorson. But I consider the admissibility of the original reading to have been quite proved by Cowden Clarke in the following passage, quoted by Rolfe: "Abhorson states his proof that hanging is a mystery by saying, ‘Every true man’s apparel fits your thief,’ and the Clown, taking the words out of his mouth, explains them after his own fashion, and ends by saying, so (in this way, or thus) every true man’s apparel fits your thief. Moreover, the speech is much more in character with the Clown’s snap-snap style of chop-logic than with Abhorson’s manner, which is remarkably curt and blunt."

165. Line 54: he doth often ask forpiveness.—This is an allusion to the practice, common among executioners, of asking the pardon of those whom they were about to send out of the world. Compare As You Like It, iii. 5. 8-6:

_The common executioner,
Whose heart th’ accustomed sight of death makes hard,
Falls not the axe upon the humbled neck
But first begs pardon._

166. Line 56: and I hope, if you have occasion to use me for your own turn, you shall find me fayre.—The word, which occurs several times in Shakespeare, is from A. B. gedro, ready. There is a curious parallel to the use of this word in its present connection, in Antony and Cleopatra, iii. 13. 129, 130:

A halter’d neck which does the hangman thank
For being bare about him.

167. Line 86: meet’d.—Johnson’s explanation, “sprinkled, defiled,” seems preferable to Blackstone’s derivation from Fr. mettre, mingled, compounded.

168. Line 89: seldom when; i.e. ‘tis seldom when. Compare II. Henry IV., iv. 4. 79, 80:

‘tis seldom when the bee doth leave her comb
In the dead carion.

169. Line 92: the unsitting poetria.—This is an expression never satisfactorily explained, unless the guess of the Old-Spelling editors can be said to solve the difficulty. They suggest that the word may be derived from siede, which is sometimes intransitive, and that unsiting may thus mean “shaking.”

170. Line 103: This is his lordship’s man.—Fl. Lord. The correction was made by Pope. "In the MS. plays of our author’s time they often wrote Lo. for Lord, and Lord. for Lordship; and these corrections were sometimes improperly followed in the printed copies" (Malone).

171. Lines 105, 104:
Duke. This is his lordship’s man.
Prov. And here comes Claudio’s pardon.

This is the reading of the F1, and I do not see any certain reason why it should be altered, as most editors, following Tyrwhitt’s conjecture, have altered it, by the transposition of the speakers’ names. Tyrwhitt bases his change on the seeming inconsistency of the Provost’s words. "He has just declared a fixed opinion that the execution will not be countermanded; and yet, upon the first entrance of the messenger, he immediately guesses that his errand is to bring Claudio’s pardon." I cannot see any real inconsistency in this. The Provost, judging from what he knows of Angelo’s character, has said that he has no expectation of a remand. At that moment Angelo’s servant enters. "This is his lordship’s man," says the Duke significantly. "And here comes Claudio’s pardon!" cries the Provost, now at last convinced. Is not all this very natural? The Provost, despite the opinion he holds to the contrary, has just confessed that "haply" the pretended friar may be in the secret, and "something know." Would not the unexpected entrance of Angelo’s servant—at so very unusual an hour ("almost day," as he says in leaving)—force a strong probability on the Provost’s mind that after all the friar is right? Another imaginary inconsistency is brought forward by Knight in support of the charge: that of the Provost’s first saying, "Here comes Claudio’s pardon," and then, "I told you [that he had no chance of a pardon]." Here again the process of mind is quite natural. Having read the letter, and found out what it really is, the provost is of course in the same mind as before as to Angelo’s character, and the improbability of his pardoning Claudio. Thus, when the Duke questions him, "What news?" he replies (ignoring his momentary change of front), "I told you;" that is, "I told you before that Claudio must die."

172. Line 135: one that is a prisoner nine years old.—Compare Hamlet, iv. 6. 15: "Ere we were two days old at sea."

173. Lines 187-189: Shave the head, and TIE the beard; and
NOTES TO MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

ACT IV. Scene 2.

say it was the desire of the penitent to be so BAR'D.—So FY., and there seems no reason to suppose there is any error, though Dyce reads trim, and Simpson conjectures dge. Bar'd, immediately following, has reference chiefly, no doubt, to the shaving of the head (probably receiving the tonsure, in order to die in the odour of sanctity); but it may also refer to the tying back of the beard; for, as Dyce notes, we have in All's Well, iv. 1. 54, the expression, "the baring of my beard."

174. Line 306: attempt; i.e. tempt, as in Merchant of Venice, iv. 1. 421:

Dear sir, of force I must attempt you further.

ACT IV. SCENE 3.

175. Line 5: he's in for a commodity of BROWN PAPER.

—Steevens cites Middleton, Michaelmas Term, 1607, ii. 3: "I know some gentlemen in town has been glad, and are glad at this time, to take up commodities in glads and hawns paper" (Works, vol. i. p. 461); and R. Davenport, A New Trick to Cheat the Divell, 1696, i. 2, fol. B:

"Viewer, . . . . What newes in Holborne, Fleet-street, and the Strand?"

In th' Ordinaries among Gallants, no young Helens
There to be snapp'd at?

Scriptor. Th' have bin so bit already
With taking up Commodities of brown paper,
Buttles past fashion, silkes, and Satins,
Babies and childrens Fiddles, with like trash
Took up at a desart rate, and sold for trites.

Malone quotes the following passage relating to the practices of the money-lenders from Nash, Christ's Teares over Jerusalem, 1608, fol. 46: "He falls acquainted with Gentlemen, frequents Ordinaries and Dicing-houses daily, where when some of them (in play) have lost all their mony, he is very diligent at hand, on their Chaynes, or Bracelets, or Jewels, to lend them half the value: Now this is the nature of young Gentlemen that where they have broke the Ice, and borrowed once, they will come againe at the second time; and that these young foxes knowe, as well as the Beggar knows his dish. But at the second time of their conning, it is doubtful whether they shall have money or no. The world growse hard, and wee all are mortal, let them make him any assurance before a Judge, and they shall have some hundred pounds (per consequent) in Silks & Velvets. The third time if they come, they shall have basier commodities: the fourth time late strings and pray Paper."

176. Line 21: "for the Lord's sake."—Malone compares Nash (Apology for Pierce Penniless, 1593): "At that time that thy joys were in the fleeting, and thus crying for the Lord's sake out at an iron window;" and Papers Complaint, in The Scourge of Folly, 1611, p. 241, by John Davies (of Hereford):

Good gentle Writers, for the Lord sake, for the Lord sake,
Like Lod-gate Pri'sner, lo, I (begging) make my mone to you.

Compare Heywood, A Woman Killed with Kindness, iii. 1:

Agen to prison! Malby, hast thou scene
A poore slave better torn'd? Shall we heare
The musick of his voice cry from the grate,
"Means for the Lord's sake."

177. Line 43: I would desire you to CLAP into your prayers.—The phrase to clap into is used again by Shakespeare in Much Ado, iii. 4. 44: "Clap's into Light o' Love;" and As You Like It, v. 3. 11: "Shall we clap into 't roundly?"

178. Lines 92, 98:

Bere twice the sun hath made his JOURNAL greeting
To the under generation.

The word journal for diurnal is used again in Cymbeline, iv. 2. 10: "Stick to your journal course." The Ft. read, in the next line, To yond generation. The emendation adopted in the text is that of Hamner, who suggested that the yond of the Ft. was due to a misreading of ye ond, a contraction for the under. Pope reads yonder. Steevens takes the under generation to mean the Antipodes, and cites Richard II. iii. 2. 88: Dyce, understanding by the term "the generation who live on the earth beneath,—mankind in general," cites Lear, ii. 2. 170:

Approach, thou beacon to this under globe;

and Tempest, ii. 3. 53-55:

You are three men of sin, whom Destiny,
That hath to instrument this lower world
And what is in it," &c.

179. Line 104: By cold gradation and well-balanced form.—F. 1, F. 2, F. 3 read well-balanced; F. 4 well-balanced, probably by a mere misprint; though some editors take well-balanced to mean "adhered to for the public weal." The correction was made by Rowe.

180. Line 138: consent.—An alternative form of consent, used again in Henry VIII. iv. 2. 19. Some editors read consent, but as the Cambridge editors remark, "Shakespeare's ear would hardly have tolerated the harsh-sounding line:

One of our convent and his confessor."

Coles (Latin Dictionary) has:

Consent cannabium, conventus monachorum.

181. Lines 187, 188:

If you can, pace your wisdom
In that good path that I would wish it go.

The comma after can was inserted by Rowe: the Ft. read: "If you can pace your wisdome." The reading in the text is that usually followed. Rolfe adopts the conjecture of the Cambridge editors (not adopted by them):

If you can pace your wisdom
In that good path that I would have it go.

182. Line 139: And you shall have your bosom on this verstuck.—A somewhat similar example of this use of the word bosom is found in Winter's Tale, iv. 4. 575-575:

he shall not perceive
But that you have your father's bosom there
And speak his very heart.

183. Line 171: he's a better woodman than thou tak'st him for.—Reed compares Beaumont and Fletcher, The Chances, i. 8:

Well, well, son John,
I see you are a woodman, and can choose
Your deer tho' it be in the dark.

184. Line 184: the rotten medlar.—Compare As You Like It, iii. 2. 136: "you'll be rotten ere you be half ripe, and that's the right virtue of the medlar."
ACT IV. SCENE 4.

185. Line 6: RELIever our authorities there!—So F. 1; the later Ft. deliver; modern editors read redeliver, which is, in any case, the meaning of the word. Mr. Stone, in his notes on Measure for Measure (New Sh. Soc. Trans. part III. p. 116), observes that Colgrave has "Reliever, to redeliver," and that Reiserer, to redeliver, appears in Kelham's Old French Dictionary. Ducange gives Rederiverare, explaining it as "Iterum liberae, se tradere, which he confirms by a quotation from a charter of 1652 (apud Rymer, tom. 13, pag. 53, col. 1). The uncompounded Low Latin verbs liberare, liberare, and liberare, were all used in the sense of the French liberer.

186. Lines 19, 20:
Give notice to such men of SORT and suit
As are to meet him.

This means men of rank (sort: compare Much Ado, l. 1, 7, and note 3), and such as owed attendance to the prince as their liege lord (compare the term of feudal law: suit and service).

187. Line 28: How might she TONGUE me!—Compare Cymbeline, v. 4. 146, 147:
'T is still a dream, or else such stuff as madmen
Tongue and brain not.

188. Line 29: For my authority bears of a credent bulk.—So the first three Ft.; F. 4. changes of to of. Schmidt explains the phrase of a credent bulk, as "weight of credit."

ACT IV. SCENE 5.

189. Line 5: Though sometimes you do BLEND from this to that.—Compare Winter's Tale, i. 2. 333: "Could man so blend?" and Troilus and Cressida, ii. 2. 67, 68:
there can be no evasion
To blend from this, and to stand firm by honour.

190. Line 6: Flavius' house.—Ft have Flavius'. The emendation is Bowe's.

191. Line 8: To VALENTIUS, Rowland, and to CRASSUS.—Ft. Valencius. The reading in the text is adopted by the Cambridge editors, though in the Globe edition they read, with Capell, Valentius.

192. Line 9: the trumpeters; i.e. the trumpeters, as in Henry V. iv. 2. 61:
I will the banner from a trumpet take.

Shakespeare uses the form trumpeter as well, but four times only against five.

ACT IV. SCENE 6.

193. Line 13: The generous and gravest citizens.—The ellipses here is a common one in Elizabethan English. Ben Jonson has "The soft and sweetest music;" and see the other quotations in Abbott's Shakespearean Grammar, par. 366.

194. Line 14: Kent.—This word is used again in Winter's Tale, iv. 3. 133:
And merrily Kent the stile-a;
and, as a noun, in Hamlet, iii. 3. 88:
Up, sword, and know thou a more horrid Kent.
See note on the latter passage.

226

ACT V. SCENE 1.

195. Line 20: VAIL your regard.—Compare Venus and Adonis, 668: "Sheward her eyelida." Boyer (French Dictionary) has "To vail one's Bonnet, (to pull off one's Hat) Se découvrir, lever son Chapeau à quelqu'un."

196. Lines 73, 74:
One Lucio
As then the messenger.

As is frequently joined to expressions of time in Shakespeare. Compare Tempest, i. 2. 70: "as at that time;" and Romeo and Juliet, v. 3. 247:
That he should hither come as this dark night.

197. Line 168: Whensoever he's CONVENED.—Compare, for summon, is used also in Coriolanus, ii. 2. 58, 59:
We are convened.

Upon a pleasing treaty;
and in Henry VIII. v. 1. 50-52:
he hath commanded...
He be convened.

It is used in a somewhat different sense in Twelfth Night, v. 1. 391.

198. Line 169: First, let her show her face.—This is the correction found in F. 2 of the evident error in F. 1. "your face."

199. Line 206: This is a strange ABUSE.—Abuse here means deception, as in Hamlet, iv. 7. 51:
Or is it some abuse, and no such thing?

and Macbeth, iii. 4. 145, 143:
My strange and self-abuse
Is the initiate fear that wants hard use.

200. Line 218: garden-house.—Malone compares The London Prodigal, 1606, v. 1: "If you have any friend, or garden-house where you may employ a poor gentleman as your friend, I am yours to command in all secret service" (Taaunshitz ed. p. 230). Reed refers to, but does not quote the following passage from Stubbes, Anatomy of Abuses, 1597: "In the Feebles and Suburbs of the Cities the have gardens, either palled, or walled round about very high, with their Harbers and Bowers fit for the purpose" [i.e. for assignations]—New Shak. Soc. Reprint, p. 88.

201. Line 219: her promised PROPORTIONS.—Compare Two Gent. of Verona, ii. 3. 3: "I have receiv'd my proportion," i.e. my portion or allotment. The word is also used in the same sense in the prose part of Perciles, iv. 2. 29.

202. Line 226: These poor INFORMAL women.—This is Shakespeare's only use of the word informal; but he uses formal in the sense of same, in Comedy of Errors, v. 1. 106:
To make of him a formal man again, i.e. to bring him back to his senses; and in much the same sense in Twelfth Night, ii. 5. 128: "this is evident to any formal capacity."

203. Line 242: COMPACT with her that's gone; i.e. leagued in conspiracy. The only other instance of this sense of the word in Shakespeare is in a doubtful passage in Lear, ii. 2. 125, 126, where the Ft. read:
NOTES TO MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

ACT V. Scene 1.

When he compact, and flattering his displeasure, Trips me behind.

The Qū. reading is conjunct, which is perhaps preferable.

204. Line 383: Cucullus non factit monachum. —This proverb seems to have been a favourite with Shakespeare. He has quoted it in the Latin twice (here and in Twelfth Night, i. 5. 62), and given three translations of it; literally, in Henry VIII. iii. 1. 23: "All hoods make not monks;" and freely here ("honest in nothing but in his clothes") and in Twelfth Night ("that's as much to say as, I wear not motley in my brain."). The proverb is quoted in Pronos and Cassandra, pt. i. iii. 6:

A boile Hoode makes not a Friar devout.

205. Line 391: women are LIGHT at midnight. —The obvious quibble on light is one of Shakespeare’s favourite puns. Compare Merchant of Venice, v. l. 119, 120:

Let me give light, but let me not be light:
For a wife’s wise doth make a heavy husband.

206. Lines 392, 393:

Where I have seen corruption boil and bubble
Till it o’er-run the stew.

Stevens compares Macbeth, iv. l. 19:

Like a hell-broth boil and bubble.

Stew may mean here a stew-pan, or its contents. The metaphor is taken of course from the kitchen, with an afterthought perhaps of the stews.

207. Lines 323–324:

the strong statutes
Stand like the forfeits in a barber’s shop,
As much in mock as mark.

"These shops," says Nares, "were places of great resort, for passing away time in an idle manner. By way of enforcing some kind of regularity, and perhaps at least as much to promote drinking, certain laws were usually hung up, the transgression of which was to be punished by specific forfeitures. It is not to be wondered, that laws of that nature were so often laughed at as obeyed."

[In my copy of F. 4, which has some annotations in MS, I find the following note on this passage: "It is a custom in the shops of all mechanics to make it a forfeiture for any stranger to use or take up the tools of their trade. In a barber’s shop especially, when heretofore barbers practis’d the under parts of surgery their instruments being of a nice kind, and their shops generally full of Idle people " [a written list was displayed!] "showing what particular forfeiture was required for meddling." This note is much to the same purpose as Warburton’s in the Var. Ed. ad locum. —F. A. M.]

208. Line 346: Hark, how the villain would close now. —Compare Two Gent. of Verona, ii. 6. 18: "after they dow’d in earnest, they parted very fairly in jest;" and Troilus and Cressida, iii. 2. 61: "an’t were dark, you’d close sooner;" where close is used, as here, in the sense of coming to an agreement. It is oftener followed by with, e.g. Winter’s Tale, iv. 4. 520: "close with him, give him gold."

209. Line 353: Away with those giglotes too.—Giglot

1 There is a hiatus here in the MS.

(spa) giglot (in F.) is used as an adjective (meaning, as here, wanton) in I. Henry VI. iv. 7. 41: "a giglot wenche;" and Cymbeline, iii. 1. 31: "O giglot fortune!"

210. Line 358: Show your sheepe-biting face, and be hanged an hour! —On sheep-biting, see note on sheep-biter in Twelfth Night, ii. 5. 6 (note 193). "Be hanged an hour" seems to have been something of a colloquialism. An hour appears to mean nothing in particular, but to be intended to emphasize the expression in which it occurs.

Gifford has a long note on the subject in his edition of Ben Jonson (vol. iv. pp. 421, 423), suggested by a passage in The Alchemist, v. 1:

like unto a man

That had been strangled an hour and could not speak.

"... Strangled an hour, &c. (though Lovewit perversely catches at the literal sense to perplex his informant) has no reference to duration of time, but means simply suffocated, and therefore, unable to utter articulate sounds. A similar mode of expression occurs in Measure for Measure: 'Shew your sheep-biting face, and be hanged an hour!'

Gifford then refers to the following passage in Bartholomew Fair, ii. 1:

Leave the bottle behind you, and be currant awhile!

In his note on that passage he refers to the passage in As You Like It, i. 1. 88:

Marry, sir, be better employed, and be naught awhile!

... and then continues as follows:

"It is not easy to ascertain the origin of this colloquial vulgarity; but that the explanation of Warburton (which Steevens is pleased to call ‘far-fetched’) is as correct as it is obvious, may be proved by witnesses more than my pack will hold. It will be sufficient to call two or three:

"The first shall be our poet:

Peace and be naught! I think the woman’s frantic.

—Tale of a Tub.

... plain boy’s play

More manly would become him.

Lady. You would have him

Do worse then, would you, and be naught, you owlet!

—New Academy.

"Again:

Come away, and be naught a while!

—Storie of Kyng Darius.

"Again:

Nay, sister, if I stir a foot, hang me; you shall come together of yourselves, and be naught!

—Green’s Ty Quoque.

"Again:

What, piper, ha! be hanged awhile!

—Old Madrigal.

"And, lastly:

Get you both in, and be naught awhile!

—Sweetnam.

... ... ...

"It is too much, perhaps, to say that the words ‘an hour,’ ‘a while,’ are pure expletives; but it is sufficiently apparent that they have no perceptible influence on the exclamations to which they are subjoined. To conclude, ‘be naught, hanged, currst,’ &c. with or without an hour, a while, wherever found, bear invariably one and the same meaning; they are, in short, pithy and familiar malapropisms, and cannot be better rendered than in the words of Warburton—a plague, or a mischief on you!"
NOTES TO MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

ACT V. Scene 1.

(Jonson's Works, vol. iv. pp. 421, 422.)

211. Line 383: which consummate.—Consummate is used again as a participle (= being consummated) in Much Ado, iii. 2. 2.

212. Line 387: ADVERTISING and holy to your business.

—Compare l. 1. 42 above:

To one that can my part in him advertise.

213. Lines 390-392:

That I, your vessel, have employ'd and pain'd
Your own sovereignty!

This is the only instance in Shakespeare of the verb to pain being used in the sense of putting to trouble or labour; but painful is not infrequently used with the meaning of laborious, as in Tempest, iii. 1. 1: "some sports are painful;" and painfully is twice used in the sense of laboriously: in Love's Labour's Lost, i. 1. 74: "painfully to pore upon a book;" and in King John, ii. 1. 223, 224:

Who painfully with much expedient march
Have brought a counter-check.

214. Line 397: Make rash remonstrance of my hidden power.—This is the only example of the word remonstrance in Shakespeare; here it evidently means demonstration, manifestation. Dyce cites from Arrowsmith's Shakespeare's Editors and Commentators, p. 28, the following quotations: Barnabe Barnes, The Divil's Charter, 1607, l. 4, sig. B. 3:

Your sonne shall make remonstrance of his valour;

W. Barclay, The Lost Lady, 1639, p. 4:

with all remonstrances

Of love, &c.

Taylor, Sermons, 1653, iv. p. 102, sermon 13, part 2: "manifested in such visible remonstrances;" Smith, Posthumous Sermons, 1744: "to make remonstrance and declaration of what he thinks" (vol. ii. p. 78, sermon 8).

215. Line 405: Whose salt imagination.—Compare Othello, ii. 1. 244: "the better compassing of his salt and most hidden loose affection."

216. Line 416: Measure still for measure.—Measure for measure, in the sense of "like for like," seems to have been a common phrase. It is used in III. Henry VI. ii. 6. 54:

Measure for measure must be answered;

and Steevens cites the same phrase from A Warning for Fair Women, 1599 (lines 986, 990):

Then trial now remains, as shall conclude,

Measure for measure, and lost blood for blood.

217. Line 428: Although by consummation they are ours.

—So F. 1; F. 2 reads consummation, which has been followed by all the editors. The editors of the Old-Spelling Shakspere have been the first to explain the meaning of the word consummation, and to restore it to its place in the text. I give the substance of their note, as it appears, in a slightly condensed form, in the New Shakspere Society's Transactions, 1889-90, part iii. pp. 116*-117*; "Although the substantive consummation, conviction, was unknown, there were examples of the post-classical use of the vb. con-futate, to convict. In Ammianus Marcellinus, lib. xxvi. cap. 3, and the Theodosian Code, lib. xi. tit. viii. respectively, the past participles confutatus and confutata occur, the context showing that in both cases they bear the meaning of convicted.

"Moreover, as Angelo's crime was murder, not treason, conviction would be the proper English term for expressing the antecedent cause of his forfeiture. 'Lands are forfeited upon attainer, and not before; goods and chattels are forfeited by conviction' (Blackstone's Commentaries, iv. 387, ed. 1873).

"There was another possible meaning for consummation. The Catholic Commentaries, p. 263, has: 'to Ouer come; confundere, fundere, consumtere, debellare, &c. Now apply this definition metaphorically to Angelo's circumstances, and it might be said that he had been vanquished in single combat with his accuser Isabella. We, having no trial by battle, by duel of accuser and accused, which was frequent in early days, forget that overcoming your adversary was in fact convicting him of the crime of which you accused him, or he you. The addition of the meaning 'convict' to consumtare, overcome, would follow as a matter of course."

218. Line 455: His act did not o'er take his bad intent

—Malone compares the very closely parallel passage in Macbeth, iv. 1. 145, 146:

The sightly purpose never is o'er took
Unless the deed go with it.

219. Lines 495-496:

If he be like your brother, for his sake
Is he pardoned,—[Claudio discovers himself to Isabella—she rushes into his arms, and then kneels to Angelo, and for your lovely sake;

Give me your hand, [raising her] and say you will be mine,

He is my brother too: [taking Claudio's hand] but fitter time for that.

In F. 1 the last three lines stand thus (without any stage-direction):

Is he pardoned and for your loue sake
Give me your hand, and say you will be mine,

He is my brother too: But fitter time for that.

F. 4 has a comma after pardoned and a semicolon after mine.

The awkwardness of the rhythm of line 496 is very manifest; and various emendations have been attempted. Hamner reads He's pardoned and rearranges the next two lines thus:

Give me your hand, say you'll be mine, and he's

My brother too.

All the difficulty as to rhythm would be got over if we could accentuate pardoned on the second syllable; but I can find no instance of pardon, either verb or substantive, being so accentuated. There is, however, no reason why it should not be,—for it was originally spelt pardoun; and condone, the only other similar verb derived from the Latin done, is always accentuated on the last syllable; the reason being because, in that case, the e mute is retained at the end of the word. Capell proposed: "Is he too pardoun'd?" to which Dyce very justly objects because of the too in the next line; and prints, apparently on his own responsibility, "Then is he pardoned." It is easy to supply an extra syllable to make the line more rhythmical; I would suggest So rather than Then, but I should prefer to read "He is pardoned," letting the pause supply the place of the next syllable, but that the author seems to have wished to avoid the recurrence of He is at the beginning of two lines so close together. The dramatic force of the passage requires that the He in line 496 and the you in line 498 should be slightly accentuated.
NOTES TO MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

ACT V. Scene 1.

The first important point to be considered is when does Isabella recognise Claudio? As the text stands, without any stage-direction, it would appear that Isabella took no notice whatever of her brother when she finds he is alive; but, as has been pointed out by other commentators, Shakespeare wrote for the stage, and this recognition of Claudio could easily take place in action without any spoken words. In the acting version it takes place after the words Is he pardoned, and Isabella is made to say O, my dear brother! The next two and a half lines of the Duke's speech are omitted, and he resumes

By this Lord Angelo perceives he's safe.

This, of course, gets rid of all difficulty, but to take such liberties with the text here is scarcely necessary. As the passage is arranged in our text, we imagine that Claudio—who is on the right side of the stage by the side of the Provost—having thrown off his disguise, turns round to Isabella at the word pardon'd; she interrupts the Duke by rushing across him to embrace her brother; and then, remembering herself, kneels to express her respectful gratitude. The Duke continues his interrupted sentence, and raises her from her knees, placing her on the left side of him. He then speaks the next line (467) holding her hand in his; and, at the words He is my brother too, turns to Claudio, giving him his hand as a confirmation of his pardon. The arrangement of the punctuation, adopted in our text, slightly alters the sense of the passage as printed by most modern editors; the words and for your lovely sake meaning that Claudio has been pardoned—as undoubtedly he was—chiefly for Isabella's sake. But, as the passage is usually punctuated, these words would mean that for Isabella's lovely sake, if she gave the Duke her hand, then he would consider Claudio his brother; but surely, in that case, the words for your lovely sake are redundant; for what the Duke means to say is that, if Isabella will marry him, he will look upon Claudio as his brother. In any case the last sentence must be elliptical in its construction, being equivalent to "You will give me your hand (in marriage), then he is my brother too."—F. A. M.

220. Line 507: Wherin have I so deserve of you?—So the Ft., which Pope took upon himself to "correct" as follows:

Wherein have I deserved of you?

a reading which Dyce says "at least restores the metre." I cannot conceive how any one (except Pope) could think the change an improvement metrically.

221. Line 510: I spoke it but ACCORDING TO THE TRIUM.

—Compare Lucio's jaunty words to Pompey, iii. 2. 68: "Is the world as it was, man? Which is the way? Is it sad, and few words? or how? The trick of it?"

222. Line 518: If any woman's wrong'd by this loved fellow.—F. reads woman. The correction is due to Hamer, and is generally adopted. The Cambridge editors read Is any woman.

223. Line 538: Marrying a punk, my lord, is pressing to death, shipp'ring and hang'ing.—There is a reference here to that extraordinary freak of British law, the peine forte et dure, alluded to in Much Ado, iii. 1. 75, 76: "she would . . . press me to death with wit;" Richard II. iii. 4. 72:

O, I am press'd to death through want of speaking:

and Trollop, ii. 2. 218: "press it to death." On this punishment see note 178 on Much Ado. It is suggested in a letter in the Athenaeum of Feb. 23, 1884, signed H. C. Coote, that Shakespeare had also in mind an Italian law, in force during his lifetime in the States of the Church, by which a criminal could be released from the penalty of his crime on marrying a courtesan. In Prof. Fabio Gori's Archivio Storico, Artistico, Archeologico, e Letterario (Spoleto, Tp. Bassani), vol. iii. pp. 220, 221, is given, says Mr. Coote, "the petition of a Senese courtesan named Caterina de Geronimo, living at Rome, to the governor of the city. It has been extracted from the public records of Rome, and may therefore be fully relied upon for truth and authenticity. This petition (supplied), which is dated the 9th of February, 1611, sets forth that the lady has followed her profession for these twenty years ('sono 20 anni che sta in peccato') and now wishes to reform ('Hora si trova in volontà et [sic] fermo proposito di levare di peccato, et [sic] viver da donna bene et [sic] cristianamente'). She then goes on to state that Nicolò de Rubeli (i.e. de Rossi) di Assisi, alias Gattarelli, who has been accused, though quite unjustly, of being a cheat at cards ('falso giolatore'), he never having had such things as cards or dice in his possession, has been, through the persecution of his enemies, condemned to exile from Rome and the States of the Church. The poor petitioner ('povera oratrice') has put up the banns between herself and the said Nicolò in the church of S. Lorenzo in Lucina, and she implores his excellency the governor to remit to Nicolò his said exile, inasmuch as she wishes to relieve her from sin, which besides, she adds, will be a pious work. The governor has noted upon the memorial 'Concedatur.' Whatever may have been the value of the poor woman's opinion of her friend Nicolò, there can be no doubt that she has represented the criminal law of the States of the Church with perfect accuracy, and that law was probably not confined to the Papal dominions. Some wandering Englishman had doubtless heard of it, and told the poet, who, as we know, thirsted after all sorts of knowledge, and he afterwards applied it, as we have seen, to heighten the local colour of his play."

224. Line 545: What's yet behind, That's meet you all should know.—F. 1 reads that, by an obvious misprint; corrected in F. 2.

225. Line 558.—In the acting edition the following passage (marked as a quotation) is substituted for the remaining eight lines of the Duke's speech, and the play concludes:

For thee, sweet saint—if for a brother sav'd.
From that most holy shrine thou went devote to,
ACT V. Scene I.

NOTES TO MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

Thou design to spare some portion toth, ev y thof
Thy Duke, thy friar, tempest thee from thy vow:
[Intel to falling on her knees, the Duke presents her—blesses her hand, and proceeds with his speech.

In its right orb let thy true spirit shine,
Blessing both prince and people—thus we'll reign,
Rich in the possession of their hearts, and, warn'd
By the abuse of delegated trust,
Engrave this royal maxim on the mind,
To rule ourselves before we rule mankind.

Whence these lines come from I cannot discover. They certainly do not come from Gildon's version, which ends with a speech after "The last musick," the concluding couplet of the Duke being:

Imperial Justice, Kings should mind alone

For that 'tis still perpetuates a throne.

On referring to Bell's edition, 1774, which is printed from

---

WORDS OCCURRING ONLY IN MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

Note.—The addition of sub., adj., verb, adv. in brackets immediately after a word indicates that the word is used as a substantive, adjective, verb, or advverb only in the passage or passages cited.

The compound words marked with an asterisk (*) are printed as two separate words in F. 1.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Act S. Line</th>
<th>Act S. Line</th>
<th>Act S. Line</th>
<th>Act S. Line</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>According i.</td>
<td>v. 1 487</td>
<td>Belocked.......</td>
<td>v. 1 210</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Adoptedly i.</td>
<td>v. 4 47</td>
<td>Belongings i.</td>
<td>1 90</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Advisings (sub.) ill.</td>
<td>1 305</td>
<td>Billieta i.</td>
<td>1 68</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Affanced i.</td>
<td>v. 1 282</td>
<td>Birch i.</td>
<td>1 34</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bringerbrings forth ill.</td>
<td>1 106</td>
<td>Breather i.</td>
<td>1 31</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>All-building i.</td>
<td>v. 1 94</td>
<td>Brings-births forth ill.</td>
<td>1 156</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>All-ballon i.</td>
<td>1 150</td>
<td>Cardinally ill.</td>
<td>1 81</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Approbation i.</td>
<td>v. 1 158</td>
<td>Carnally v.</td>
<td>1 214</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Attempt i.</td>
<td>v. 1 70</td>
<td>Character i. v.</td>
<td>1 56</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Attorney i.</td>
<td>v. 1 390</td>
<td>China i.</td>
<td>1 97</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Audible i.</td>
<td>v. 1 418</td>
<td>Ciummured i.</td>
<td>v. 1 38</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Austereness i.</td>
<td>v. 4 156</td>
<td>Clock-dish ill.</td>
<td>1 136</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ayes i.</td>
<td>1 71</td>
<td>Complement i.</td>
<td>1 39</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Backed i.</td>
<td>v. 1 29</td>
<td>Commandments i.</td>
<td>2 7 12</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Back-wounding ill.</td>
<td>2 198</td>
<td>Conciliably i.</td>
<td>v. 1 98</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Baldpate v.</td>
<td>1 239</td>
<td>Confassad i.</td>
<td>v. 1 533</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bald-pated v.</td>
<td>1 560</td>
<td>Confused i.</td>
<td>v. 1 232</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bane i.</td>
<td>1 153</td>
<td>Confluations i.</td>
<td>v. 1 429</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bawd-born ill.</td>
<td>3 2 75</td>
<td>Conserves i. ill.</td>
<td>1 86</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bear i.</td>
<td>1 256</td>
<td>Contracting (sub.) ill.</td>
<td>2 206</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cleric i.</td>
<td>v. 1 47</td>
<td>Counsellors i.</td>
<td>1 11</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cler manslaughter</td>
<td>1 2 111</td>
<td>Custom-shrunk i.</td>
<td>1 38</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

15 — a speaker; a human being, in three other passages.
18 — consistency; occurs in slightly different sense in Cymbeline, ii. 3. 129; Act. and Gen. v. 2. 36.
19 — occasioned by something previous.
20 — parodied; used in various other senses elsewhere.
21 — martial; used elsewhere in other senses.
22 a. All-balloned era.
23 In transitive and transitive.
24 — to preserve; in culinary sense in Othello, ill. 4. 75.
25 — lawyers; used elsewhere —advisers.

---

240
WORDS PECULIAR TO MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

Active Sc. Line | Act So. Line
--- | ---
Mealed ....... iv. 2 80 | Prioresse ....... i. 4 11
Mercer ....... iv. 3 11 | Procures ....... III. 2 58
Misreport ....... v. 1 148 | Prolixious ....... ii. 4 162
Moated ....... iii. 1 277 | Promesse-breach v. 1 410
Morality ....... i. 2 138 | *Promise-keeping i. 1 77
Mother ....... i. 4 88 | Prompture ....... ii. 4 178
Mouth * (verb) ....... iii. 2 194 | Propagation ....... i. 2 154
*New-conceived ii. 2 96 | Provincial * ....... v. 1 218
Nicety ....... ii. 4 163 | Provost ....... i. 2 117, etc.
Notedly ....... v. 1 336 | Rasure ....... v. 1 13
Offenseful ....... ii. 3 28 | Ready (money) iv. 3 8
*Outward-sainted iii. 1 89 | Rebaste ....... i. 4 60
Over-read ....... iv. 2 212 | Refelied ....... v. 1 94
Overweigh ....... ii. 4 157 | Remissness ....... ii. 2 99
*Parcel-bawd ii. 1 63 | Remonstrance ....... v. 1 397
Pardonier ....... iv. 2 112 | Renoncement ....... i. 4 35
Passes * ....... i. 3 38 | Rent ....... ii. 1 254
Reproach * (verb) ....... v. 1 429 | Reprobate (sub.) iv. 3 78
Penitently ....... iv. 2 147 | Resemblance * ....... iv. 2 203
Perdurable ....... iii. 1 115 | School-maids ....... i. 4 47
Permissive ....... i. 3 38 | Seedness ....... i. 4 42
Pick-lock ....... iii. 2 18 | Seemers ....... i. 3 54
Filled ....... i. 2 95 | Self-offences ....... iii. 2 290
Planched ....... iv. 1 30 | Sheep-biting ....... v. 1 583
Plausible ....... iii. 1 254 | ---
Pose (verb) ....... ii. 4 51 | ---
Pre-contract ....... iv. 1 72 | ---
Prandie ....... iii. 1 94, 97 | ---

10 = a seat; used in other senses elsewhere.
11 = to supply; = to benefit, used frequently elsewhere.
12 See note 202. Used three times in a brothel.
13 Used intransitively; used transitively elsewhere.
14 Of fruit.
15 Of a pen; used elsewhere in many senses.
16 = to speak of; in Cymb. v. 4.
17 = to speak.

241

WORDS PECULIAR TO MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

Active Sc. Line | Act So. Line
--- | ---
Shekels ....... ii. 2 149 | Touse ....... v. 1 313
Shy * (ill.) ....... iii. 2 138 | Treasonable ....... v. 1 545
Slyness ....... iv. 2 101 | *True-meant .... i. 4 55
Slyer ....... v. 1 100 | Tun-dish ....... iii. 2 182
Sliding (emb.) ....... ii. 4 115 | Unbelieved .... v. 1 119
South-broth ....... i. 4 68 | Uncleanliness .... ii. 1 83
Spawned ....... iii. 2 114 | Uncleanness * .... ii. 2 54
Splay ....... ii. 1 243 | Unascended .... ii. 2 171
Starkly ....... iv. 2 70 | Unassemblies .... iv. 4 23
Stead (up) ....... iii. 2 260 | Unashamed .... iii. 2 63
Stiff ....... ii. 4 158 | Unashing .... iv. 2 92
Stinking ....... iii. 2 28 | Unasked .... iii. 2 155
Stones * ....... ii. 1 110 | Unascertained .... ii. 4 155
Straitness ....... iii. 2 258 | Unascertained .... ii. 4 9
Stricture ....... i. 3 12 | Unascertained .... ii. 4 156
Stroke * ....... iv. 2 83 | Unascertained .... ii. 4 156
Sun-rise ....... ii. 2 153 | Unascertained .... ii. 4 156
Taphouse ....... ii. 1 220 | Unascertained .... ii. 4 156
Temporary ....... v. 1 145 | Unascertained .... ii. 4 9
Tested ....... ii. 2 149 | Unascertained .... ii. 4 156
Testimonied ....... iii. 2 152 | Unascertained .... ii. 4 156
Thick-ribbed ....... iii. 1 123 | Unascertained .... ii. 4 156
Tick-tack ....... i. 2 196 | Unascertained .... ii. 4 156
Tongue * (verb) ....... iv. 4 28 | Unascertained .... ii. 4 156

241

VOL. V.

1 Applied to an abbot or prioresse.
2 Mouth with, i.e. exchange kisses on the mouth with; the verb is used in other senses elsewhere.
3 = permission.
4 = proceedings. Used in Sonn. c.ii. 11 in singular, perhaps in same sense.

---

17 Lucr. 192.
18 Sonn. lxvii. 19.
TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

NOTES AND INTRODUCTION

BY

A. WILSON VERITY.
DRAMATIS PERSONÆ

PRIAM, King of Troy.
HECTOR, his sons.
TROILOS, PARIS,
DEIPHOBUS, HELENUS,
MARGARELIN, a bastard son of Priam.
ÆNEAS, ANTENOR, Trojan commanders.
CALCHAS, a Trojan priest, taking part with the Greeks.
PANDARUS, uncle to Cressida.
AGAMEMNON, the Grecian general.
MENELAUS, his brother.
ACHILLES, AJAX,
ULYSSES, NESTOR,
DIOMEDES, PATROCLUS,
Grecian commanders.

Thersites, a deformed and scurrilous Grecian.
ALEXANDER, servant to Cressida.
Servant to Troilus.
Servant to Paris.
Servant to Diomedes.

HELEN, wife to Menelaus.
ANDROMACHE, wife to Hector.
CASSANDRA, daughter of Priam; a prophetess.
CRESSIDA, daughter of Calchas.

Trojan and Greek Soldiers, and Attendants.

SCENE—TROY, and the Grecian camp before it.

HISTORIC PERIOD: the Trojan war.

TIME OF ACTION.

Mr. Daniel gives the following time analysis—four days:

Day 1: Act I. Scenes 1 and 2.—Interval; the truce.
Day 2: Act I. Scene 3; Act II. and Act III.
Day 3: Act IV., Act V. Scene 1, and part of Scene 2.
Day 4: Act V., latter part of Scene 2, and the rest of the play.
TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

INTRODUCTION.

LITERARY HISTORY.

"This," says Dr. Furnivall, "is the most difficult of all Shakspere's plays to deal with." I think we may accept Dr. Furnivall's statement of the case. The history of Troilus and Cressida is perplexed and confusing to an extraordinary degree; it has long been the crux of commentators, the sphinx-like problem to which the wise man will modestly say, "Davus sum, non Ædipus." The date of the composition of the play; its relation to previous works upon the same subject; the circumstances attendant on its publication, both in the Quarto form of 1609 and later in the First Folio; the metrical peculiarities; the clear traces of irregular and composite workmanship; the purpose of the piece, satiric, didactic, ironical, or what not, the idea, that is, that should run throughout, informing the parts with something of the continuity of an organic whole; all these are points upon which much has been conjectured and more written, and which, in spite of, or perhaps because of, the efforts of successive generations of commentators, remain as dark and bewildering as ever. Hence a complete theory which shall untie all the hard knots, must not be looked for. I shall content myself for the moment with a close statement of the facts, and later on there will be something to say as to the conclusions which may be drawn from the conflicting evidence. First, then, as to Shakespeare's choice of a subject.

The Troy legend was the favourite theme, the tale par excellence, of medieval romance writers; no other cycle of stories could in any way compete with it in point of widespread diffusion and popularity. Almost every European country had its version of the fall of Troy, and not a few countries claimed for themselves a Trojan origin. Thus the Welsh could trace their descent to Æneas with unimpeachable certainty, and London was regularly described as Troynovant. Of these early romances that of Benoit de Sainte-More, the so-called Roman de Troyes, is the first; it dates from somewhere between 1175 and 1185. A century later a translation of it into Latin was made by Guido de Colonna of Messina, whose Historia Destructionis Troiae was, according to his own account, completed in 1287. This version of Guido's was made the basis of various other versions, in Italian, Spanish, High and Low German, Dutch, &c., and amongst these the earliest that English literature can show is the long alliterative romance entitled The Gest Hystoriale of the Destruction of Troy; it was printed some years ago (1869 and 1874) for the Early English Text Society, and should probably be assigned to the fourteenth century. After the anonymous author of the Gest Hystoriale came Chaucer, whose Troylus and Chryseide is based very largely on Boccaccio's Filostrato. Chaucer indeed expressed his obligations to a certain Lollius, who seems to have been decidedly mythical; in fact, critics generally agree that a misunderstanding of Horace's lines—

Trojani belli scriptorem, maxime Lolli,
Dum tu declamas Rome Prænestæ regi—
—Ep. i. 2. 1.

was the sole basis of the poet's reference to this shadowy authority.

Besides Boccaccio, Chaucer probably used Benott and other writers, possibly Guido, while much no doubt was due to his own invention. About 1460 Lydgate followed with his well-known Troy-Booke, and almost simultaneously appeared the Recueil des Histoires de Troyes by Raoul Le Fèvre; the latter speedily passed into England under the title of the Recuyell of the historyes of Troye, translated and drawen out of frenshe into English by W Caxton, 1471. This brings us to the end of the fifteenth century. From this bare résumée we see that the story of the siege and fall of Troy had penetrated into England as into almost every other European country. The dramatist, therefore, who wanted a subject had plenty of material at hand, and in this mass of material there was one episode—the story of Troilus and Cressida (for which Homer and the classical writers have no counterpart, the legend being one of the embellishments added to the original by Benott)—that appealed to writers with a special fascination. Chaucer, as we have seen, had made it the theme of his story, and Chaucer's poem seems to have been extremely popular. So Peele in his Tale of Troy writes:
TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

But leave I here of Troilus to say,
Whose passions for the ranging Cressida,
Read as fair England's Chaucer doth unfold,
Would tears exhale from eyes of iron mould.

Now at the beginning of the sixteenth century (1515), amongst the Christmas entertainments presented before Henry VIII. at Eltham, was a "Comedy" upon "the story of Troylus and Pandor." Unfortunately no account of the entertainment survives—it may have been merely a pageant (Ward, vol i. p. 433); but the reference is interesting as serving to show that the Troilus and Cressida tale was getting more and more differentiated from the general mass of incidents associated with the Trojan war. Possibly there were other interludes and crude dramatic treatments of the subject, though none such survive; in the same way song writers may have made use of it. Nothing definite, however, can be said of the interval from 1515 to 1555; but in the latter year a "ballett intituled the history of Troylus, whoses throtees (Warton queried troth) hath well bene tried" was entered upon the register of the Stationers' Company. 1 Again, in 1581 we find notice of another "proper ballad, dialogue-wise, betwene Troylus and Cressida;" 2 and in the Marriage of Wit and Wisdom 3 Mr. Halliwell-Phillipps gives yet one more poem (from a MS. in the Ashmolean Museum) dealing with the same theme. The story, therefore, was becoming popular with writers of the period, and it seemed natural that some dramatist should essay to represent on the stage this old-world tale of man's love and woman's faithlessness; and, as a matter of fact, if we turn to that storehouse of information upon things dramatic, Henslowe's Diary, we find that "Mr. Dickers and hary Cheattell" had been commissioned by the manager to write a play on "Troyees and creasseday." "Dickers and hary Cheattell" stand in Henslowe's somewhat fanciful orthography for Dekker and Henry Chettle; the date under which the entry occurs is April 7, 1599. Nine days later the play is again referred to in the Diary, and then in the next month we have the following: "Lent unto Mr. Dickers and Mr. Chettell, the 26 of Maye, 1599, in earnest of a Booke called the tragedie of Agamemnone, the some (=sum) of . . ." This title, according to Collier, is interlined over the words "Troylus and cressida;" i.e. the name of the drama upon which Dekker and his friend were collaborating had been changed, why, we know not. The point should be noted. Still keeping to our dryadust catalogue we must chronicle two more entries. Under date February 7th, 1603, the register of the Stationers' Company has this notice: "Entred for his (Master Robertes') copie in full court holden this day to print when he hath gotten sufficient authority for yt, The booke of 'Troilus and Cresseda,' as yt is actet by my Lord Chamberlen's men." 4 Six years later there is a fresh entry: on January 28, 1609, Richard Bonion and Henry Walleyes registered "a booke called the history of Troylus and Cressida." 5 This last, we may be quite sure, was Shakespeare's play. In the same year it was published, two editions being printed; one edition—and I think Mr. Stokes 6 has satisfactorily shown, chiefly upon technical grounds of pagination and so forth,

---

1 Edited by Collier for the Old Shakespeare Society, vol. i. p. 121.
2 Ibid. vol. ii. p. 146.
3 Old Shakespeare Society Publications.
4 Taken from Arber's Transcript of the Registers, vol. iii. p. 91 b.
5 Ibid. p. 178 b.
6 Introduction to Quarto-Facsimile.
INTRODUCTION.

that it was the second issue—appeared with the following remarkable and almost unique preface:—

“A never Writer to an ever Reader.

Newes.

Eternall reader, you have here a new play, never stale’d with the stage, never clapper-claw’d with the palmes of the vulgar, and yet passing full of the palme comical! for it is a birth of your braine, that never undertooke any thing commical, vainely; and were but the vaine names of commodities chang’d for the titles of commodities, or of plays for pleas; you should see all those grand censors, that now stile them such vanities, flock to them for the maine grace of their gravities; especially this authors comedies, that are so fram’d to the life, that they serve for the most common commentaries of all the actions of our lives, shewing such a dexterity and power of witte, that the most displeased with plays, are pleased with his comedies. And all such dull and heavy-witted worildings, as were never capable of the witte of a comedie, comming by report of them to his representations, have found that witte there, that they never found in them-selves, and have parted better-witted then they came: feeling an edge of witte set upon them, more then ever they dreamd they had braine to grind it on. So much and such savord salt of witte is in his comedies, that they seeme (for their height of pleasure) to be borne in the sea that brought forth Venus. Amongst all there is none mor witty than this: and had I time I would comment upon it, though I know it needs not, (for so much as will make you thinke your tasterne well bestow’d) but for so much worth, as even poore I know to be stuff in it. It deserves such a labour, as well as the best comedy in Terence or Plautus. And beleevve this, that when hee is gone, and his comedies out of sale, you will scramble for them, and set up a new English inquisition. Take this for a warning, and at the perill of your pleasures losse, and judgements, refuse not, nor like this the lesse, for not being sullied with the smoky breath of the multitude; but thanke fortune for the scape it hath made amongst you: since by the grand possessors wills I believe you should have prayd for them (?it) rather then beene prayd. And so I leave all such to bee prayd for (for the states of their wits healths) that will not praise it. Vale.”

I shall return to this preface again. There is one more point in the history of the publication of the play to be noticed before we can gather up the threads and give the general impression derived from study of the evidence. The First Folio of 1623 had, as all students know, a list of the plays at the beginning, arranged under the different heads of Comedies, Histories, and Tragedies. Troilus and Cressida is omitted from this list. It is printed in the middle of the volume, between Henry VIII. and Coriolanus, i.e. between the last of the Histories and the first of the Tragedies; and practically it is unpaged. From these facts it has been conjectured that the insertion of the play in the Folio was an afterthought upon the part of the editors, Heminge and Condell. Collier thinks that the printing of the drama had been intrusted to some other publisher: hence the mistake. Really it seems most probable that the editors did not know how to class the play, and eventually compromised the matter by leaving it altogether out of the list, while a niche was found for it in the body of the work, between the Histories and Tragedies, as having something of the character of both.

Roughly summarized, then, these are the main facts with which we have to deal; they must, of course, be supplemented by such internal evidence as metrical and esthetic criticism can extract from the play. Let us look at some of these points in detail. In the first place, why did Dekker and Chettle change the title of their work? Perhaps, as Mr. Stokes suggests, because it was an infringement upon the name of some other play upon the same subject which already existed; perhaps because the “Tragedy of Agamemnon” sounded more telling and impressive. And, whatever the reason for the alteration, should their tragedy be identified with “the booke of Troilus and Cresseda” that was entered in the Stationers’ Register in 1603?

Some critics are inclined to answer in the affirmative. But it can scarcely be so; for several reasons, one of which seems quite fatal to the hypothesis—viz., the fact that the 1603 play was "acted by my Lord Chamberlen's men;" and the Chamberlain's Company was long the rival of that directed by Henslowe. The theory, therefore, that the 1603 entry refers to Dekker and Chettle's play can be dismissed, and the entry, so far as Shakespeare's predecessors are concerned, may allude to the real Troilus and Cressida. I definitely think that it does. I believe that we must assign two dates to the play. Troilus and Cressida, as entered upon the Register in 1609, was, I think, the drama that lies before us: Troilus and Cressida, as entered at the earlier date, 1603, represented the first draft or version. One is always loth to introduce this much-used and, perhaps, much-abused theory of revisions, but in the present case I can see no other way out of the difficulties which beset us, whether we would believe the writers of the above-quoted preface and allow that Troilus and Cressida was "a new play" in 1609, or, disregarding their statement as a mere publisher's artifice, would fix on the earlier date suggested by the 1603 entry. In favour of 1609, or thereabouts, there are two things that must be allowed to carry some weight: the statement that the piece had "never been staid with the stage, never clapper-claw'd with the palmes of the vulger," if absolutely untrue, would have been equally unhappy and pointless, because few people could have been deceived by it; hence the preface cannot be altogether ignored. Again, there is the palpable fact that a considerable portion of the drama is strongly penetrated by the tendency to bitter cynicism which we note in the parallel comedy of disillusion; I mean, of course, Timon of Athens. It is impossible to read the latter without feeling how close an affinity of thought and emotional undercurrent unites it with the scenes in Troilus and Cressida, where worldliness and the wisdom of those who are wise in their generation are held up to admiration, while the moral is pointed with exceeding keenness against the enthusiasm and buoyant idealism that begin in froth and end in failure.
TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

Taken together these two points of external and internal evidence might lead us to assign Troilus and Cressida to the group which includes Timon of Athens and Antony and Cleopatra; but, unfortunately, the metrical critics here step in and assure us that the verse-structure of the play is radically different from that which is usually associated with Shakespeare's later manner. According to Hertzberg (quoted by Professor Dowden), Troilus and Cressida does not contain a single weak ending, and only six light endings, whereas these verse-peculiarities appear with increasing frequency in all plays written after Macbeth. Verse-tests cannot be ignored, and this is precisely one of the cases where conclusions reached on other grounds must, if possible, be readjusted and brought into harmony with their testimony.

I think that the difficulties will be met to some extent if we suppose that Troilus and Cressida is a composite work, the main part of which dates from 1602-3, while some of the scenes—those, for instance, in which Ulysses appears—were subsequently expanded, with the addition, perhaps, of fresh characters. In this way the statements of the piratical printers would be partially explained and accounted for, while esthetically the tone of brooding irony that is only too traceable throughout would harmonize with the general gloom and despair of a period that, pretty certainly, produced Hamlet, Measure for Measure, and many of the later sonnets. Mr Fleay, I should say, carries the theory of revision and subsequent additions still further. He traces three distinct stories in the play, stories that were written at different periods and that overlap only very slightly. They are the Troylus and Cressida episode—approximate date, 1594-6; "the story"—I give Mr. Fleay's words—"of the challenge of Hector to Ajax, their combat, and the slaying of Hector by Achilles, on the basis of Carton's Three Destructions of Troy; and finally, the story of Ulysses' stratagem to induce Achilles to return to the battlefield by setting up Ajax as his rival, which was written after the publication of Chapman's Homer, from whom Thersites, a chief character in this part, was taken."

INTRODUCTION.

Myself, I do not quite understand the idea of a poet writing odd scenes at different periods of his life and afterwards patching them together. A play that can be subdivided and split up in this way must be strangely inorganic, and Troilus and Cressida does not seem to me to be of this nature; there are parts, no doubt, where the work is unequal, notably in the fifth act, where not improbably we have the débris of some old play, perhaps of Dekker’s tragedy, but the scheme of the drama is, to my mind, symmetrical and nicely thought out. How, for instance, can we separate Troilus from Ulysses? Dramatically they are complementary: they serve, and are meant to serve, as foils, antitheses. Troilus, in Dr. Furnivall’s graceful phrase, is “a young fool,” full of hopes and beliefs, buoyed up by noble ideals and ambitions: Ulysses is the man of gray worldly wisdom, who has seen

Cities of men
And manners, climates, councils, governments.

Once, no doubt, he too had his dreams, but time has taught its bitter lesson, and his idols have been long since broken, the temple long since turned into a counting-house. It is grotesque to separate these characters. They developed side by side in the dramatist’s brain, and we can no more divide them than we can divide Troilus and Cressida themselves. Again, can we believe that the love scenes in this play date from the period which gave the world Romeo and Juliet? It seems to me that Romeo and Juliet is to Troilus and Cressida very much what Troilus is to Ulysses. The love-note in the one play is wholly lyric, in the other quasi-satiric. It is the difference between a spring day and an autumn day. In Romeo and Juliet we might think of the poet as partially identifying himself with his characters: in Troilus and Cressida we cannot help feeling that he is rather laughing at them, exaggerating the passionate, somewhat sensuous effects solely for the purpose of making the dénouement more bitterly telling and effective.

Upon this point, then, of the date of the play I can only repeat my belief that it was in the main written and acted before 1603, and subsequently revised about 1609. As to the authorities used by Shakespeare, enough has already been said; moreover, his debts are pointed out in some detail in the notes. He had Chaucer’s poem to draw upon, Caxton’s Destruction of Troy, Lydgate’s Troy-Booke, and Chapman’s translation. He availed himself of them all very considerably.

STAGE HISTORY.

The materials for the stage history of this play are very scanty. In fact there does not appear to be a single record in Genest of any performance of Shakespeare’s play itself, but only of Dryden’s adaptation. Unfortunately the old play on this subject by Dekker and Chettle has been lost. The allusions to it in Henslowe’s Diary are five, and all relate to payments on account of the book; the first being on April 7th, 1599, of iiij ( £3); the next on the 16th of the same month of xx (20); the next is probably some time after April 23rd, 1600, and is simply an entry “Troyeles and creesedday” (pp. 147–149); the fourth is on the 26th of May, 1599, when a payment was made to the authors of 30 shillings on account of the book (p. 153); and it is there called “the tragedie of Agamemone.”¹ The fifth entry, on May 30th in the same year, is for “iiij vi” ( £3, 5), being “in full paynente of the Booke” (p. 153), and the very next item is for the payment “unto the M’ of the Revelles man, for lycensynge of a Booke called the tragedie of agamemnon,” on June 3rd of the same year. There is no record of the absolute production of the piece, but we may suppose that it was played shortly after it was licensed. Whether Shakespeare made use of this version of the story for his play, or whether he himself had any hand in “the tragedie of Agamemnone” we do not know. It would appear from an entry which I found in one of the domestic papers of the reign of Henry VIII. that in the early part of his reign an interlude called Troilus and Cressida was played before the court;² so that Dekker and

¹ See above, in the Literary History, p. 246, column 2.
² Unfortunately the reference to this entry has been mislaid.

249
Chettles' play may have been founded on a yet earlier dramatic version of the story.

As to Shakespeare's play itself, the only record we have of its performance is an entry in the Stationers' Register on February 7th, 1603, from which it would appear that the play was then being played "by my Lord Chamberlen's men;" and also a statement on one of the title-pages of the Quarto of 1609 that it was "acted by the Kings Maiesties servaunts at the Globe." This title-page appears to have been withdrawn, and in the extraordinary preface appended to the Quarto, as published in 1609, it is stated that it was "neuer stal'd with the Stage, neuer clapper-claw'd with the palmes of the vulger." That the above statement was a deliberate falsehood there can be little doubt. It is a short step from stealing to lying, either backward or forward; and the enterprising publishers, who sought to deprive Shakespeare and his fellow dramatists of their acting rights in a play by publishing it, and so enabling other companies to play it with impunity, would not have stuck at such a trifle as a lie of this sort. We can learn nothing decisive from these allusions to the acting of the play; but we may fairly deduce that it was not a very popular one, or Roberts would not have abandoned his idea of publishing it; and indeed the title-page as it stands in the Quarto of 1609 would lead one to believe that the play was more likely to be read than to be acted. In fact, what popularity it did enjoy was, as the stock phrase goes, in the closet and not on the stage. Nor can this be wondered at, for there are at most only two plays of Shakespeare which can dispute with Troilus and Cressida the palm of being eminently undramatic; unless it be as a vehicle for spectacular display there is absolutely nothing in this play to interest an audience. The love story, such as it is, is but feebly handled; it has no exact ending, either happy or otherwise; the character of the heroine is decidedly unsympathetic, while the admiration one feels for the hero is rather lukewarm and tinged with pity if not with contempt. Hector is the only character in the play who really bids fair to win our sympathy; but the treatment adopted by Shakespeare, or by the older dramatists from whom he may have taken his play, rendered it impossible to bring out Hector's character strongly, or that of Andromache, who might have made a noble heroine. In fact, as Mr. Verity has pointed out in note 311, the parting of Hector and Andromache is not nearly as pathetic in this play as it is in Homer; but Hector stands out amongst the men, almost more than Troilus, as at once a brave man and a gentleman. He is not a clumsy lout like Ajax, or a sensual bully like Achilles, or a complacent cuckold like Menelaus, or a conceited and insolent fop like Diomedes. Ulysses and Nestor are admirable in the abstract, and the former has some telling speeches from an elocutionary point of view; but neither of them has anything to do with any dramatic situation whatever, and by a general audience there is little doubt that both of them would be ranked as bores. The long discussions that take place in the Grecian camp are great blots upon the play; in fact, when regarded from a dramatic point of view, they are inexcusable. Whatever the faults of Dryden's alteration, from a poetical point of view, may be, there is no doubt that his version of Troilus and Cressida serves its purpose better, as an acting drama, than Shakespeare's tragedy, as I suppose we should call it.

The theatre, known as Dorset Gardens, was opened in the year 1671 by the Duke of York's company. Genest says it "was perhaps built on the site of the old one which stood there before the civil wars" (vol. i. p. 121). It would appear that the situation of this theatre was on the south side of the Strand, opposite Shoe Lane, and close to the ancient Bridewell Palace; in fact, very near to what is now known as Salisbury Square. It was here that Dryden's alteration of Shakespeare's play Troilus and Cressida or Truth Found Out Too Late was produced in 1679. The play was entered in the Stationers' Register on April 14th of that year. The exact date of the production of the play is not given by Genest. The cast was as follows:—"Agamemnon = Gillow; Achilles = David Williams; Ulysses = Harris; Ajax = Bright; Nestor = Norris; Diomedes = Crosby; Patroclus = Bowman; Menelaus = Richards; Thersites = Underhill:"
INTRODUCTION.

Trojans — Hector = Smith; Troilus = Betterton; Aeneas = Joseph Williams; Priam and Calchas = Percival; Pandarus = Leigh; Cressida = Mrs. Mary Lee: Andromache = Mrs. Betterton: — the Prologue was spoken by Betterton as the Ghost of Shakspeare” (Genest, vol. i. p. 266).

There are many plays of Shakespeare on which the adapter’s hand cannot be laid without committing an act of sacrilege; but Troilus and Cressida is certainly not one of them. If ever there was a play that could be altered with advantage from beginning to end, this is certainly one; that is to say, if a play is to be made of it at all. While one resents most strongly the wretched stuff introduced into the version of The Tempest by Dryden and Davenant, one cannot but admit that what “great and glorious John” has done for this unsatisfactory play is, in the main, done well. Most of his additions are, from a dramatic point of view, improvements; indeed one feels rather inclined to blame him that he did not do more, and did not get rid of some of the superfluous characters altogether, concentrating the interest more on those which are the best drawn in the original play. Dryden’s arrangement of the first act was undoubtedly a judicious one, and, as will be seen hereafter, was followed by John Kemble when he prepared Shakespeare’s play for the stage. In Act II. Dryden commences with what is the second scene in Shakespeare, and he has introduced Andromache with some effect, omitting Helen altogether; and the scene ends with the incident of Hector sending a challenge to the Grecian camp by Aeneas. The next scene is between Pandarus and Cressida and Pandarus and Troilus. He concludes the act with a scene, nearly entirely his own, in which Thersites plays a very prominent part. Act III. is chiefly remarkable for the concluding scene between Troilus and Hector, which is certainly a great improvement, as far as the dramatic interest of the play is concerned. It is said that he was indebted to Betterton for the hint of this scene, which, according to Genest, is partly an imitation of the quarrel between Agamemnon and Menelaus in the Iphigenia in Aulis by Euripides. It is certainly an effective acting scene, though the dialogue between the two is somewhat too prolonged. Dryden saw that some attempt must be made to render the character of Cressida more sympathetic. He therefore makes Calchas recommend her to make pretended love to Diomed, which she consents to do with the object of being able to return to Troy. Troilus is witness to the scene between them, as in Shakespeare, and believes Cressida to be false; though Dryden makes it clear to the audience that she never is so either in intention or fact. The act concludes with a quarrel between Troilus and Diomed, at which both Aeneas and Thersites are present. In the last act considerable liberty is taken with the story. The scene between Andromache and Hector is retained very much as in Shakespeare, and Troilus persuade Hector to fight in spite of his wife’s remonstrances. Cressida enters with her father in search of Troilus, in order to justify herself with him; and then Diomed and Troilus come in fighting. Cressida appeals to Troilus, and asserts her innocence; but Diomed implies indirectly that she has been false with him. Troilus is reproaching her in a violent speech, when she interrupts him and stabs herself, but does not die before Troilus has forgiven her. After that there is, as Genest remarks, a great deal of fighting. Troilus kills Diomède, and is, in his turn, killed by Ulysses. The piece ends with a speech of Ulysses; the death of Hector being only related by Achilles and not shown on the stage. No doubt all this, from a strictly poetic point of view, is very indefensible; but the end of Shakespeare’s play is so confused and so wretchedly abortive, that some such violent change in the story was necessary if it was to be effective on the stage. To alter the catastrophe of such a play as Romeo and Juliet, or Hamlet, or Othello, is a crime; but to alter such a play as Troilus and Cressida is a meritorious work, and can scarcely be considered disrespectful to Shakespeare, even if he were, as I very much doubt, the sole author of the work. Certain it is that it cannot have been a favourite play with him; for he does not seem to have expended on it much of that dramatic ability which is so remarkable in all his best work. It can scarcely be a matter of reproach to an audience of the seventeenth century that they should have preferred Dryden's version, though it certainly leaves very much to be desired; nor can we blame Betterton if he insisted that the part of Troilus (which he played) should be made of more dramatic importance.

The next production of this piece (Dryden's version) appears to have been on June 2nd, 1709, at Drury Lane. On this occasion Betterton surrendered the part of Troilus to Wilks and played Thersites, as will be seen from the following cast: Troilus = Wilks; Hector = Powell; Achilles = Booth; Agamemnon = Mills; Ajax = Keen; Ulysses = Thurmond; Thersites = Betterton; Pandarum = Estcourt; Cressida = Mrs. Bradshaw; Andromache = Mrs. Rogers (Genest, vol. ii. p. 420).

This play was revived at Lincoln's Inn Fields—"Not acted 12 years"—on November 10th, 1720. On this occasion Ryan played Troilus, and Quin took the part of Hector; the other chief characters were thus cast: Ulysses = Boheme; Troilus = Bullock; Pandarum = Spiller; Cressida = Mrs. Seymour; Andromache = Mrs. Bullock (Genest, vol. iii. p. 54). At the same theatre about two years afterwards, on May 3rd, 1723, Hippisley selected this play for his benefit; on which occasion Quin took the part of Thersites, which would be more suitable to him than that of Troilus. Hippisley himself took Pandarum, Boheme Hector, Ryan again playing Troilus. In the following season, on November 21st, 1723, the piece was again played at the same theatre. The details of the cast are wanting, except that the Cressida was Mrs. Sterling. Ten years appear to have passed before any attempt was made to revive this play, which never seems to have proved attractive, or to have been performed more than once at a time. At Covent Garden, on December 20th, 1733, Troilus and Cressida was represented with much the same cast as when it was given in 1723. Davies mentions this performance, and praises Walker as Hector, Quin as Thersites, and Hippisley as Pandarum. Davies says: "Mrs. Buchanan, a very fine woman and a pleasing actress, who died soon after in childbed, was the Cressida." He continues: "Mr. Lacy, late manager of Drury-lane, acted Agamemnon; and Tom Chapman¹ pleased himself with the obstreperous and discordant utterance of Diomed's passion for Cressida" (vol. iii. pp. 163, 164). Davies says that the scene between Troilus and Hector in Act III. was "written in emulation of the quarrel between Brutus and Cassius in Julius Cæsar" (vol. iii. p. 163). It is probable that this scene was in Dryden's mind more than the one from the Greek play mentioned above. With this performance, as far as I can discover, the stage history of Troilus and Cressida ceases. In none of the numerous theatrical memoirs which I have searched, nor in any of the many books and pamphlets concerning the English stage, can I find any mention of the performance of Shakespeare's play, or even of Dryden's adaptation, after this date.

The revival of Shakespeare's play never seems to have been contemplated by any of our great actors except one, and that was John Kemble, who prepared Shakespeare's play⁴ for the stage, and went so far as to cast it, and I believe to distribute the parts. At any rate they were copied out, but the piece was never represented. The alterations, which are confined to transpositions of portions of the dialogue, are made in that very neat handwriting which was characteristic both of John Kemble and his brother Charles. Not a single line appears to have been added from Dryden's play; the alterations in the text are confined to one or two slight verbal ones and a few unimportant transpositions. Some of the characters are omitted altogether; among them Menelaus, Helen, Deiphobus, Helenus, and Antenor. The cast would have been a strong one; it was to include Kemble as Troilus, Dicky Suett as Pandarum, Bensley as Agamemnon, Barrymore as Ajax, Bannister, jun., as Thersites, and John Kemble himself

¹ For some account of this actor see Introduction to All's Well That Ends Well, p. 7.

² I am indebted to Mrs. Creswick, the widow of the late well-known actor (one of the last of those who was associated with Mr. Phelps in the Shakespearean revivals at Sadler's Wells), for the original copy, as marked by John Kemble himself, which appears to have been sold at Heath's sale in 1821.
INTRODUCTION.

as Ulysses. The female characters were apparently not cast. I do not think that this arrangement, though it does credit to Kemble and shows a greater reverence for Shakespeare's text than he had shown in some of the acting editions prepared by him, could possibly have been successful. No amount of condensation can make a good acting play of Troilus and Cressida. There is no dramatic backbone in it, and it may be doubted whether it would ever repay a manager the cost of reviving it.—P. A. M.

CRITICAL REMARKS.

Of the characters of this play two—Troilus and Ulysses—stand out with special prominence, and about each it has already been necessary to say something. They are placed, as we have seen, in the sharpest contrast: Troilus, the perfect lover and knight, passionate and pathetic in his boyish, buoyant idealism and fidelity, thinking no ill of others and expecting none; Ulysses, the man of gray experience, who has studied the foibles and frailties of weak humanity, and attained, not indeed to the splendid serenity of Prospero, rather to the coldly calculating prudence and insight of the critic and cynic. Artistically the antithesis is perfect: Ulysses stands at the point where Troilus, under the sting of bitter disillusion, will possibly end. Nowhere do their characters touch; the one typifies hopeful, trustful youth; the other, incredulous age; combined they give us, as it were, an epitome of human experience. And if Troilus stands for loyalty, Cressida, assuredly, is the type of all disloyalty. Quick and clever of tongue, she is utterly shallow, a mere surface nature incapable of receiving, still more of keeping, any deep impression. For such characters environment is everything: they must change with their surroundings. With Troilus she is truth itself; we believe in her as she does her lover; nay, more, as she believes in herself. And then she passes into the Greek camp, and straightway all is forgotten; vows are vows no more; her heart is the prize of the first comer. It is the story of Romeo and Juliet reversed. The other side of the picture is turned to us. The poet had given the stage a study of woman's love steadfast to the bitter end: he now lays bare the weakness of a heart that forgets and falls at the first trial. What more is there to say? Of the remaining dramatic personages Thersites alone interests us much. What is he? A foretaste, a suggestion of Caliban, only Caliban without the saving, sovereign grace and favour of animal dulness? Perhaps; and something more. He seems to represent the democratic spirit on its most hateful side of babbling, blustering irreverence. A shrill-tongued shrew, ever railing and rancorous, he spares nobody, nothing. "We live by admiration!" To Thersites "admiration" would convey no meaning; he is nothing if not critical in the worst sense of the word. Hector, Agamemnon, Troilus, Ulysses—all present some aspect of greatness; and Thersites has a bitter word for all. Their greatness is non-existent for him: better far to find out a man's weakness, and gird and scoff at that. Thersites at his best is clever with cleverness contemptible: at his worst, he might fairly be disowned by Caliban.

The rest of the characters—except perhaps Pandar, on whom who would care to dwell?—are sketches rather than finished works of art; the poet has just filled in the outlines so far as they are necessary to the development of the piece, and it is to be noticed that all through there is little which we can regard as classical in form or spirit. Change the name, and we might believe ourselves to be moving in some purely mediæval scene.

And now a word as to the purpose of the play. What is the idee of Troilus and Cressida? The question has been answered in a dozen different ways. For example: Ulrici finds in this drama an attempt to degrade and debase the heroes of antiquity in the eyes of Shakespeare's contemporaries, an attempt, in fact, to spoil the classics of their prestige. Chapman had given the world Homer: through the roll of his golden rhetoric men had lived the long years of the weary war round Troy; spell-bound they had the far-off "surge and thunder of the Odyssey." And here was the counterblast; Shakespeare was jealous of the classics. Thus far Ulrici. Hertzberg seems to look upon Troilus and Cressida as an unconscious parody of mediæval chivalry, a kind of unintentional Don Quixote. Mr. Fleay, again, is certain, quite certain, that the whole play is nothing more nor less than a satire on rival dramatists, Hector representing Shakespeare; Thersites, Dekker; Ajax, Ben Jonson. And so on.
TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

Everyone remembers Edgar Poe's story of the man who, having an important paper to conceal, put it in an old vase on his mantelshelf, arguing that no one would ever look in so obvious a place. This old-vase idea is not inapplicable sometimes in matters of criticism. Critics in their efforts to find out a recondite interpretation are occasionally apt to overlook the obvious one; they forget the old vase. Perhaps it is so here. The name of the play may be the vase. The ordinary mortal, seeing the title of the play—Troilus and Cressida—would expect to find in the piece a love-story. And is it anything more than a love-story? a love-story coloured by the peculiar phase of feeling and emotion through which the poet was passing at the time of its composition? Romeo and Juliet was written by a young man. It is natural for youth to believe strongly in the existence of such things as loyalty and love and truth. Time brings disillusion. The poet does not become a cynic and cease to believe in good; only he perceives that there is evil too in the world: fickleness and disloyalty as well as fidelity. And so, as a dramatist should, he shows the other side of the shield. Romeo and Juliet is a study of love from one stand-point; Troilus and Cressida is a study of love from exactly the opposite stand-point; et voilà tout.
TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

[PROLOGUE.

In Troy, there lies the scene. From isles of Greece
The princes orgulous, their high blood chaf'd,
Have to the port of Athens sent their ships,
Fraught with the ministers and instruments
Of cruel war: sixty and nine, that wore
Their crownets regal, from th' Athenian bay
Put forth toward Phrygia: and their vow is made
To ransack Troy; within whose strong immures
The ravish'd Helen, Menelaus' queen,
With wanton Paris sleeps; and that's the quarrel.
To Tenedos they come;
And the deep-drawing barks do there disgorge
Their warlike fraughtage: now on Dardan plains
The fresh and yet unbruised Greeks do pitch
Their brave pavilions: Priam's six-gated city,

Dardan, and Tymbria, Helias, Chetas, Troien,
And Antenorides, with masy staples,
And corresponsive and fulfilling bolts,
Sperr up the sons of Troy.
Now expectation, tickling skittish spirits,
On one and other side, Trojan and Greek,
Sets all on hazard:—and hither am I come
A prologue arm'd,—but not in confidence
Of author's pen or actor's voice; but suited
In like conditions as our argument,—
To tell you, fair beholders, that our play
Leaps o'er the vaunt and firstlings of those broils,
Beginning in the middle; starting thence away
To what may be digested in a play.
Like, or find fault; do as your pleasures are;
Now good or bad, 'tis but the chance of war.

1 Orgulous = proud; Fr. orgueilleux.
2 Brave, making a great show.
3 Staples, loops of iron through which the bolts are slid.
4 Fulfilling, i.e. filling full the staples; well-fitting.
5 Sperr up = inclose.
ACT I.

SCENE I. Troy. Before Priam’s palace.

Enter Troilus armed, and Pandarus.

Tro. Call here my varlet; I’ll unarm again:
[ Why should I war without the walls of Troy,
That find such cruel battle here within? ]
Each Trojan that is master of his heart,
Let him to field; Troilus, alas, hath none!

Pan. Will this gear1 ne’er be mended?

Tro. The Greeks are strong, and skilful to their strength,
Fierce to their skill, and to their fierceness valiant;
But I am weaker than a woman’s tear,
Tamer than sleep, fondler than ignorance, 10
Less valiant than the virgin in the night,
And skilless as unpractis’d infancy.

Pan. Well, I have told you enough of this:
for my part, I’ll not meddle nor make no further. He that will have a cake out of the wheat must tarry the grinding.

Tro. Have I not tarry’d?

Pan. Ay, the grinding; but you must tarry the bolting.

Tro. Have I not tarry’d?

Pan. Ay, the bolting; but you must tarry the leavening.

Tro. Still have I tarry’d.

Pan. Ay, to the leavening; but here’s yet in the word “hereafter” the kneading,
the making of the cake, the heating of the oven,
and the baking; nay, you must stay the cooling too, or you may chance to burn your lips.

Tro. Patience herself, what goddess e’er
she be,
Doth lesser blench2 at sufferance than I do.
At Priam’s royal table do I sit;
And when fair Cressid comes into my thoughts,—
So, traitor!—when she comes!—When is she thence? 31

Pan. Well, she look’d yesternight fairer than ever I saw her look, or any woman else.

Tro. I was about to tell thee,—when my heart,

As wedged with a sigh, would rive in twain;
Lest Hector or my father should perceive me,—
I have—as when the sun doth light a storm—
Buried this sigh in wrinkle of a smile:
[ But sorrow, that is couch’d in seeming gladness,
Is like that mirth fate turns to sudden sadness. ]

Pan. An her hair were not somewhat darker than Helen’s,—well, go to,—there were no more comparison between the women, [ —but, for my part, she is my kinswoman; I would not, as they term it, praise her,—but ]
I would somebody had heard her talk yesterday, as I did. I will not dispraise your sister Cassandra’s wit; but—

Tro. O Pandarus! I tell thee, Pandarus,—
When I do tells thee, there my hopes lie drown’d,
Reply not in how many fathoms deep 50
They lie indrench’d. ] I tell thee, I am mad
In Cressid’s love: thou answer’st, she is fair;
Pour’st in the open ulcer of my heart
Her eyes, her hair, her cheek, her gait, her gait, her voice;
Handlest in thy discourse, [ O, that her hand,3
In whose comparison all whites are ink,
Writing their own reproach; to whose soft seizure4
The cygnet’s down is harsh, and spirit of sense Hard as the palm of ploughman!”—this thou tell’st me,
As true thou tell’st me, when I say I love her; ]
But, saying thus, instead of oil and balm, 61
Thou lay’st in every gash that love hath given
me
The knife that made it.

Pan. I speak no more than truth.

Tro. Thou dost not speak so much.

Pan. Faith, I’ll not meddle in ‘t. Let her be as she is: if she be fair, ’tis the better for her;
an she be not, she has the mends in her own hands.’ 65

[ Tro. Good Pandarus,—how now, Pandarus!

Pan. I have had my labour for my travail; ill-thought on of her, and ill-thought on of

1 Gear, business. 2 Blench = flinch.
3 That her hand, i.e. that hand of hers. 4 Seizure = touch.
ACT I. Scene 1.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

ACT I. Scene 2.

[Scene II. The walls of Troy.

Enter CRESSIDA and ALEXANDER.

Cres. Who were those went by?
Alex. Queen Hecuba and Helen.
Cres. And whither go they?
Alex. Up to th’ eastern tower, Whose height commands as subject all the vale, To see the battle. Hector, whose patience Is, as a virtue, fix’d, to-day was mov’d: He chid Andromache, and struck his armorer; And, like as there were husbandry³ in war, Before the sun rose, he was harness’d light, And to the field goes he; where every flower Did, as a prophet, weep what it foresaw In Hector’s wrath.

Cres. What was his cause of anger?
Alex. The noise goes, this: there is among the Greeks A lord of Trojan blood, nephew to Hector; They call him Ajax.

Cres. Good; and what of him?
Alex. They say he is a very man per se, And stands alone.
Cres. So do all men,—unless they are drunk, sick, or have no legs.
Alex. This man, lady, hath robb’d many beasts of their particular additions; he is as valiant as the lion, churlish as the bear, slow as the elephant: a man into whom nature hath so crowded humours, that his valour is crush’d into folly, his folly sauc’d with discretion:

---

1 Sorts, i.e. suits, fits.

² Scar to scorn = scar to be scorned, i.e. a trifling scar.

³ Husbandry, economy.
there is no man hath a virtue that he hath not a glimpse of; nor any man an attain't but he carries some stain of it: he is melancholy without cause, and merry against the hair: he hath the joints of every thing; but every thing so out of joint, that he is a gouty Briareus, many hands and no use; or purblind Argus,
all eyes and no sight.

Cres. But how should this man, that makes me smile, make Hector angry?

Alex. They say he yesterday cop'd 1 Hector in the battle, and struck him down; the disdain and shame whereof hath ever since kept Hector fastening and waking.

Cres. Who comes here?

Alex. Madam, your uncle Pandarus.

Enter Pandarus.

Cres. Hector's a gallant man.

Alex. As may be in the world, lady.

Pan. What's that? what's that?

Cres. Good morrow, uncle Pandarus.

Pan. Good morrow, cousin Cressid: what do you talk of?—Good morrow, Alexander.—
How do you, cousin? When were you at Ilium?

Cres. This morning, uncle.

Pan. What were you talking of when I came? Was Hector arm'd and gone, ere ye came to Ilium? Helen was not up, was she?

Cres. Hector was gone; but Helen was not up.

Pan. E'en so: Hector was stirring early.

Cres. That were we talking of, and of his anger.

Pan. Was he angry?

Cres. So he says here.

Pan. True, he was so; I know the cause too; he'll lay about him to-day, I can tell them that: and there's Troilus will not come far behind him; let them take heed of Troilus,
I can tell them that too.

Cres. What, is he angry too?

Pan. Who, Troilus? Troilus is the better man of the two.

Cres. O Jupiter! there's no comparison.

Pan. What, not between Troilus and Hector? Do you know a man if you see him?

Cres. Ay, if I ever saw him before, and knew him.

Pan. Well, I say Troilus is Troilus.

Cres. Then you say as I say; for, I am sure,
he is not Hector.

Pan. No, nor Hector is not Troilus in some degrees.

Cres. 'Tis just to each of them; he is himself.

Pan. Himself! Alas, poor Troilus! I would he were,—

Cres. So he is.

Pan. Condition, I had 2 gone barefoot to India.

Cres. He is not Hector.

Pan. Himself! no, he's not himself:— would 'a were himself! Well, the gods are above;] timemust friend or end: well, Troilus, well,—I would my heart were in her body!—
No, Hector is not a better man than Troilus.

Cres. Excuse me.

Pan. He is elder.

Cres. Pardon me, pardon me.

Pan. Th' other's not come to 't; [you shall tell me another tale, when th' other's come to 't.] Hector shall not have his wit this year,—

Cres. He shall not need it, if he have his own.

Pan. Nor his qualities,—

Cres. No matter.

Pan. Nor his beauty.

Cres. 'T would not become him,— his own's better.

Pan. You have no judgment, niece: Helen herself swore th' other day, that Troilus, for a brown favour— for so 'tis, I must confess,
—not brown neither,—

Cres. No, but brown.

Pan. Faith, to say truth, brown and not brown.

Cres. To say the truth, true and not true.

Pan. She prais'd his complexion above
Paris.

Cres. Why, Paris hath colour enough.

Pan. So he has.

Cres. Then Troilus should have too much:
if she prais'd him above, his complexion is:

1 Cop'd, encountered.
2 Condition, I had = even on condition that I had.
3 Favour, face.
higher than his; he having colour enough, and the other higher, is too flaming a praise for a good complexion. I had as lief Helen’s golden tongue had commended Troilus for a copper nose."

Pan. I swear to you, I think Helen loves him better than Paris.

Cres. Then she’s a merry Greek indeed.

Pan. Nay, I am sure she does. She came to him th’ other day into the compass’d window,—[and, you know, he has not past three or four hairs on his chin—

Cres. Indeed, a tapster’s arithmetic may soon bring his particulars therein to a total.

Pan. Why, he is very young; and yet will he, within three pound, lift as much as his brother Hector.

Cres. Is he so young a man, and so old a lifter?

Pan. But, to prove to you that Helen loves him,—she came,] and puts me her white hand to his cloven chin—

Cres. Juno have mercy! how came it cloven?

Pan. Why, you know, ’t is dimpled: I think his smiling becomes him better than any man in all Phrygia.

1 Particulars = Items.

Cres. O, he smiles valiantly.

Pan. Does he not?

Cres. O yes, an ’t were a cloud in autumn.

Pan. Why, go to, then:—but to prove to you that Helen loves Troilus,— Cres. Troilus will stand to the proof, if you’ll prove it so.

Pan. Troilus! why, he esteems her no more than I esteem an addle egg.

Cres. If you love an addle egg as well as you love an idle head, you would eat chickens in the shell.

Pan. I cannot choose but laugh, to think.
how she tickled his chin;—indeed, she has a marvellous white hand, I must needs confess,—

Cres. Without the rack.

Pan. And she takes upon her to spy a white hair on his chin.

Cres. Alas, poor chin! many a wart is richer.

Pan. But there was such laughing!—Queen
Hecuba laughed, that her eyes ran o'er,—

Cres. With mill-stones.

Pan. And Cassandra laughed,—

Cres. But there was more temperate fire under the pot of her eyes:—did her eyes run o'er too?

Pan. And Hector laughed.

Cres. At what was all this laughing?

Pan. Marry, at the white hair that Helen spied on Troilus' chin.

Cres. An't had been a green hair, I should have laughed too.

Pan. They laughed not so much at the hair as at his pretty answer.

Cres. What was his answer?

Pan. Quoth she, "Here's but one and fifty hairs on your chin, and one of them is white."

Cres. This is her question.

Pan. That's true; make no question of that. "One and fifty hairs," quoth he, "and one white: that white hair is my father, and all the rest are his sons." "Jupiter!" quoth she, "which of these hairs is Paris my husband?" "The forked one," quoth he; "pluck't out, and give it him." But there was such laughing! and Helen so blushed, and Paris so chafed, and all the rest so laughed, that it passed.

Cres. So let it now; for it has been a great while going by.

Pan. Well, cousin, I told you a thing yesterday; think on't.

Cres. So I do.

Pan. I'll be sworn't is true; he will weep you, an't were a man born in April.

Cres. And I'll spring up in his tears, an'
't were a nettle against May.

[A retreat sounded.

Pan. Hark! they are coming from the field:
shall we stand up here, and see them as they pass toward Ilium? good niece, do,—sweet niece Cressida.

Cres. At your pleasure.

Pan. Here, here, here's an excellent place;
here we may see most bravely: I'll tell you them all by their names as they pass by;
but mark Troilus above the rest.

Cres. Speak not so loud.

Aeneas passes.

Pan. That's Aeneas: is not that a brave man? he's one of the flowers of Troy, I can tell you: but mark Troilus; you shall see anon.

[Antenor passes.

Cres. Who's that?

Pan. That's Antenor: he has a shrewd wit,
I can tell you; and he's a man good enough:
he's one o' the soundest judgments in Troy,
whosoever, and a proper man of person.—
When comes Troilus?—I'll show you Troilus anon: if he see me, you shall see him nod at
me.

Cres. Will he give you the nod?

Pan. You shall see.

Cres. If he do, the rich shall have more.]

Hector passes.

Pan. That's Hector, that, that, look you, that; there's a fellow!—Go thy way, Hector!
—There's a brave man, niece.—O brave Hector!
—Look how he looks! there's a countenance! is't not a brave man?

Cres. O, a brave man!

Pan. Is 'a not? it does a man's heart good:
—look you what hacks are on his helmet!
look you yonder, do you see? look you there:
there's no jesting; there's laying on, take't off who will, as they say: there be hacks!

Cres. Be those with swords?

Pan. Swords! anything, he cares not; an the devil come to him, it's all one: by God's lid, it does one's heart good.—Yonder comes Paris, yonder comes Paris:

Paris passes.

look ye yonder, niece; is 't not a gallant man

1 Marvell's, abbreviation of marvellous.

2 Hacks, marks of blows, dints.
too, is't not?—Why, this is brave now.—Who said he came hurt home to-day? he's not hurt: why, this will do Helen's heart good now, ha!—Would I could see Troilus now!—You shall see Troilus anon.

[HELENUS passes.]

Cres. Who's that?
Pan. That's Helenus:—I marvel where Troilus is:—that's Helenus:—I think he went not forth to-day:—that's Helenus.

Cres. Can Helenus fight, uncle?
Pan. Helenus! no;—yes, he'll fight indifferent well.—I marvel where Troilus is.

Cres. Do you not hear the people cry "Troilus"?—Helenus is a priest.

Cres. What sneaking fellow comes yonder?

TROILUS passes.

Pan. Where? yonder? that's Deiphobus:—'tis Troilus! there's a man, niece!—Hem!—Brave Troilus! the prince of chivalry!

Cres. Peace, for shame, peace!

Pan. Mark him; note him:—O brave Troilus!—look well upon him, niece: look you how his sword is bloodied, and his helm more hacked than Hector's; and how he looks, and how he goes!—O admirable youth! [he ne'er saw three-and-twenty.—Go thy way, Troilus, go thy way!]—Had I a sister were a grace, or a daughter a goddess, he should take his choice. O admirable man! Paris?—Paris is dirt to him; and, I warrant, Helen, to change, would give an eye to boot.

Cres. Here comes more.

Forces pass.

Pan. Asses, fools, dolts! chaff and bran, chaff and bran! porridge after meat!—I could live and die i' the eyes of Troilus.—Ne'er look, ne'er look; the eagles are gone: crows and daws, crows and daws!—I had rather be such a man as Troilus than Agamemnon and all Greece.

Cres. There is among the Greeks Achilles,—a better man than Troilus.

Pan. Achilles! a drayman, a porter, a very camel.

Cres. Well, well.

Pan. Well, well!—Why, have you any dis-

1 Discretion, i.e. in its literal sense (discerno), "power of seeing."
ACT I. Scene 2

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

That she belov'd knows naught that knows not this,— Men prize the thing ungain'd more than it is:
Love got so sweet as when desire did sue:
Therefore this maxim out of love I teach,—
Achievement is command; ungain'd, beseech:
Then, though my heart's content firm love doth bear,
Nothing of that shall from mine eyes appear.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III. Agamemnon's tent in the Grecian camp.

Flourish of trumpets. Agamemnon, Nestor, Ulysses, Menelaus, and others discovered.

Agam. Princes,
What grief hath set the jaundice on your cheeks?
The ample proposition\(^1\) that hope makes
In all designs begun on earth below
Fails in the promis'd largeness: [checks and disasters
Grow in the veins of actions highest rear'd; As knots, by the conflux of meeting sap, Infect the sound pine, and divert his grain
Tortive and errant from his course of growth.]
Nor, princes, is it matter new to us,
That we come short of our suppose so far,
That, after seven years' siege, yet Troy walls stand;

[Sith every action that hath gone before, Whereof we have record, trial did draw Bias and thwart, not answering the aim, And that unbodied figure of the thought That gave't surmised shape.] Why, then,

[you princes,]
Do you with cheeks abash'd behold our works,
And call them shames, which are, indeed, naught else
But the protractive trials of great Jove
To find persistive constancy in men?
[The fineness of which metal is not found In fortune's love; for then the bold and coward, The wise and fool, the artist and unread, The hard and soft, seem all affin'd and kin:

But, in the wind and tempest of her frown,
Distinction, with a broad and powerful fan,
Puffing at all, winnows the light away;
And what hath mass or matter, by itself Lies rich in virtue and unmingle'd.]

Nest. With due observance of thy godlike seat,
Great Agamemnon, Nestor shall apply
Thy latest words. In the reproof\(^2\) of chance Lies the true proof of men: the sea being smooth,
How many shallow bauble boats dare sail Upon her patient breast, making their way With those of nobler bulk!
But let the ruffian Boreas once enrage The gentle Thetis, and, anon, behold The strong-ribb'd bark through liquid mountains cut,
Bounding between the two moist elements, Like Perseus' horse: where's then the saucy boat, Whose weak untimber'd sides but even now Co-rival'd greatness? either to harbour fled, Or made a toast for Neptune. Even so
Doth valour's show and valour's worth divide In storms of fortune: [for in her ray and brightness
The herd hath more annoyance by the breezes Than by the tiger; but when the splitting wind Makes flexible the knees of knotted oaks, And flies fled under shade, why, then the thing of courage,
As rous'd with rage, with ragedoth sympathize, And with an accent tun'd in self-same key Retorts to chiding fortune.]

Ulyss. Agamemnon,—Thou great commander, nerve and bone of Greece, Heart of our numbers, soul and only spirit, In whom the tempers and the minds of all Should be shut up,—hear what Ulysses speaks.\(^3\)
Besides the applause and approbation The which—[to Agamemnon] most mighty for thy place and away,—

[To Nestor] And thou most reverend for thy stretch'd-out life—
I give to both your speeches,—which were such:

\(^1\) Proposition = what hope sets before itself to achieve.

\(^2\) Reproof; an obvious quibble is intended.

\(^3\) Unmingle'd, pronounced as a quadrasyllable.

\(^4\) Breezes, the gad-fly.
As Agamemnon and the hand of Greece
Should hold up high in brass; and such again
As venerable Nestor, hatch’d in silver, Should with a bond of air—strong as the axletree
On which heaven rides—knit all the Greekish
ears
To his experience’d tongue,—yet let it please both,
Though great and wise, to hear Ulysses speak.]
Agam. Speak, Prince of Ithaca; [and be’t of less expect.]
That matter needless, of importless burden,
Divide thy lips, than we are confident,
When rank Thersites opes his mastic jaws,
We shall hear music, wit, and oracle.]
Ulyss. Troy, yet upon his basis, had been down,
And the great Hector’s sword had lack’d a master,
But for these instances.²
The specialty of rule hath been neglected:
And, look, how many Grecian tents do stand Hollow upon this plain, so many hollow factions.

[When that the general is not like the hive,
To whom the foragers shall all repair, What honey is expected? Degrees being vizarded,
Th’ unworthiest shows as fairly in the mask.
] The heavens themselves, the planets, and this centre,
Observe degree, priority, and place,
[Insistence, course, proportion, season, form,
Office, and custom, in all line of order:] And therefor is the glorious planet Sol
In noble eminence enthron’d and splend’rd
Amidst the other; whose med’cin’able eye
Corrects the ill’st shapes of planets evil,
[And posts, like the commandment of a king,
Sans check, to good and bad: but when the planets,
In evil mixture,² to disorder wander,
What plagues, and what portents, what mutiny,
What raging of the sea, shaking of earth,
Commotion in the winds, frights, changes, changes,
horrors,

[Exspect = expectation.
² Instances, causes, reasons.
³ In evil mixture, perhaps an astrological term.

Divert and crack, rend and deracinate⁴
The unity and married calm of states
Quite from their fixture!] O, when degree is shak’d,
Which is the ladder to all high designs,
Then enterprise is sick! How could communities,
[Degrees in schools, and brotherhoods in cities,
Peaceful commerce from dividable shores.
] The primogenity and due of birth,
Prerogative of age, crowns, sceptres, laurels,
But by degree, stand in authentic place?
Take but degree away, untune that string,
And, hark, what discord follows! [each thing
meets
In mere⁵ oppugnancy: the bounded waters
Should lift their bosoms higher than the shores,
And make a sop of all this solid globe:
Strength should be lord of imbecility,
And the rude son should strike his father dead:]
Force should be right; or rather, right and wrong—
Between whose endless jar justice resides—
Should lose their names, and so should justice too.
Then every thing includes itself in power,
Power into will, will into appetite;
And appetite, an universal wolf,
So doubly seconded with will and power,
Must make perforce an universal prey,
And last eat up himself. [Great Agamemnon,
This chaos, when degree is suffocate,
Follows the choking.
And this negligence of degree it is,
That by a pace goes backward, with a purpose
It hath to climb.] The general’s disdain’d:
By him one step below; he, by the next;
That next, by him beneath: so every step,
Examined by the first pace that is sick
Of his superior, grows to an envious fever
Of pale and bloodless⁶ emulation:
And ’tis this fever that keeps Troy on foot,
Not her own sinews. [To end a tale of length, Troy in our weakness stands, not in her strength.]

⁴ Deracinate = uproot.
⁵ Mere, absolute.
⁶ Bloodless, because malignant and sluggish.

263
TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

ACT I. Scene 3.

Nest. Most wisely hath Ulysses here discover'd
The fever whereof all our power is sick.
Agam. The nature of the sickness found,
Ulysses, 140
What is the remedy?
Ulyss. The great Achilles,—whom opinion crowns

The sinew and the forehead of our host,—
Having his ear full of his airy fame,
Grows dainty of his worth, and in his tent
Lies mocking our designs; with him, Patroclus,
Upon a lazy bed, the livelong day
Breaks scurril jests;
And with ridiculous and awkward action—
Which, slanderer, he imitation calls— 150

Ulyss. Sometime, great Agamemnon.-(Act I. 3. 151.)

Hepageantsua. Sometime, great Agamemnon,
Thy topless 1 deputation he puts on; 152
[And, like a strutting player,—whose conceit
Lies in his hamstring, and doth think it rich
To hear the wooden dialogue and sound
'Twixt his stretch'd footing and the scaffolding,
Such to-be-pitied and o'er-wrested seeming.]
He acts thy greatness in: and when he speaks,
'T is like a chime a-mending; [with terms un
'shar'd,
Which, from the tongue of roaring Typhon
dropp'd, 160
Would seem hyperboles. At this fusty stuff.]

The large Achilles, on his press'd bed lolling,
From his deep chest laughs out a loud applause;
Cries, "Excellent! 'tis Agamemnon just.
Now play me Nestor; hem, and stroke thy beard,
[As he being drest to some oration."
That 's done;—as near as the extremest ends
Of parallels; as like as Vulcan and his wife:
Yet good Achilles still cries, "Excellent!
'Tis Nestor right. Now play him me, Patroclus, Arming to answer in a night-alarm."] 171
And then, forsooth, the faint defects of age
Must be the scene of mirth; [to cough and spit,
And, with a palay-fumbling on his gorget, 2

1 Topless, i.e. which nothing overtops.

2 Gorget, piece of armour protecting the throat; cf. gorg.
Shake in and out the rivet:—and at this sport
Sir Valour dies; cries, "O, enough, Patroclus;
Or give me ribs of steel! I shall split all
In pleasure of my spleen." And in this fashion,
All our abilities, gifts, natures, shapes,
"[Severals and generals of grace exact, 190
Achievements, plots, orders, preventions,
Excitements to the field, or speech for truce,]
Success or loss, what is or is not, serves
As stuff for these two to make paradoxes.

_Nest._ And in the imitation of these twain—
Who, as Ulysses says, opinion crowns
With an imperial voice—many are infect
Ajax is grown self-will'd; and bears his head
In such a rein, in full as proud a pace 199
As broad Achilles; keeps his tent like him;
Makes factious feasts; rails on our state of war,
Bold as an oracle; and sets Therites—
A slave whose gall coins slanders like a mint, 1
To match us in comparisons with dirt,
[To weaken and discredit our exposure, 3
How rank soever rounded-in with danger.]

_Ulysses._ They tax our policy, and call it cowardice;
Count wisdom as no member of the war;
Forestall presence, and esteem no act 199
But that of hand: ["the still and mental parts,
That do contrive how many hands shall strike,
When fitness calls them on; and know, by measure
Of their observant toil, the enemies' weight,—
Why, this hath not a finger's dignity:
They call this bed-work, marray, 3 closest-war;]
So that the ram that batters down the wall,
For the great swing and rudeness of his poise,
They place before his hand that made the engine,
Or those that with the fineness of their souls
By reason guide his execution. 210

_Nest._ Let this be granted, and Achilles' horse
Makes many Thetis' sons. [A tucket.
_Agam._ What trumpet? look, Menelaus.

-Men._ From Troy.

_Enter Æneas._

_Agam._ What would you 'fore our tent?

Æne. Is this great Agamemnon's tent, I pray you?
_Agam._ Even this.

Æne. May one, that is a herald and a prince,
Do a fair message to his kingly ears?
_Agam._ With surely stronger ears
Æne. 'Fore all the Greekish heads, which with one voice
Call Agamemnon head and general.

Æne. Fair leave and large security. [How may
A stranger to those most imperial looks
Know them from eyes of other mortals?
_Agam._ How!

Æne. Ay;
I ask, that I might waken reverence,
And bid the cheek be ready with a blush
Modest as morning when she coldly eyes
The youthful Phæbus:
Which is that god in office, guiding men?
Which is the high and mighty Agamemnon?
_Agam._ This Trojan scorns us; or the men of Troy
Are ceremonious courtiers.

Æne. Courtiers as free, as debonair, unarm'd,
As bending angels; that's their fame in peace:
But when they would seem soldiers, they have galls,
Good arms, strong joints, true swords; and,
_Jove's accord,
Nothing so full of heart. But peace, Æneas,
Peace, Trojan; lay thy finger on thy lips!
The worthiness of praise distains his worth,
If that the praise'd himself bring the praise forth:
But what the repining enemy commends,
That breath fame blows; that praise, sole pure, transcends.
_Agam._ Sir, you of Troy, call you yourself
Æneas?

Æne. Ay, Greek, that is my name.]
_Agam._ What's your affair, I pray you?
Æne. Sir, pardon; 'tis for Agamemnon's ears.
_Agam._ He hears naught privately that comes from Troy.

Æne. Nor I from Troy come not to whisper him:

265
I bring a trumpet to awake his ear;
To set his sense on the attentive bent,
And then to speak.
Agam. Speak frankly as the wind;
It is not Agamemnon's sleeping hour:
That thou shalt know, Trojan, he is awake,
He tells thee so himself.
En. Trumpet, blow loud,
Send thy brass voice through all these lazy tents;
And every Greek of mettle, let him know,
What Troy means fairly shall be spoke aloud.

[Trumpet sounds.]
We have, great Agamemnon, here in Troy
A prince call'd Hector,—Priam is his father,—
Who in this dull and long-continu'd truce
Is rusty grown: he bade me take a trumpet,
And to this purpose speak. Kings, princes, lords!

If there be one among the fairest of Greece
That holds his honour higher than his ease;
That seeks his praise more than he fears his peril;
That knows his valour, and knows not his fear;]

That loves his mistress more than in confession,
With truant vows to her own lips he loves,
And dare avow her beauty and her worth
In other arms than hers,—to him this challenge.
Hector, in view of Trojans and of Greeks,
Shall make it good, or do his best to do it,
He hath a lady, wiser, fairer, truer,
Than ever Greek did compass in his arms;
And will to-morrow with his trumpet call
Midway between your tents and walls of Troy,
To rouse a Grecian that is true in love:
If any come, Hector shall honour him;
If none, he'll say in Troy when he retires,
The Grecian dames are sunburnt, and not worth
The splinter of a lance. [Even so much.]

Agam. This shall be told our lovers, Lord Äneas;
If none of them have soul in such a kind,
We left them all at home; but we are soldiers;
And may that soldier a mere recreant prove,
That means not, hath not, or is not in love!
If then one is, or hath, or means to be,
That one meets Hector; if none else, I am he.

Nest. Tell him of Nestor, one that was a man:
When Hector's grand sire suck'd: he is old now;
But if there be not in our Grecian host
One noble man that hath one spark of fire,
To answer for his love, tell him from me,—
I'll hide my silver beard in a gold beaver,
And in my vantbrace put this wither'd brawn;
And, meeting him, will tell him that my lady
Was fairer than his grandam, and as chaste
As may be in the world: his youth! in flood,
I'll prove this truth with my three drops of blood.

Æne. Now heavens forbid such scarcity of youth!
Ulyss. Amen.
Agam. Fair Lord Äneas, let me touch your hand;]
To our pavilion shall I lead you, sir.
Achilles shall have word of this intent;
So shall each lord of Greece, from tent to tent;
Yourself shall feast with us before you go,
And find the welcome of a noble foe.

[Exeunt all except Ulysses and Nestor.
Ulyss. Nestor,—
Nest. What says Ulysses?
Ulyss. I have young conception in my brain;
Be you my time to bring it to some shape.
Nest. What is't?
Ulyss. This 'tis:—
Blunt wedgesive hard knots: the seeded pride
That hath to this maturity blown up
In rank Achilles must or now be cropp'd,
Or, shedding, breed a nursery of like evil,
To overbulk us all.

Nest. Well, and how?
Ulyss. This challenge that the gallant Hector sends,
However it is spread in general name,
Relates in purpose only to Achilles.
Nest. The purpose is perspicuous [even as substance,
Whose grossness little characters sum up:
And, in the publication,] make no strain,²
But that Achilles, were his brain as barren
As banks of Libya,—though, Apollo knows,
'Tis dry enough,—will, with great speed of judgment,
Ay, with celerity, find Hector's purpose
Pointing on him.

¹ His youth, &c. though his youth's.
² Overbulk = overtow.
³ Make no strain, &c. do not doubt that.
Ulysses. And wake him to the answer, think you?

Nest. Yes 'tis most meet: who may you else oppose,
That can from Hector bring his honour off,
If not Achilles? Though 't be a sportful combat,
Yet in the trial much opinion dwells;

[For here the Trojans taste our dearst repute;
With their fin'est palate: and trust to me,
Ulysses,
Our imputation shall be oddly pois'd
In this wild action; for the success,
Although particular, shall give a scantling
Of good or bad unto the general;

And in such indexes, although small pricks
To their subsequent volumes, there is seen
The baby figure of the giant mass
Of things to come at large. It is suppos'd,
He that meets Hector issues from our choice:
And choice, being mutual act of all our souls,
Makes merit her election; and doth boil,
As 't were from forth us all, a man distill'd
Out of our virtues; who miscarrying,
What heart receives from hence the conquering part,
To steel a strong opinion to themselves?
Which entertain'd, limbs are his instruments,

In no less working than are swords and bows
Directive by the limbs.]

Ulysses. Give pardon to my speech;—
[Therefore 'tis meet Achilles meet not Hector.
Let us, like merchants, show our foulest wares,
And think, perchance, that they will sell; if not,
The lustre of the better yet to show,
Shall show the better.] Do not, [then,] consent
That ever Hector and Achilles meet;
For both our honour and our shame in this
Are dogg'd with two strange followers.

Nest. I see them not with my old eyes: what are they?
ACT I. Scene 3.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

Ulyss. What glory our Achilles shares from Hector, Were he not proud, we all should share with him: But he already is too insolent; And we were better parch in Afric sun Than in the pride and salt scorn of his eyes, Should he scape Hector fair: if he were foild, Why, then we did our main opinion crush In taint of our best man. No, make a lottery; And, by device, let blockish Ajax draw The sort to fight with Hector: 'mong ourselves Give him allowance as the worthier man; For that will physic the great Myrmidon

Who broils in loud applause, and make him fall His crest that prouder than blue Iris bends. If the dull brainless Ajax come safe off, We'll dress him up in voices: if he fail, Yet go we under our opinion still That we have better men. [But, hit or miss, Our project's life this shape of sense assumes,— Ajax employ'd plucks down Achilles' plumes.] Nest. Ulysses, Now I begin to relish thy advice; And I will give a taste of it forthwith To Agamemnon: go we to him straight. Two curs shall tame each other: pride alone Must tarre the mastiffs on, as 'twere their bone. [Exit.}

ACT II.

Scene I. A part of the Grecian camp.

Enter Ajax and Thersites.

Ajax. Thersites,—

[Ther. [Taking no notice of Ajax] Agamemnon,—how if he had boils,—full, all over, generally?—
Ajax. Thersites,—

Ther. And those boils did run?—Say so,— did not the general run then? were not that a botchy core?—

Ajax.] Dog,—

[Ther. Then would come some matter from him; I see none now.

Ajax. Thou bitch-wolf's son,] canst thou not hear? Feel, then. [Beating him.

Ther. The plague of Greece upon thee, thou mongrel beef-witted lord!

Ajax. Speak, then, thou vinewedet leave, speak: I will beat thee into handsomeness.

Ther. I shall sooner rail thee into wit and holiness: but, I think, thy horse will sooner con an oration than thou learn a prayer without book. Thou canst strike, canst thou? a red murrain o' thy jade's tricks!

Ajax. Toadstool, learn me the proclamation.

Ther. Dost thou think I have no sense, thou strik'st me thus?

Ajax. The proclamation!

Ther. Thou art proclaim'd a fool, I think.

Ajax. Do not, porpentine, do not: [my fingers itch.

Ther. I would thou didst itch from head to foot, and I had the scratching of thee; I would make thee the loathsomest scab in Greece. When thou art forth in the incursions, thou strik'st as slow as another.

Ajax. I say, the proclamation!]

Ther. Thou grumblest and railest every hour on Achilles; and thou art as full of envy at his greatness as Cerberus is at Proserpina's beauty, ay, that thou bark'st at him.

Ajax. Mistress Thersites!

Ther. Thou shouldst strike him.

Ajax. Cobloaf!

Ther. He would pun thee into shivers with his fist, as a sailor breaks a biscuit.

Ther. Do, do.]

Ajax. Thou stool for a witch!

Ther. Ay, do, do; thou sodden-witted lord! thou hast no more brain than I have in mine elbows; [an assinego'] thou art here but to thrash Trojans; and thou art bought and 1 Opinion, reputation. 2 Sort, sort. 3 Turre = set.

4 Vinewedet = mouldiest.
sold among those of any wit, like a barbarian slave. [If thou use to beat me, I will begin at thy heel, and tell what thou art by inches, thou thing of no bowels, thou!]

Ajax. You dog!

Ther. You scurvy lord!

Ther. Mars his idiot! do, rudeness; do, camel; do, do.

---

Enter Achilles and Patroclus.

Achil. Why, how now, Ajax! wherefore do you thus?—How now, Thersites! what's the matter, man?

Ther. You see him there, do you?

Achil. Ay; what's the matter?

Ther. Nay, look upon him.

Achil. So I do: what's the matter?

Ther. Nay, but regard him well.

Achil. Well! why, I do so.

Ther. But yet you look not well upon him; for, whosoever you take him to be, he is Ajax.

Achil. I know that, fool.

Ther. Ay, but that fool knows not himself.

Ajax. Therefore I beat thee.

Ther. Lo, lo, lo, what modicums of wit he utters! his evasions have ears thus long. I have bobbed his brain more than he has beat my bones: I will buy nine sparrows for a penny, and his pia mater is not worth the ninth part of a sparrow. This lord, Achilles, Ajax,—[who wears his wit in his belly, and his guts in his head,—] I'll tell you what I say of him.

---

1 Bought and sold, i.e. fooled; a proverbial phrase.
2 Bobbed, thumped.

---

Achil. What?

Ther. I say, this Ajax—

[Ajax offers to beat him, Achilles interposes.

Achil. Nay, good Ajax.

Ther. Has not so much wit—

Achil. Nay, I must hold you.

Ther. As will stop the eye of Helen's needle, for whom he comes to fight.

Achil. Peace, fool!

Ther. I would have peace and quietness, but the fool will not: he there; that he; look you there.

Ajax. O thou damn'd cur! I shall—

Achil. Will you set your wit to a fool's?

Ther. No, I warrant you; for a fool's will shame it.

---

* Set your wit to = match your wit against.
ACT II. Scene 1.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

Patr. Good words, Thersites.

Achil. What's the quarrel?

Ajax. I bade the vile owl go learn me the tenour of the proclamation, and he rails upon me.

Ther. I serve thee not.

Ajax. Well, go to, go to.

Ther. I serve here voluntary.

Achil. Your last service was sufferance,'t was not voluntary,—no man is beaten voluntary:

Ajax was here the voluntary, and you as under an impress.

Ther. E'en so; a great deal of your wit too lies in your sinews, or else there be liars. Hector shall have a great catch, if he knock out either of your brains: 'a were as good crack a fusty nut with no kernel.

Achil. What, with me too, Thersites?

Ther. There's Ulysses and old Nestor,—whose wit was mouldy ere your grandsires had nails on their toes,—yoke you like draught-oxen, and make you plough up the wars.

Achil. What, what?

Ther. Yes, good sooth: to Achilles! to Ajax, to!

Ajax. I shall cut out your tongue.

Ther. 'Tis no matter; I shall speak as much as thou afterwards.

Patr. No more words, Thersites; peace!

Ther. I will hold my peace when Achilles' brach bids me, shall I?

Achil. There's for you, Patroclus.

Ther. I will see you hang'd, like clotpoles, ere I come any more to your tents: I will keep where there is wit stirring, and leave the faction of fools.

[Exit.

Patr. A good riddance.

Achil. Marry, this, sir, is proclaim'd through all our host:—

That Hector, by the fifth hour of the sun, Will, with a trumpet, 'twixt our tents and Troy, To-morrow morning call some knight to arms

That hath a stomach; and such a one that dare Maintain—I know not what; 'tis trash. Farewell.

Ajax. Farewell. Who shall answer him?

Achil. I know not,—'tis put to lottery; otherwise

He knew his man.

[Exit Achilles and Patroclus.

Ajax. O, meaning you.—I will go learn more of it.

[Exit.

SCENE II. Troy. A room in Priam's palace.

Enter Priam, Hector, Troilus, Paris, and Helenus.

Pri. After so many hours, lives, speeches spent,

Thus once again says Nestor from the Greeks:—

"Deliver Helen, and all damage else—

As honour, loss of time, travel, expense,

Wounds, friends, and what else dear that is

Consum'd

In hot digestion of this cormorant war—

Shall be struck off."—Hector, what say you to 't?

Hect. Though no man lesser fears the Greeks than I

As far as toucheth my particular,

Yet, dread Priam,

There is no lady of more softer bowels,

More spongy to suck in the sense of fear,

More ready to cry out "Who knows what Follows?"

Than Hector is: the wound of peace is surety,

Surety secure, but modest doubt is call'd

The beacon of the wise, the tent, that searches

To the bottom of the worst. Let Helen go:

Since the first sword was drawn about this question,

Every tithe soul, 'mongst many thousand

Dismes,4

Hath been as dear as Helen,—I mean, of ours:

If we have lost so many tenths of ours,

To guard a thing not ours nor worth to us,

Had it our name, the value of one ten,—

What merit's in that reason which denies

The yielding of her up?

Tro. Fie, fie, my brother!

Weigh you the worth and honour of a king,

So great as our dread father, in a scale

Of common ounces? I will you with counters sum

The past-proportion of his infinite?

And buckle in a waist most fathomless

---

1 Brach = hound. 2 Clotpoles = blockheads.

270
With spans and inches so diminutive
As fears and reasons? fie, for godly shame!
[Hel. No marvel, though you bite so sharp at reasons,
You are so empty of them. Should not our father
Bear the great sway of his affairs with reasons,
Because your speech hath none that tells him so?
Tro. You are for dreams and slumbers, brother priest;
You fur your gloves with reason. Here are your reasons:
You know an enemy intends you harm;
You know a sword employ'd is perilous,
And reason flies the object of all harm:
Who marvels, then, when Helenus beholds
A Grecian and his sword, if he do set
The very wings of reason to his heels,
And fly like chidden Mercury from Jove,
Or like a star disorb'd? Nay, if we talk of reason,
Let's shut our gates, and sleep: manhood and
honour
Should have hare hearts, would they but fat their thoughts
With this cram'd reason: reason and respect
Make livers pale, and lusthlood deject.] 5 Hect. Brother, she is not worth what she dothe cost
The holding.

Tro. What is aught, but as 'tis valu'd?
Hect. But value dwells not in particular will;
It holds his estimate and dignity
As well wherein 'tis precious of itself
As in the prizer: 'tis mad idolatry
To make the service greater than the god;
[And the will dotes, that is attributive
To what infectiously itself affects,
Without some image of th'affected merit.]
50 Tro. [I take to-day a wife, and my election
Is led on in the conduct of my will;
My will enkindled by mine eyes and ears,
Two traded pilota 'twixt the dangerous shores
Of will and judgment: how may I avoid,
Although my will distaste what it elected,
The wife I chose? there can be no evasion
To bleech from this, and to stand firm by honour:

1 For the man for, or in favour of.
2 In the conduct of, under guidance of.

We turn not back the silks upon the merchant
When we have soil'd them; nor the remainder viands
We do not throw in unrespective sieve
Because we now are full.] It was thought meet
Paris should do some vengeance on the Greeks:
Your breath of full consent bellied his sails;
The seas and winds, old wranglers, took a truce,
And did him service: he touch'd the ports
desir'd;
And, for an old aunt whom the Greeks held captive,
He brought a Grecian queen, whose youth and freshness
Wrinkles Apollo, and makes stale the morning.
Why keep we her? the Grecians keep our aunt:
Is she worth keeping? why, she is a pearl,
Whose price hath launched above a thousand ships,
And turn'd crown'd kings to merchants.
If you'll avouch 't was wisdom Paris went,—
As you must needs, for you all cried, "Go, go;"
If you'll confess he brought home noble prize,—
As you must needs, for you all clapp'd your hands,
And cried, "Inestimable!"—why do you now
The issue of your proper wisoms rate,
And do a deed that fortune never did,— Beggar the estimation which you priz'd
Richer than sea and land? O theft most base,
That we have stol'n what we do fear to keep!
[But, thieves, unworthy of a thing so stol'n,
That in their country did them that disgrace
We fear to warrant in our native place!]

Cas. [Within] Cry, Trojans, cry!
Pri. What noise, what shriek is this?
[Tro. 'Tis our mad sister; I do know her voice.]

Cas. [Within] Cry, Trojans!
Hect. It is Cassandra.

Enter Cassandra, raving.

Cas. Cry, Trojans, cry! lend me ten thousand eyes,
And I will fill them with prophetic tears.
Hect. Peace, sister, peace!
Cas. Virgins and boys, mid-age and wrinkled
eld,

8 Took a truce, made peace.
9 Issue, result.
5 Eld, old age.
ACT II. Scene 2.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

Nor fear of bad success in a bad cause,
Can qualify the same?]

Tro. Why, brother Hector,
We may not think the justness of each act
Such and no other than event doth form it;
Nor once deject the courage of our minds,
Because Cassandra's mad: her brain-sick raptures
Cannot distaste the goodness of a quarrel
Which hath our several honours all engag'd
To make it gracious. For my private part,
I am no more touch'd than all Priam's sons:
And Jove forbid there should be done amongst us
Such things as might offend the weakest spleen
To fight for and maintain!

Par. Else might the world convince of levity
As well my undertakings as your counsels;
But I attest the gods, your full consent
Gave wings to my propension, and cut off
All fears attending on so dire a project.
[ For what, alas, can these my single arms?
What propugnation is in one man's valour,
To stand the push and enmity of those
This quarrel would excite? Yet, I protest.]
Were I alone to pass the difficulties,
And had as ample power as I have will,
Paris should ne'er retract what he hath done,
Nor faint in the pursuit.

Pri. Paris, you speak
Like one besotted on your sweet delights:
You have the honey still, but these the gall;
[ So to be valiant is no praise at all.]

Par. Sir, I propose not merely to myself
The pleasures such a beauty brings with it;
But I would have the soil of her fair rape
Wipe'd off in honourable keeping her.
What treason were it to the ransack'd queen,
Disgrace to your great worths, and shame to me,
Now to deliver her possession up
On terms of base compulsion! Can it be
That so degenerate a strain as this Should once set footling in your generous bosoms?

Our firebrand brother, Paris, burns us all.
Cry, Trojans, cry! a Helen and a woe!
Cry, cry! Troy burns, or else let Helen go.

[Exit.

Hect. Now, youthful Troilus, do not these high strains
Of divination in our sister work
Some touches of remorse? [ Or is your blood
So madly hot, that no discourse of reason,
ACT II. Scene 2.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

There's not the meanest spirit on our party
Without a heart to dare, or sword to draw,
When Helen is defended; nor none so noble
Whose life were ill bestowed, or death unfam'd,
Where Helen is the subject: [then, I say, 160
Well may we fight for her; whom, we know well,
The world's large spaces cannot parallel.]

Hec. Paris and Troilus, [you have both said
well;
And on the cause and question now in hand
Have goz'd—but superficially; not much
Unlike young debits, whom Aristotle thought
Unfit to hear moral philosophy;]
The reasons you allege do more conduce
To the hot passion of distemper'd blood
Than to make up a free determination Twixt right and wrong; for pleasure and revenge
Have ears more deaf than adders to the voice
Of any true decision. Nature craves
All dues be render'd to their owners: now,
What nearer debt, whom nature corrupted through affection,
[And that great minds, of partial indulgence
To their benumbed wills, resist the same:]
There is a law in each well-order'd nation to curb those raging appetites that are Most disobedient and refractory.
If Helen, then, be wife to Sparta's king,—
As it is known she is,—these moral laws
Of nature and of nations speak aloud
To have her back return'd: thus to persist
In doing wrong extenuates not wrong,
But makes it much more heavy. [Hector's opinion
Is this, in way of truth: yet, ne'ertheless,
My sprightly brethren, I propend to you
In resolution to keep Helen still;
For's is a cause that hath no mean dependance
Upon our joint and several dignities.]

Tro. [Why, there you touch'd the life of our design:]
Were it not glory that we more affected
Than the performance of our having spleens,
I would not wish a drop of Trojan blood
Spentmore in her defence. But, worthy Hector,
She is a theme of honour and renown;
A spur to valiant and magnanimous deeds;
Whose present courage may beat down our foes,

And fame in time to come canónize us:
For, I presume, brave Hector would not lose
So rich advantage of a promis'd glory,
As smiles upon the forehead of this action,
For the wide world's revenue.¹

Hec. I am yours,
You valiant offspring of great Priamus,—
I have a roasting² challenge sent amongst
The dull and factious nobles of the Greeks
Will strike amazement to their drowsy spirits:
I was advértis'd³ their general slept,
Whilst emulation⁴ in the army crept: ²¹²
This, I presume, will wake him. [Exeunt.

SCENE III. The Grecian camp. Before
Achilles' tent.

Enter Thersites. Before
Achilles' tent.

Ther. How now, Thersites! what, lost in the labyrinth of thy fury! Shall the elephant Ajax carry it thus? he beats me, and I rail at him: O worthy satisfaction! would it were otherwise; that I could beat him, whilst he rail'd at me: 's foot, I'll learn to conjure and raise devils, but I'll see some issue of my spiteful execrations. Then there's Achilles,— a rare eniger. If Troy be not taken till these two undermine it, the walls will stand till they fall of themselves. [O thou great thunder-darter of Olympus, forget that thou art Jove, the king of gods; and, Mercury, lose all the serpentine craft of thy caduceus; if ye take not that little little less-than-little wit from them that they have! which short-arm'd ignorance itself knows is so abundant scarce, it will not in circumference deliver a fly from a spider, without drawing their massy irons and cutting the web. After this, the vengecance on the whole camp! or, rather, the bone-ache! for that, methinks, is the curse dependant on those that war for a placket.⁵
I have said my prayers; and devil envy say
Amen.]—What, ho! my lord Achilles!

Enter Patroclus.

Patr. Who's there? Thersites! Good Thersites, come in and rail.

¹ Revenue and revenue both occur in Shakespeare.
² Roasting, blistering. ³ Advértis'd, informed.
⁴ Emulation = envy. ⁵ Placket, petticost.

273 130
Ther. If I could have remember'd a gilt counterpart, thou wouldst not have slipp'd out of my contemplation: but it is no matter; thyself upon thyself! The common curse of mankind, folly and ignorance, be thine in great revenue! heaven bless thee from a tutor, and discipline come not near thee! Let thy blood be thy direction till thy death! then if she that lays thee out says thou art a fair corpse, I'll be sworn and sworn upon't she never shrouded any but lazars. Amen.—Where's Achilles?

Patr. What, art thou devout? wast thou in prayer?

Ther. Then tell me, Patroclus, what's Achilles?—(Act ii. 3. 47, 48.)

Ther. Ay; the heavens hear me!

Enter Achilles.

Achil. Who's there?

Patr. Thersites, my lord.

Achil. Where, where?—Art thou come? why, my cheese, my digestion, why hast thou not serv'd thyself in to my table so many meals? Come,—what's Agamemnon?

Ther. Thy commander, Achilles.—Then tell me, Patroclus, what's Achilles?

Patr. Thy lord, Thersites: then tell me, I pray thee, what's thyself?

Ther. Thy knower, Patroclus: then tell me, Patroclus, what art thou?

Patr. Thou mayst tell that know'st.

Achil. O, tell, tell.

Ther. I'll decline the whole question. Agamemnon commands Achilles; Achilles is my lord; I am Patroclus' knower; and Patroclus is a fool.

Patr. You rascal!

Ther. Peace, fool! I have not done.

Achil. He is a privileg'd man.—Proceed, Thersites.
ACT II. Scene 3.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

ATHER. Agamemnon is a fool; Achilles is a fool; Thersites is a fool; and, as aforesaid, Patroclus is a fool.

ACHIL. Derive this; come.

ATHER. Agamemnon is a fool to offer to command Achilles; Achilles is a fool to be commanded of Agamemnon; Thersites is a fool to serve such a fool; and Patroclus is a fool positive.

PATR. Why am I a fool?

ATHER. Make that demand to the creator. It suffices me thou art.—Look you, who comes here?

ACHIL. Patroclus, I'll speak with nobody.—Come in with me, Thersites. [Exit into tent.

ATHER. Here is such patchery, such juggling, and such knavery! all the argument is a cuckold and a whore; a good quarrel to draw emulous factions and bleed to death upon.

[Now, the dry serpigo on the subject! and war and lechery confound all!] [Exit into tent.

Enter Agamemnon, Ulysses, Nestor, Diomedes, and Ajax.

AGAM. Where is Achilles?

PATR. Within his tent; but ill-dispos'd, my lord.

AGAM. Let it be known to him that we are here.

[He shent our messengers; and we lay by our appertainings, visiting of him: Let him be told so; lest perchance he think We dare not move the question of our place, Or know not what we are.]

PATR. I shall say so to him. [Exit.

ULYSS. We saw him at the opening of his tent: He is not sick.

AJAX. Yes, lion-sick, sick of proud heart: you may call it melancholy, if you will favour the man; but, by my head, 'tis pride: but why, why? let him show us the cause.—A word, my lord. [Takes Agamemnon aside.

NEST. What moves Ajax thus to bay at him?

ULYSS. Achilles hath inveigled his fool from him.

NEST. Who, Thersites?

ULYSS. He.

NEST. Then will Ajax lack matter, if he have lost his argument.

ULYSS. No, you see, he is his argument that has his argument.—Achilles.

NEST. All the better; their fraction is more our wish than their faction: but it was a strong composure a fool could disunite.

ULYSS. The anity that wisdom knits not, folly may easily untie.—Here comes Patroclus.

NEST. No Achilles with him.

ULYSS. The elephant hath joints, but none for courtesy: his legs are legs for necessity, not for flexure.

Re-enter Patroclus.

PATR. Achilles bids me say, he is much sorry, If anything more than your sport and pleasure Did move your greatness and this noble state To call upon him; he hopes it is no other But for your health and your digestion sake,— An after-dinner's breath.

AGAM. Hear you, Patroclus:— We are too well acquainted with these answers: But his evasion, wing'd thus swift with scorn, Cannot outfly our apprehensions. Much attribute he hath; and much thereason Why we ascribe it to him: yet all his virtues, Not virtuously on his own part beheld, Do in our eyes begin to lose their gloss; Yea, like fair fruit in an unwholesome dish, Are like to rot untasted.] Go and tell him, We come to speak with him; and you shall not sin, If you do say we think him over-proud And under-honest; in self-assumption greater, Than in the note of judgment; and worthier than himself

Here tend the savage strangeness he puts on, Disguise the holy strength of their command, And underwrite in an observing kind His humorous predominance; yea, watch His pettish lunes, his ebbs, his flows, as if The passage and whole carriage of this action Rode on his tide.] Go tell him this; and add,

1 Patchery, roguery; generally patch = a fool.
2 Serpigo = a kind of leprosy.
3 Shent, reviled, abused.
4 Composure = union, alliance.
5 State, noble attendants; abstract for concrete.
6 Apprehensions, powers of understanding.
7 Underwrite = obey, subscribe to. 8 Lunes, caprices.

275
ACT II. Scene 3.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

That if he overhold his price so much,
We'll none of him; 'twill be but let him, like an engine
Not portable, lie under this report,—
Bring action hither, this cannot go to war:]
A stirring dwarf we do allowance give
Before a sleeping giant:—tell him so.

Patr. I shall; and bring his answer presently.

[Exit into tent.

Agam. In second voice we'll not be satisfied;
We come to speak with him.—Ulysses, enter you.

[Exit Ulysses into tent.

Ajax. What is he more than another?

Agam. No more than what he thinks he is.

Ajax. Is he so much? Do you not think
He thinks himself a better man than I am?

Agam. No question.

Ajax. Will you subscribe his thought, and say he is?

Agam. No, noble Ajax; you are as strong, as valiant, as wise, no less noble, much more more gentle, and altogether more tractable.

Ajax. Why should a man be proud? How doth pride grow? I know not what pride is.

Agam. Your mind is the clearer, Ajax, and your virtues the fairer. He that is proud eats up himself; pride is his own glass, his own trumpet, his own chronicle; and whatever praises itself but in the deed, devours the deed in the praise.

Ajax. I do hate a proud man, as I hate the ingenerating of toads.

Nest. [Aside] Yet he loves himself: 'tis not strange?

Re-enter Ulysses from tent.

Ulyss. Achilles will not to the field tomorrow.

Agam. What's his excuse?

Ulyss. He doth rely on none;
But carries on the stream of his dispose,
Without observance or respect of any,
In will peculiar and in self-admission.

Agam. Why will henot, upon our fair request,
Untent his person, and share the air with us?

Ulyss. Things small as nothing, for request's sake only;
He makes important: possess'd he is with greatness;

And speaks not to himself, but with a pride
That quarrels at self-breath: imagin'd worth
Holds in his blood such swoln and hot discourse,

That 'twixt his mental and his active parts
Kingdom'd Achilles in commotion rages,
And batter's down himself: [what should I say?]
He is so plaguy proud, that the death-tokens of t.
Cry "No recovery."

Agam. Let Ajax go to him.—
Dear lord, go you and greet him in his tent:
'Tis said he holds you well; and will be led,
At your request, a little from himself.

Ulyss. O Agamemnon, let it not be so!
We'll consecrate the steps that Ajax makes
When they go from Achilles: [shall the proud
lord,
That bastes his arrogance with his own seam,]
And never suffers matter of the world
Enter his thoughts, save such as doth revolve
And ruminate himself,—shall he be worship'd?

Of that we hold an idol more than he?

No, this thrice-worthy and right-valiant lord
Must not so stale his palm, nobly acquir'd;
Nor, by my will, assubjugate his merit,
As amply titled as Achilles is,
By going to Achilles:
[That were t' enlard his fat-already pride,
And add more coals to Cancer when he burns
With entertaining great Hyperion.]

This lord go to him! Jupiter forbid,
And say in thunder, "Achilles go to him."

Nest. [Aside] O, this is well; he rubs the vein of him.

Dio. [Aside] And how his silence drinks up this applause!

Ajax. If I go to him, with my armed fist
I'll pash him o'er the face.

Agam. O, no, you shall not go.

Ajax. An a' be proud with me, I'll pheeze his pride:
Let me go to him.

Ulyss. Not for the worth that hangs upon our quarrel.

Ajax. A paltry, insolent fellow!

Nest. [Aside] How he describes himself!
ACT II. Scene 3.

Ajax. Can he not be sociable?
Ajax. I’ll let his humours blood.
Agam. [Aside] He will be the physician that should be the patient.
Ajax. An all men were o’ my mind,—
Ulyss. [Aside] Wit would be out of fashion.
Ajax. A’ should not bear it so, a’ should eat swords first: shall pride carry it?
Nest. [Aside] And ’t would, you’d carry half.
Ulyss. [Aside] A’ would have ten shares.]
Ajax. I will knead him; I’ll make him supple.
Nest. [Aside] He’s not yet through warm:
force him with praises: pour in, pour in; his ambition is dry.
Ulyss. [To Agam.] My lord, you feed too much on this dislike.
Nest. Our noble general, do not do so.
Dio. You must prepare to fight without Achilles.
Ulyss. Why, ’t is this naming of him does him harm.
Here is a man—but ’t is before his face;
I will be silent.
Nest. Wherefore should you so?
He is not emulous, as Achilles is.
Ulyss. Know the whole world, he is as valiant.
Ajax. A whorsen dog, that shall palter thus with us! Would he were a Trojan!
Nest. What a vice were it in Ajax now,— Ulyss. If he were proud,—
Dio. Or covetous of praise,— Ulyss. Ay, or surly borne,—
Dio. Or strange, or self-affected!

ACT III. Scene 1.

Ulyss. Thank the heavens, lord, thou art of sweet composure;¹
Praise him that get thee, she that gave thee suck:
Fam’d be thy tutor, and thy parts of nature
Thrice-fam’d, beyond all erudition:
But he that disciplin’d thy arms to fight,
Let Mars divide eternity in twain,
And give him half: [and, for thy vigour, let]
Bull-bearing Milo his addition yield
To sinewy Ajax.] I’ll not praise thy wisdom,
[Which, like a bourn, a pale, a shore, confines
Thy spacious and dilated parts: here’s Nestor,— Instructed by the antiquary times,
He must, he is, he cannot but be wise:——]
But pardon, father Nestor, were your days
As green as Ajax’, and your brain so temper’d,
You should not have the eminence of him,
But be as Ajax.
Agam. Shall I call you father?
Nest. Ay, my good son.
Dio. Be rul’d by him, Lord Ajax.
Ulyss. There is no tarrying here; the heart
Achilles
Keeps thicket. Please it our great general
To call together all his state of war;
Fresh kings are come to Troy: to-morrow
We must with all our main of power stand fast:
And here’s a lord,—come knights from east to west,
And cull their flower, Ajax shall cope the best.
Agam. Go we to council. Let Achilles sleep:
Light boats sail swift, though greater hulls draw deep.
[Exeunt.

¹ Composure, disposition.
Pan. Grace! not so, friend; honour and lordship are my titles. [Music within.]—What music is this?
Serv. I do but partly know, sir: it is music in parts.
Pan. Know you the musicians?
Serv. Wholly, sir.
Pan. Who play they to?
Serv. To the hearers, sir.
Pan. At whose pleasure, friend?
Serv. At mine, sir, and theirs that love music.
Serv. Who shall I command, sir?
Pan. Friend, we understand not one another: I am too courtly, and thou art too cunning. At whose request do these men play?
Serv. That's to 't, indeed, sir: marry, sir, at the request of Paris my lord, who's there in person; with him, the mortal Venus, the heart-blood of beauty, love's invisible soul,—
Pan. Who, my cousin Cressida?
Serv. No, sir, Helen: could you not find out that by her attributes?
Pan. It should seem, fellow, that thou hast not seen the Lady Cressida. I come to speak with Paris from the Prince Troilus: I will make a complimental assault upon him, for my business seethes.
Serv. Sodden business! there's a stewed phrase indeed!

Enter Paris and Helen, attended.

Pan. Fair be to you, my lord, and to all this fair company! fair desires, in all fair measure, fairly guide them!—especially to you, fair queen! fair thoughts be your fair pillow!
Helen. Dear lord, you are full of fair words.
Pan. You speak your fair pleasure, sweet queen.—Fair prince, here is good broken music.
Par. You have broke it, cousin: and, by my life, you shall make it whole again; you shall piece it out with a piece of your performance.—Nell, he is full of harmony.
Pan. Truly, lady, no.
Helen. O, sir,—

Pan. Rude, in sooth; in good sooth, very rude.
Par. Well said, my lord! well, you say so in fita.¹
Pan. I have business to my lord, dear queen.—My lord, will you vouchsafe me a word?
Helen. Nay, this shall not hedge us out: we'll hear you sing, certainly.
Pan. Well, sweet queen, you are pleasant with me.—But, marry, thus, my lord,—My dear lord, and most esteemed friend, your brother Troilus,— Helen. My lord Pandarus; honey-sweet lord,—
Pan. Go to, sweet queen, go to:—commends himself most affectionately to you,— Helen. You shall not bob² us out of our melody: if you do, our melancholy upon your head!
Pan. Sweet queen, sweet queen; that's a sweet queen, I' faith,— Helen. And to make a sweet lady sad is a sour offence.
Pan. Nay, that shall not serve your turn; that shall it not, in truth, la. Nay, I care not for such words; no, no. And, my lord, he desires you, that if the king call for him at supper, you will make his excuse.
Helen. My Lord Pandarus,—
Pan. What says my sweet queen,—my very sweet queen?
Par. What exploit's in hand? where sups he to-night?
Helen. Nay, but, my lord,—
Pan. What says my sweet queen?—My cousin will fall out with you. You must not know where he sups.
Par. I'll lay my life, with my disposer Cressida.
Pan. No, no, no such matter; you are wide:³ come, your disposer is sick.
Par. Well, I'll make excuse.
Pan. Ay, good my lord. Why should you say Cressida? no, your poor disposer's sick.
Par. I spy.
Pan. You spy! what do you spy?—Come, give me an instrument.—Now, sweet queen.

¹ That's to 't = that's to the point.
² Complimental, courteous.
³ Stewed, fit for a stew: a quibbling expression.

² Fits, the divisions of a song.
³ Bob, cheat.
⁴ You are wide, i.e. wide of the mark.
ACT III. Scene 1.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

Helen. Why, this is kindly done. 105
Pan. My niece is horribly in love with a thing you have, sweet queen.
Helen. She shall have it, my lord, if it be not my lord Paris.
Pan. He! no, she'll none of him; they two are twain.
Helen. Falling in, after falling out, may make them three.
Pan. Come, come, I'll hear no more of this; I'll sing you a song now.
Helen. Ay, ay, prithee now. By my troth, sweet lord, thou hast a fine forehead.
Pan. Ay, you may, you may.
Helen. Let thy song be love: this love will undo us all. O Cupid, Cupid, Cupid! 120
Pan. Love! ay, that it shall, 't faith.
Par. Ay, good now, love, love, nothing but love.
Pan. In good troth, it begins so. [Sings.
Love, love, nothing but love, still more!1
Love, love, nothing but love, still more!1
For, O, love's bow
Shouts buck and doe:
The shaft confounds,
Not that it wounds,
But tickles still the sore.
These lovers cry—Oh! oh! they die!
Yet that which seems the wound to kill
Dothturnoh!oh!toha!ha!ha!
So dying love lives still:
Oh! oh! a while, but ha! ha! ha!
Oh! oh! groans out for ha! ha! ha!
Heigh-ho!
Helen. In love, 't faith, to the very tip of the nose.
Par. He eats nothing but doves, love; and that breeds hot blood, and hot blood begets hot thoughts, and hot thoughts beget hot deeds, and hot deeds is love.
Pan. Is this the generation2 of love? hot blood, hot thoughts, and hot deeds? Why, they are vipers: is love a generation of vipers?
—Sweet lord, who's a-field to-day?
Par. Hector, Deiphobus, Helenus, Antenor, and all the gallantry of Troy: I would fain have arm'd to-day, but my Nell would not have it so. How chance3 my brother Troilus went not?

1 Still more = evermore, always.
2 Generation, the way love is generated.
3 How chance = how comes it that.

Helen. He hangs the lip at something:—you know all, Lord Pandarus. 158
Pan. Not I, honey-sweet queen.—I long to hear how they sped to-day.—You'll remember your brother's excuse?
Par. To a hair.
Pan. Farewell, sweet queen.
Helen. Command me to your niece. 159
Pan. I will, sweet queen. [Exit.

[A retreat sounded.
Par. They're come from field: let us to Priam's hall,
To greet the warriors. Sweet Helen, I must woo you
To help unarm our Hector: his stubborn buckles,
With these your white enchanting fingers touch'd,
Shall more obey than to the edge of steel
Or force of Grecian sinew; you shall do more
Than all the island kings,—disarm great Hector.
Helen. 'Twill make us proud to be his servant, Paris;
Yea, what he shall receive of us in duty
Gives us more palm in beauty than we have,
Yea, overshines ourselv. 171
Par. Sweet, above thought I love thee.
[Execvt.]

SCENE II. The same. Pandarus' orchard.

Enter Pandarus and Troilus' Boy, meeting.

Pan. How now! where's thy master? at my cousin Cressida's?
Boy. No, sir; he stays for you to conduct him thither.
Pan. O, here he comes.

Enter Troilus.

How now, how now!
Tro. Sirrah, walk off. [Exit Boy.
Pan. Have you seen my cousin?
Tro. No, Pandarus: I stalk about her door,
Like a strange soul upon the Stygian banks
Staying for waftage. [O, be thou my Charon,
And give me swift transportance to those fields
Where I may wallow in the lily-beds
Propos'd for the deserver!] O gentle Pandarus,
From Cupid's shoulder pluck his painted wings,
And fly with me to Cressida!

279
Pan. Walk here i' the orchard, I'll bring her straight. [Exit.

Tro. I am giddy; expectation whirls me round.

Th' imaginary relish is so sweet
That it enchants my sense: what will it be,
When that the watery palate tastes indeed
Love's thrice-repurified nectar? death, I fear me;
Swooning destruction: or some joy too fine,
Too subtle-potent, tun'd too sharp in sweetness,
For the capacity of my ruder powers:
[ I fear it much; and I do fear besides,
That I shall lose distinction in my joys;
As doth a battle, when they charge on heaps
The enemy flying.]

Re-enter Pandarus.

Pan. She's making her ready, she'll come straight: you must be witty now. She does so blush, [and fetches her wind so short, as if she were fray'd with a sprite:] I'll fetch her. It is the prettiest villain: she fetches her breath as short as a new-ta'en sparrow. [Exit.

Tro. Even such a passion doth embrace my bosom:
My heart beats thicker than a feverous pulse;
And all my powers do their bestowing lose,
Like vassalage at unawares encount'ring
The eye of majesty.

Re-enter Pandarus with Cressida.

Pan. Come, come, what need you blush? shame's a baby.—Here she is now: swear the oaths now to her that you have sworn to me.
—What are you gone against? you must be watch'd ere you be made tame, must you? Come your ways, come your ways; [an you draw backward, we'll put you i' the fills.]

Why do not you speak to her?—[Come, draw this curtain, and let's see your picture. Alas the day, how loth you are to offend daylight! an 't were dark, you'd close sooner. So, so; rub on, and kiss the mistresses. How now! a kiss in fee-farm! build there, carpenter; the air is sweet. Nay, you shall fight your hearts out ere I part you. The falcon as the tercel, for all the ducks i' the river: go to, go to.]
ACT III. Scene 2.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

Re-enter Pandarus.

Pan. What, blushing still? have you not done talking yet?

Cres. Well, uncle, what folly I commit, I dedicate to you.

Pan. I thank you for that: if my lord get [Pan. What, blushing still? have you not done talking yet?—(Act iii. 2. 106, 108.)

A boy of you, you'll give him me. Be true to my lord: if he flinch, chide me for it.

Tro. You know now your hostages; your uncle's word and my firm faith.

Pan. Nay, I'll give my word for her too: your kindred, though they be long ere they are wooed, they are constant being won: they are burs, I can tell you; they'll stick where they are thrown.]

Cres. Boldness comes to me now, and brings me heart—:

Prince Troilus, I have lov'd you night and day For many weary months.

Tro. Why was my Cressid, then, so hard to win?

Cres. Hard to seem won: but I was won, my lord,

With the first glance that ever—pardon me—
If I confess much, you will play the tyrant.
I love you now; but not, till now, so much
But I might master it:—in faith, I lie;
My thoughts were like unbridled children, grown

Too headstrong for their mother:—see, we fools!
Why have I blabb'd? who shall be true to us
When we are so unsecret to ourselves?—
But, though I lov'd you well, I woo'd you not;
And yet, good faith, I wish'd myself a man,
Or that we women had men's privilege

281
Ofspeaking first. Sweet, bid me hold my tongue;
For, in this rapture, I shall surely speak 138
The thing I shall repent. See, see, your silence,
Cunning in dumbness, from my weakness draws
My very soul of counsel.—stop my mouth.

Tro. And shall, albeit sweet music issues thence.

[Pan. Pretty, 't faith. ] [Kisses her.

Cres. My lord, I do beseech you, pardon me;
'Twas not my purpose thus to beg a kiss:
I am ashamed;—O heavens! what have I done?
For this time will I take my leave, my lord.

[Tro. Your leave, sweet Cressid!

Pan. Leave! an you take leave till to-morrow morning.—

150 Cres. Pray you, content you.]

Tro. What offends you, lady?

Cres. Sir, mine own company.

Tro. You cannot shun Yourself.

Cres. Let me go and try:
I have a kind of self resides with you;
But an unkind self, that itself will leave;¹
To be another's fool. I would be gone:—
Where is my wit? I know not what I speak.

Tro. Well know they what they speak that speak so wisely.

Cres. Perchance, my lord, I show'd more craft than love;
And fell so roundly to a large confession,
To angle for your thoughts: but you are wise;
Or else you love not; for to be wise and love Exceeds man's might; that dwells with gods above.

Tro. O that I thought it could be in a woman—
As, if it can, I will presume in you—
To feed for aye her lamp and flames of love;
To keep her constancy in plight and youth,
Outliving beauty's outward, with a mind
That doth renew swifter than blood decays!
Or, that persuasion could but thus convince
me,—

171 That my integrity and truth to you
Might be affronted with the match and weight
Of such a winnow'd purity in love;
How were I then uplifted! but, alas,
I am as true as truth's simplicity,
And simpler than the infancy of truth.

Cres. In that I'll war with you.

Tro. O virtuous fight,
When right with right wars who shall be most right!
179
True swains in love shall, in the world to come, Approve their truths by Troilus: when their rhymes,
Full of protest, of oath, and big compare,
Want similes, truth tir'd² with iteration,—
[As true as steel, as plantage³ to the moon,
As sun to day, as turtle to her mate,
As iron to adamant, as earth to the centre,—]
Yet, after all comparisons of truth,
[As truth's authentic author to be cited,]
"As true as Troilus" shall crown up the verse,

189
And sanctify the numbers.

Cres. Prophet may you be!
If I be false, or swerve a hair from truth,
When time is old and hath forgot itself,
When waterdrops have worn the stones of Troy,
And blind oblivion swallow'd cities up,
[And mighty states characterless are grated
To dusty nothing;] yet let memory,
From false to false, among false maids in love,
Upbraid my falsehood! when they've said
"as false
As air, as water, wind, or sandy earth,
[As fox to lamb, as wolf to heifer's calf, 200
Pard to the hind, or stepdame to her son," ]—
"Yea," let them say, to stick⁴ the heart of falsehood,
"As false as Cressid."

[Pan. Go to, a bargain made: seal it, seal it;
I'll be the witness. Here I hold your hand;
here my cousin's. If ever you prove false one to another, since I have taken such pains to bring you together, let all pitiful goers-between be called to the world's end after my name, call them all Pandars;⁵ let all inconstant men be Troiluses, all false women Cressids, and all brokers-between Pandars! say, amen.

Tro. Amen.
Cres. Amen.

Pan. Amen. Whereupon I will show you a chamber with a bed; which bed, because it

¹ Leave = cease.
² Tir'd = being tired : an awkward construction.
³ See note 188.
⁴ Stick, stab, pierce.
⁵ Pandars, a correct piece of philology.
TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

ACT III. Scene 3.

shall not speak of your pretty encounters,
press it to death: away!
And Cupid grant all tongue-tied maidens here
Bed, chamber, Pandar to provide this gear!]

[Exeunt.

SCENE III. The Grecian camp. Before the tent of Achilles.

Enter AGAMEMNON, ULYSSES, DIOMEDES, NESTOR, AJAX, MENELAUS, and CALCHAS.

CAL. Now, princes, for the service I have done you,
Th' advantage of the time prompts me aloud
To call for recompense. [Appear it to your mind
That, through the sight I bear in things, to love] I have abandon'd Troy, left my possessions, Incur'd a traitor's name; [expos'd myself, From certain and possess'd conveniences, To doubtful fortunes; sequestering from me all That time, acquaintance, custom, and condition, Made tame and most familiar to my nature; And here, to do you service, am become As new into the world, strange, unacquainted: I do beseech you, as in way of taste, To give me now a little benefit,
Out of those many register'd in promise, Which, you say, live to come in my behalf.

AGAM. What wouldst thou of us, Trojan? make demand.

CAL. You have a Trojan prisoner, call'd Antenor, Yesterday took: Troy holds him very dear.
Oft have you,—often have you thanks therefore—
Desir'd my Cressid in right great exchange, Whom Troy hath still denied: but this Antenor, I know, is such a wrest in their affairs, That their negotiations all must slack, Wanting his manage; and they will almost Give us a prince of blood, a son of Priam, In change of him: let him be sent, great princes, And he shall buy my daughter; and her presence Shall quite strike off all service I have done, In most accepted pain.—

AGAM. Let Diomedes bear him,
And bring us Cressid hither: Calchas shall have What he requests of us.—Good Diomed, Furnish you fairly for this interchange: Withal, bring word if Hector will to-morrow Be answer'd in his challenge: Ajax is ready. Dio. This shall I undertake; and 'tis a burden Which I am proud to bear.

[Exeunt Diomedes and Calchas.

Enter Achilles and Patroclus, from their tent.

ULYS. Achilles stands i' th' entrance of his tent:—
Please it our general to pass strangely by him, As if he were forgot; and, princes all, Lay negligent and loose regard upon him: I will come last. 'Tis like he'll question me Why such unpleasing eyes are bent on him: If so, I have derision med'cinable, To use between your strangeness and his pride, Which his own will shall have desire to drink: It may do good: pride hath no other glass To show itself but pride; for supple knees Feed arrogance, and are the proud man's fees.]

AGAM. We'll execute your purpose, and put on A form of strangeness as we pass along:— So do each lord; and either greet him not, Or else disdainfully, which shall shake him more Than if not look'd on. I will lead the way.

ACHIL. What, comes the general to speak with me? You know my mind, I'll fight no more 'gainst Troy.

AGAM. What says Achilles? would he aught with us?

NEST. Would you, my lord, aught with the general?

ACHIL. No.

NEST. Nothing, my lord.

AGAM. The better.

[Exeunt Agamemnon and NESTOR.

ACHIL. Good day, good day.

ACHIL. What, does the cuckold scorn me? AJAX. How now, Patroclus!

1 Conveniences, comforts. 2 Into = unto. 3 Wrest, an instrument for tightening the strings of a harp.

4 Unpleasing, i.e. giving no salutation.

283
ACT III. Scene 3.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

ACT III. Scene 3.

Achil. Good morrow, Ajax.
Ajax. Ha!
Achil. Good morrow.
Ajax. Ay, and good next day too. [Exeunt.
Achil. What mean these fellows? Know they not Achilles?
Patr. They pass by strangely: they were us'd to bend,

To send their smiles before them to Achilles;
To come as humbly as they use to creep
To holy altars.
Achil. What, am I poor of late?
'Tis certain, greatness, once fall'n out with fortune,
Must fall out with men too: what the declin'd is,

Nothing, my lord.
Ajax. The better.—(Act III. 3, 60, 61.)

He shall as soon read in the eyes of others
As feel in his own fall; [for men, like butterflies,
Show not their mealy wings but to the summer;
And not a man, for being simply man,
Hath any honour, but honour for those honours
That are without him, as place, riches, favour;
Prizes of accident as oft as merit:
Which when they fall, as being slippery standers,
The love that lean'd on them as slippery too,

Do one pluck down another, and together
Die in the fall.] But 'tis not so with me:
Fortune and I are friends: I do enjoy
At ample point all that I did possess,
Save these men's looks; who do, methinks, find out
Something not worth in me such rich beholding
As they have often given. Here is Ulysses:
I'll interrupt his reading.—
How now, Ulysses?
Ulyss. Now, great Thetis' son!
Achil. What are you reading?
Ulyss. A strange fellow here
Writes me, "That man — how dearly ever parted,\(^1\) 96
How much in having,\(^2\) or without or in—
Cannot make boast to have that which he hath,
Nor feels not what he owes,\(^3\) but by reflection;
[As when his virtues shining upon others
Heat them, and they retort that heat again
To the first giver."]
Achil. This is not strange, Ulysses.
The beauty that is borne here in the face
The bearer knows not, but commends itself
To others' eyes: nor doth the eye itself,
That most pure spirit of sense, behold itself,
Not going from itself; but eye to eye oppos'd
Salutes each other with each other's form:
For speculation turns not to itself, 100
Till it hath travell'd, and is mirror'd there Where it may see itself. This is not strange
at all.
Ulyss. I do not strain at the position,—
It is familiar,—but at the author's drift;
Who, in his circumstance,\(^4\) expressly proves
That no man is the lord of any thing,
Though in and of him there be much consisting,
Till he communicate his parts to others;
Nor doth he of himself know them for aught
Till he behold them formed in th' applause
Where they're extended; [who, like an arch, reverberates 120
The voice again; or, like a gate of steel
Fronting the sun, receives and renders back
His figure and his heat.] I was much rapt in this;
And apprehended here immediately
The unknown Ajax.
Heavens, what a man is there! a very horse;
That has he knows not what. [Nature, what things there are,
Most abject in regard, and dear in use;\(^5\)
What things again most dear in the esteem,
And poor in worth!] Now shall we see tomorrow— 130
An act that very chance doth throw upon him—
Ajax renown'd. O heavens, what some men do,
While some men leave to do!

\(^1\) Parted, having good parts or qualities.
\(^2\) Having, substance, property.
\(^3\) Owns, owns.
\(^4\) Circumstance, i.e. details of his argument.
\(^5\) Use, utility, opposed to reputation.

[ How some men creep in skittish Fortune's ball,
While others play the idiots in her eyes!
How one man eats into another's pride,
While pride is fasting in his wantonness!]
To see these Grecian lords!—why, even already
They clap the lubber Ajax on the shoulder,
As if his foot were on brave Hector's breast,
And great Troy shrieking. 141
Achil. I do believe it; for they pass'd by me
As misers do by beggars,—neither gave to me
Good word nor look: what, are my deeds forgot?
Ulyss. Time hath, my lord, a wallet at his back,
Wherein he puts alms for oblivion,
A great-siz'd monster of ingratitude:
Those scraps are good deeds past; which are devour'd
As fast as they are made, forgot as soon
As they are done: perseverance, dear my lord,
Keeps honour bright: [to have done, is to hang;
Quite out of fashion, like a rusty mail 152
In monumental mockery.] Take th' instant way;
For honour travels in a strait so narrow,
Where one but goes abroad: keep, then, the path;
For emulation hath a thousand sons,
That one by one pursue: if you give way,
Or hedge aside from the direct forth-right,\(^6\)
Like to an enter'd tide, they all rush by,
And leave you hindmost; 160
[Or, like a gallant horse fall'n in first rank,
Lie there for pavement to the abject rear,
O'er-run and trampled on: then what they do
in present,
Though less than yours in past, must o'ertop
yours;]
For time is like a fashionable host,
That slightly shakes his parting guest by th' hand,
And with his arms outstretch'd, as\(^7\) he would fly,
Grasps in the comer: [welcome ever smiles;
And farewell goes out sighing. O,] let not virtue seek Remuneration for the thing it was; 170
For beauty, wit,
High birth, vigour of bone, desert in service,
Love, friendship, charity, are subjects all
To envious and calumniating time.
One touch of nature makes the whole world kin,

[That all, with one consent, praise new-born
gauds,
Though they are made and moulded of things past,
And give to dust, that is a little gilt,
More laud than gilt o'er-dusted.] 179
The present eye praises the present object:
Then marvel not, thou great and complete man,
That all the Greeks begin to worship Ajax;
Since things in motion sooner catch the eye
Than what not stirs. The cry went once on thee,
And still it might, and yet it may again,
If thou wouldst not entomb thyself alive,
And case thy reputation in thy tent;
Whose glorious deeds, but in these fields of late,
Made emulous missions 'mongst the gods themselves,
And drive great Mars to faction.
Achil. Of this my privacy
I have strong reasons.
Ulyss. But 'gainst your privacy
The reasons are more potent and heroical:
'Tis known, Achilles, that you are in love
With one of Priam's daughters.
Achil. Ha! known!
Ulyss. Is that a wonder?
The providence that's in a watchful state
[Knows almost every grain of Plutus' gold;
Finds bottom in th' uncomprehensible deeps;]
Keeps place with thought, and almost, like the gods,
Does thoughts un-eil in their dumb cradles.
[There is a mystery—with whom relation
Durst never meddle—in the soul of state;
Which hath an operation more divine
Than breath or pen can give expressure to:]
All the commerce that you have had with Troy

As perfectly is ours as yours, my lord;
[And better would it fit Achilles much
To throw down Hector than Polyxena:]
But it must grieve young Pyrrhus now at home,
When fame shall in our islands sound her trump,

And all the Greekish girls shall tripping sing,
"Great Hector's sister did Achilles win;
But our great Ajax bravely beat down him."
Farewell, my lord: I as your lover speak;
The fool slides o'er the ice that you should break.

Patr. To this effect, Achilles, have I mov'd you:
A woman impudent and manuish grown
Is not more loath'd than an effeminate man
In time of action. [I stand condemn'd for this;
They think my little stomach to the war,
And your great love to me, restrains you thus:] Sweet, rouse yourself; and the weak wanton
Cupid
Shall from your neck unloose his amorous fold,
And, like a dewdrop from the lion's mane, Be shook to air.
Achil. Shall Ajax fight with Hector?
Patr. Ay, and perhaps receive much honour by him.
Achil. I see my reputation is at stake;
My fame is shrewdly gor'd.
Patr. O, then, beware;
Those wounds heal ill that men do give themselves:
[Omission to do what is necessary
Seals a commission to a blank of danger;
And danger, like an ague, subtly taints
Even then when we sit idly in the sun.]
Achil. Go call Thersites hither, sweet Patroclus:
I'll send the fool to Ajax, and desire him
T' invite the Trojan lords after the combat
To see us here unarm'd: I have a woman's longing,
An appetite that I am sick withal,
To see great Hector in his weeds of peace;

1 Complete, usually accented so by Elizabethan writers.
2 Uncomprehensive, unfathomable.
3 Relation, i.e. history.
4 Commerce, secret intercourse.
5 Weeds, used of dress in general.
To talk with him, and to behold his visage, to my full of view.

Enter Thersites.

A labour sav'd!

Ther. A wonder!

Achil. What?

Ther. Ajax goes up and down the field, asking for himself.

Achil. How so?

Ther. He must fight singly to-morrow with Hector; and is so prophetically proud of an heroic and cudgelling that he raves in saying nothing.

Achil. How can that be?

Ther. Why, he stalks up and down like a peacock,—a stride and a stand: ruminates like an hostess that hath not arithmetic but her brain to set down her reckoning: bites his lip with a politic regard, as who should say "There were wit in this head, an't would out;" and so there is; but it lies as coldly in him as fire in a flint, which will not show without knocking. The man's undone for ever; for if Hector break not his neck i' the combat, he'll break himself in vainglory. He knows not me: I said, "Good morrow, Ajax;" and he replies, "Thanks, Agamemnon." What think you of this man, that takes me for the general? [He's grown a very land-fish, languageless, a monster. A plague of opinion! a man may wear it on both sides, like a leather jerkin.]

Achil. Thou must be my ambassador to him, Thersites.

Ther. Who, I? why, he'll answer nobody; he professes not answering: speaking is for beggars; he wears his tongue in's arms. I will put on his presence: let Patroclus make demands to me, you shall see the pageant of Ajax.

Achil. To him, Patroclus: tell him,—I humbly desire the valiant Ajax to invite the most valorous Hector to come unarmed to my tent; and to procure safe-conduct for his person of the magnanimous and most illustrious six-or-seven-times-honour'd captain-general of the Grecian army, Agamemnon. Do this.

Patr. Jove bless great Ajax!

Ther. Hum!

Patr. I come from the worthy Achilles,—Ther. Ha!

Patr. Who most humbly desires you to invite Hector to his tent,—Ther. Hum!

Patr. And to procure safe-conduct from Agamemnon.

Ther. Agamemnon!

Patr. Ay, my lord.

Ther. Ha!

Patr. What say you to 't?

Ther. God b' wi' you, with all my heart.

Patr. Your answer, sir.

Ther. If to-morrow be a fair day, by eleven o'clock it will go one way or other: howsoever, he shall pay for me ere he has me.

Patr. Your answer, sir.

Ther. Fare you well, with all my heart.

Achil. Why, but he is not in this tune, is he?

Ther. No, but he's out o' tune thus. What music will be in him when Hector has knock'd out his brains, I know not; but, I am sure, none,—unless the fiddler Apollo get his sinews to make catlings on.

Achil. Come, thou shalt bear a letter to him straight.

Ther. Let me bear another to his horse; for that's the more capable creature.

Achil. My mind is troubled, like a fountain stir'd;

And I myself see not the bottom of it.

[Exeunt Achilles and Patroclus into tent.

Ther. Would the fountain of your mind were clear again, that I might water an ass at it! I had rather be a tick in a sheep than such a valiant ignorance.

[Exit.

1 Politic, shrewd, sly.
2 Of=upon.
3 Catlings, catgut.
4 Capable, intelligent.
ACT IV.

SCENE I.  A Street in Troy.

Enter, from one side, Æneas, and Servant with a torch; from the other, Paris, Deiphobus, Antenor, Diomedes, and others, with torches.

Par. See, ho! who's that there?

Dei. 'Tis the Lord Æneas.

Æne. Is the prince there in person?

Par. Had I so good occasion to lie long
As you, Prince Paris, nothing but heavenly business
Should rob my bed-mate of my company.

Dio. That's my mind too.—Good morrow,
    Lord Æneas.

Par. A valiant Greek, Æneas,—take his hand,—

Witness the process of your speech, wherein
You told how Diomed, a whole week by days,¹
Did haunt you in the field.

Æne. Health to you, valiant sir,
    During all question of the gentle truce; 11
    [But when I meet you arm'd, as black defiance
    As heart can think or courage execute.

Dio. The one and other Diomed embraces.
    Our bloods are now in calm; and, so long, health;
    But when contention and occasion meet,
    By Jove, I'll play the hunter for thy life
    With all my force, pursuit, and policy.

Æne. And thou shalt hunt a lion, that will fly
    With his face backward.—In humane gentleness.] 20

Welcome to Troy! [now, by Anchises' life, Welcome, indeed!] By Venus' hand I swear,
No man alive can love in such a sort
The thing he means to kill more excellently.

Dio. We sympathize:—Jove, let Æneas live,
    If to my sword his fate be not the glory,
    A thousand complete courses of the sun!
    But, in mine emulous honour, let him die,
    With every joint a wound, and that to-morrow!

Æne. We know each other well.

Dio. We do; and long to know each other worse.

Par. This is the most despeiful gentle greeting,
    The noblest hateful love, that e'er I heard of.—
    What business, lord, so early?

Æne. I was sent for to the king; but why,
    I know not.

Par. His purpose meets you: 't was to bring this Greek
    To Calchas' house; and there to render him,
    For the enfreed Antenor, the fair Cressid:
    Let's have your company: or, if you please,
    Haste there before us: I constantly do think—
    Or, rather, call my thought a certain knowledge—
41
    My brother Troilus lodges there to-night:
    Rouse him, and give him note of our approach,
    With the whole quality² wherefo're: I fear
    We shall be much unwelcome.

Æne. That I assure you:
    Troilus had rather Troy were borne to Greece
    Than Cressid borne from Troy.

Par. There is no help;
    The bitter disposition of the time
    Will have it so. On, lord; we'll follow you.

Æne. Good morrow, all. [Exit with servant.

Par. And tell me, noble Diomed,—faith, tell me true,
    Even in the soul of sound good-fellowship,—
    Who, in your thoughts, merits fair Helen best,
    Myself or Menelaus?

Dio. Both alike:
    He merits well to have her, that doth seek her,
    Not making any scruple of her soiture,³
    With such a hell of pain and world of charge; And you as well to keep her, that defend her, Not palating the taste of her dishonour, ⁵³ With such a costly loss of wealth and friends: [He, like a puling cuckold, would drink up The lees and dregs of a flat⁴ tamed piece; You, like a lecher, out of whorish loins Are pleas'd to breed out your inheritors: Both merits pois'd, each weighs nor less nor more; But he as he, each heavier for a whore.]

¹ By days, i.e. seven days, but not consecutive.
² Quality = tenor of it.
³ Soiture, deflement.
⁴ Flat, metaphor from wine.
Par. You are too bitter to your countrywoman.

 Dio. She's bitter to her country: [hear me, Paris:—
For every false drop in her bawdy veins
A Grecian's life hath sunk; for every scruple
Of her contaminated carrion weight
A Trojan hath been slain; since she could speak,
She hath not given so many good words breath
As for her Greeks and Trojans suffer'd death.

Par. Fair Diomed, you do as chapmen do,
Dispraise the thing that you desire to buy:
But we in silence hold this virtue well,—
We'll not commend what we intend to sell.
Here lies our way. [Exeunt.

SCENE II. Court of Pandarok's house in Troy.

Enter Troilus and Cressida.

Tro. Dear, trouble not yourself: the morn is cold.

Cres. Then, sweet my lord, I'll call mine uncle down;
He shall unbolt the gates.

Tro. Trouble him not; To bed, to bed: sleep kill those pretty eyes,
And give as soft attachment to thy senses
As infants' empty of all thought!

Cres. Good morrow, then.

Tro. I prithee now, to bed.

Cres. Are you a-sweary of me?

Tro. O Cressida! but that the busy day,
Wak'd by the lark, hath rous'd th'eribald's crows,
And dreaming night will hide our joys no longer,
I would not from thee.

Cres. Night hath been too brief.

Tro. Beashrew the witch! with venomous wights she stays
As cediously as hell; but flies the grasps of love
With wings more momentary—swift than thought.
You will catch cold, and curse me.

Cres. Prithee, tarry;—
You men will never tarry.—
[O foolish Cressid!—I might have still held off,

And then you would have tarried.]—Hark! there's one up.

Pan. [Within] What, 's all the doors open here?

Tro. It is your uncle.

Cres. A pestilence on him! now will he be mocking:
I shall have such a life!'

Enter Pandarok.

[Pan. How now, how now! how go maidenheads?—Here, you maid! where's my cousin Cressid?

Cres. Go hang yourself, you naughty mocking uncle!

You bring me to do—and then you flout me too.

Pan. To do what? to do what?—let her say what:—what have I brought you to do?

Cres. Come, come, beashrew your heart! you'll ne'er be good,
Nor suffer others.

Pan. Ha, ha! Alas, poor wretch! a poor capocchio hast not slept to-night? would he not—a naughty man—let it sleep? a bugbear take him!

Cres. Did I not tell you?—would he were knock'd i' th' head!—] [Knocking within.

Who's that at door? good uncle, go and see.—

My lord, come you again into my chamber:

[You smile and mock me, as if I meant naughtily.

Tro. Ha, ha!

Cres. Come, you're deceiv'd, I think of no such thing. [Knocking within.

How earnestly they knock!—Pray you, come in:]

I would not for half Troy have you seen here.

[Exeunt Troilus and Cressida.

Pan. [Going to the door] Who's there? what's the matter? will you beat down the door? How now! what's the matter?

Enter Æneas.

Æne. Good morrow, lord, good morrow.

Pan. Who's there? my Lord Æneas! By my troth,
I knew you not: what news with you so early?

1 Attachment, arrest.
2 Rebald, perhaps with the idea of "noisiness."

289 131
ACT IV. Scene 2.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

Æne. Is not Prince Troilus here?
Pan. Here! what should he do here? 50
Æne. Come, he is here, my lord; do not deny him:
It doth import¹ him much to speak with me.
Pan. Is he here, say you? 't is more than I know, I'll be sworn:—for my own part, I came in late. What should he do here?
Æne. Who!—nay, then:—come, come, you'll do him wrong ere you're ware: you'll be so true to him to be false to him: do not you know of him, but yet go fetch him hither; go.

As Pandarus is going out, re-enter Troilus.

Tro. How now! what's the matter? 60
Æne. My lord, I scarce have leisure to salute you,
My matter is so rash: there is at hand
Paris your brother, and Deiphobus,
The Grecian Diomed, and our Antenor
Deliver'd to us; and for him forthwith,
Ere the first sacrifice, within this hour,
We must give up to Diomedes' hand
The lady Cressida.

Tro. Is it so concluded?²
Æne. By Priam and the general state of Troy:
They are at hand, and ready to effect it. 70
Tro. How my achievements mock me!—
I will go meet them: and, my Lord Æneas,
We met by chance; you did not find me here.
Æne. Good, good, my lord; the secrets³ of nature
Have not more gift in taciturnity.

[Exeunt Troilus and Æneas.

Pan. Is't possible? no sooner got but lost?
The devil take Antenor! the young prince will go mad: a plague upon Antenor! I would they had broke's neck! 80

Enter Cressida.

Cres. How now! what's the matter? who was here?
Pan. Ah, ah!
Cres. Why sigh you so profoundly? where's my lord? gone! Tell me, sweet uncle, what's the matter?
Pan. Would I were as deep under the earth as I am above!

Cres. O the gods!—what's the matter?
Pan. Frithee, get thee in: would thou hadst ne'er been born! I knew thou would'st be his death:—O, poor gentleman!—A plague upon Antenor!

Cres. Good uncle, I beseech you, on my knees
I beseech you, what's the matter?
Pan. Thou must be gone, wench, thou must be gone; thou art chang'd for Antenor: thou must to thy father, and be gone from Troilus: 't will be his death; 't will be his bane; he cannot bear it.

Cres. O you immortal gods!—I will not go.
Pan. Thou must. 101
Cres. I will not, uncle: I've forgot my father;
I know no touch of consanguinity;
No kin, no love, no blood, no soul so near me
As the sweet Troilus.—O you gods divine,
Make Cressid's name the very crown of falsehood,
If ever she leave Troilus! Time, force, and death,
Do to this body what extremes you can;
But the strong base and building of my love
Is as the very centre of the earth, 110
Drawing all things to 't.—I'll go in and weep,—
Pan. Do, do.
Cres. Tear my bright hair, and scratch my praised cheeks;
Crack my clear voice with sobs, and break my heart
With sounding "Troilus." I will not go from Troy. [Exeunt.

SCENE III. Street in Troy near Pandarus' house.

Enter Paris, Troilus, Æneas, Deiphobus,
Antenor, and Diomedes.

Par. It is great morning; and the hour prefix'd
Of her delivery to this valiant Greek
Comes fast upon:—good my brother Troilus,
Tell you the lady what she is to do,
And haste her to the purpose.

Tro. Walk into her house;
I'll bring her to the Grecian presently:
And to his hand when I deliver her,
Think it an altar, and thy brother Troilus

¹ Doth import, i.e. is of Importance.
² Concluded, arranged.
³ Secrets, a triflingable.

290
A priest, there offering to it his own heart.

Pand. I know what 'tis to love;
And would, as I shall pity, I could help!—
Please you walk in, my lords.

[Exeunt.

Scene IV. A room in Pandarus' house.

Enter Pandarus and Cressida.

Pan. Be moderate, be moderate.

Cres. Why tell you me of moderation?

Cres. And is it true that I must go from Troy?—(Act iv. 22.)

The grief is fine, full, perfect, that I taste,
And violenteth in a sense as strong
As that which causeth it: how can I moderate it?
If I could temporize with my affection,
Or brew it to a weak and colder palate,
The like allayment could I give my grief:
My love admits no qualifying dress;
No more my grief, in such a precious loss.

Pan. Here, here, here he comes.

Enter Troilus.

Ah, sweet ducks!

Pan. What a pair of spectacles is here!

Let me embrace too. "O heart," as the goodly saying is,

"—— O heart, O heavy heart, Why sigh'st thou without breaking?"

where he answers again,

"Because thou canst not ease thy smart
By friendship nor by speaking."

There was never a truer rhyme. Let us cast away nothing, for we may live to have need of such a verse: we see it, we see it.—How now, lambs?

Tro. Cressid, I love thee in so strain'd a purity,
That the bless'd gods, as angry with my fancy,
More bright in zeal than the devotion which
Cold lips blow to their deities, take thee from me.

Cres. Have the gods eny?
Pan. Ay, ay, ay, ay; 'tis too plain a case.
Cres. And is it true that I must go from Troy?
Tro. A hateful truth.
Cres. What, and from Troilus too?
Tro. From Troy and Troilus.
Cres. Is it possible?
Tro. And suddenly; [where injury of chance Puts back leave-taking, justles roughly by
All time of pause, rudely beguiles our lips
Of all rejoinder, forcibly prevents
Our lock'd embrasures, stranglings our dear vows
Even in the birth of our own labouring breath:]
We two, that with so many thousand sighs
Did buy each other, must poorly sell ourselves
With the rude brevity and discharge of one.
Injurious time now, with a robber's haste,
Crams his rich thievry up, he knows not how:
As many farewells as be stars in heaven,
[With distinct breath and consign'd kisses to them,]
He fumbles up into a loose adieu;
And scant us with a single famish'd kiss,
Distasted with the salt of broken tears
Æne. [Within] My lord, is the lady ready?
Tro. Hark! you are call'd: some say the Genius so
Cries "Come!" to him that instantly must die.—
Bid them have patience; she shall come anon.

Pan. Where are my tears? rain, to lay this wind, or my heart will be blown up by the root.
Cres. I must, then, to the Grecians?
Tro. No remedy.
Cres. A woful Cressid 'mongst the merry Greeks!
When shall we see again?
Tro. Hear me, my love: be thou but true of heart,—
Cres. I true! how now! what wicked deem is this?
Tro. Nay, we must use expostulation kindly,
For it is parting from us:
[ I speak not "be thou true," as fearing thee;

For I will throw my glove to Death himself,
That there's no maculation in thy heart:
But "be thou true," say I, to fashion in
My sequent protestation; be thou true,
And I will see thee.
Cres. O, you shall be expos'd, my lord, to dangers
As infinite as imminent! but I'll be true.
Tro. And I'll go friend with danger. Wear this sleeve.
Cres. And you this glove. When shall I see you?
Tro. I will corrupt the Grecian sentinels,
To give thee nightly visitation.
But yet, be true.
Cres. O heavens!—"be true" again!
Tro. Hear why I speak it, love:
The Grecian youths are full of quality;
They're loving, well compos'd with gifts of nature,
And flowing o'er with arts and exercise:
How novelty may move, and parts with person,
Alas, a kind of godly jealousy—
Which, I beseech you, call a virtuous sin—
Makes me afeard.
Cres. O heavens! you love me not.
Tro. Die I a villain, then!
In this I do not call your faith in question
So mainly as my merit: I cannot sing,
Nor heel the high lavolt, nor sweeten talk,
Nor play at subtle games; fair virtues all,
To which the Grecians are most prompt and
pregnant:
But I can tell, that in each grace of these
There lurks a still and dumb-discoursive devil
That tempts most cunningly: but be not tempted.
Cres. Do you think I will?
Tro. No.

But something may be done that we will not:
And sometimes we are devils to ourselves,
[When we will tempt the frailty of our powers,
Presuming on their changeful potency.

Æne. [Within] Nay, good my lord,—
Tro. Come, kiss; and let us part.
Par. [Within] Brother Troilus!
Tro. Good brother, come you hither;
And bring Æneas and the Grecian with you.

1 Injury of chance, unkindness of fate.
2 Embraures, embraces.
3 Consign'd, sealed.
4 See again, i.e. see each other.
5 Deem, surmise; obsolete word.
ACT IV. Scene 4.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

Cres. My lord, will you be true? 108

Tro. Who, I? alas, it is my vice, my fault:
[Whiles others fish with craft for great opinion,
I with great truth catch mere simplicity;
Whilst some with cunning gild their copper
crowns,
With truth and plainness I do wear mine bare.]

Fear not my truth: the moral of my wit
Is "plain and true;" there's all the reach of it.

Enter Æneas, Paris, Antenor, Deiphobus, and Diomedes.

Welcome, Sir Diomed! here is the lady
Which for Antenor we deliver you:
[At the port, lord, I'll give her to thy hand;
And by the way possess thee what she is.]

Entreat her fair; and, by my soul, fair Greek,
If ever thou stand at mercy of my sword,
Name Cressid, and thy life shall be as safe
As Priam's is in Ilion.

Dio. Fair Lady Cressid,
So please you, save the thanks this prince expects:

The lustre in your eye, heaven in your cheek,
Pleas'd your fair usage; and to Diomed
You shall be mistress, and command him wholly.

Tro. Grecian, thou dost not use me courteously,

To shame the zeal of my petition to thee
In praising her: I tell thee, lord of Greece,
She is as far high-soaring o'er thy praises
As thou unworthy to be call'd her servant.
I charge thee use her well, even for my charge;
For, by the dreadful Pluto, if thou dost not,
Though the great bulk Achilles be thy guard,
I'll cut thy throat.

Dio. O, be not mov'd, Prince Troilus:
Let me be privileng'd by my place and message
To be a speaker free; [when I am hence,
'I'll answer to my lust:'] and know you, lord,
I'll nothing do on charge: to her own worth.
She shall be priz'd; but that you say, "Be't so,"
I'll speak it in my spirit and honour, "No."

Tro. Come, to the port.—I'll tell thee, Diomed, This brave shall oft make thee to hide thy head.—

Lady, give me your hand; and, as we walk,

To our own selves bend we our needful talk.

[Exeunt Troilus, Cressida, and Diomedes.

Par. Hark! Hector's trumpet.

Æne. How have we spent this morning!
The prince must think me tardy and remiss,
That swore to ride before him to the field.

Par. Tis Troilus' fault: come, come, to field with him.

Dei. Let us make ready straight.

Æne. Yes, with a bridegroom's fresh alacrity,
Let us address to tend on Hector's heels:
The glory of our Troy doth this day lie
On his fair worth and single chivalry.

[Exeunt.

SCENE V. A plain between Troy and the Grecian camp.

Enter Ajax, armed; Agamemnon, Achilles, Patroclus, Menelaus, Ulysses, Nestor, and others.

Agam. Here art thou in appointment fresh and fair,

Anticipating time with starting courage.
Give with thy trumpet a loud note to Troy,
Thou dreadful Ajax; that th' appalled air
May pierce the head of the great combatant,
And hale him hither.

Ajax. Thou, trumpet, there's my purse.

Now crack thy lungs, and split thy brazen pipe:
Blow, villain, till thy phere bias cheek
Outwell the colic of puff'd Aquilon:
Come, stretch thy chest, and let thy eyes spout
blood;

Thou blow'st for Hector. [Trumpet sounds.

Ulyss. No trumpet answers.

Achil. 'Tis but early days.

Agam. Is not yond Diomed, with Calchas' daughter?

Ulyss. 'Tis he, I ken the manner of his gait;
He rises on the toe: that spirit of his
In aspiration lifts him from the earth.

Enter Diomedes with Cressida.

Agam. Is this the Lady Cressid?

Dio. Even she.

---

1 Moral = meaning (almost).
2 Possess, inform.
3 Brave, boast, bravado.
ACT IV. Scene 5.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

Agam. Most dearly welcome to the Greeks, sweet lady. [Kisses her.
Nest. Our general doth salute you with a Kiss. 10
Ulyss. 'Tis the kindness but particular; I were better she was kiss'd in general.
Nest. And very courtly counsel: I'll begin.—
[Kisses her.

So much for Nestor.

Achil. I'll take that winter from your lips, fair lady: [Kisses her.
Achilles bids you welcome.

Men. I had good argument for kissing once.
Patr. But that's no argument for kissing now;
For thus popp'd Paris in his hardiment,
And parted thus you and your argument.

[Kisses her.

Ulyss. O deadly gall, and theme of all our scorns! 20
For which we lose our heads to gild his horns.
Patr. The first was Menelaus' kiss;—this,
mine: [Kisses her again.
Patroclus kisses you.

Men. O, this is trim!
Patr. Paris and I kiss evermore for him.

Men. I'll have my kiss, sir.—Lady, by your leave.
Cres. In kissing, do you render or receive?
Men. Both take and give.
Cres. I'll make my match to live,
The kiss you take is better than you give;
Therefore no kiss.

Men. I'll give you boot, I'll give you three for one. 30
Cres. You're an odd man; give even, or give none.

Men. An odd man, lady! every man is odd.
Cres. No, Paris is not; for you know 'tis true
That you are odd, and he is even with you.

Men. You fillip me o' the head.
Cres. No, I'll be sworn.
Ulyss. It were no match, your nail against his horn.—]

May I, sweet lady, beg a kiss of you?

Cres. You may.
Ulyss. I do desire 't.

Cres. Why, beg then, do.
Ulyss. Why, then, for Venus' sake, give me a kiss.

When Helen is a maid again, and his. 50
[Pointing to Menelaus.

Cres. I am your debtor, claim it when 'tis due.

Ulyss. Never's my day, and then a kiss of
you.

Dio. Lady, a word—I'll bring you to your father. [Exit with Cressida.

Nest. A woman of quick sense.
Ulyss. Fie, fie upon her!
There's language in her eye, her cheek, her lip,
Nay, her foot speaks; her wanton spirits look out
At every joint and motive of her body.
O, these encounterers, so glib of tongue,
That give accosting welcome ere it comes,
And wide unclasp the tables of their thoughts
To every ticklish reader! set them down a
For sluttish spoils of opportunity
And daughters of the game. [Trumpet within.

All. The Trojans' trumpet.

Agam. Yonder comes the troop.

Enter Hector, armed, with Attendants; and Aeneas, Troilus, and other Trojans, who remain at back of scene.

Aene. Hail, all you state of Greece! [what shall be done
To him that victory commands? or do you purpose
A victor shall be known?] will you, the knights
Shall to the edge of all extremity
Pursue each other; or shall they be divided 4
By any voice or order of the field? 70
Hector bade ask.

Agam. Which way would Hector have it?
Aene. He cares not; he'll obey conditions.
Achil. 'Tis done like Hector; but securely
done,
A little proudly, and great deal misprizing 5
The knight oppose'd.

Aene. If not Achilles, sir,
What is your name?

Achil. If not Achilles, nothing.

---

1 Particular, individual, not shared by all.
2 Fillip properly means to strike with the finger-nail; another form of fip.
3 Motive, instrument or motive limb.
4 Divided, i.e. parted.
5 Misprising, undervaluing.
TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

_Aene._ Therefore Achilles: but whate'er, know this:—
In the extremity of great and little,
Valour and pride excel themselves in Hector;
The one almost as infinite as all, 80
The other blank as nothing. Weigh him well,
And that which looks like pride is courtesy.

This Ajax is half made of Hector's blood: 83
In love whereof half Hector stays at home;
[Half heart, half hand, half Hector comes to seek]
This blended knight, half Trojan and half Greek.]

_Achil._ A maiden battle, then?—O, I perceive you.

Hect. Why, then will I no more:—
Thou art, great lord, my father's sister's son.—(Act iv. 5. 118, 120.)

_Re-enter Diomedes._

_Agam._ Here is Sir Diomed.—Go, gentle knight,
Stand by our Ajax: as you and Lord Æneas
Consent upon the order of their fight, 90
So be it; either to the uttermost,
Or else a breath: the combatants being kin
Half stints their strife before their strokes begin. [Ajax and Hector prepare to fight.
_Ulyss._ They are oppo'd already.
_Agam._ What Trojan is that same that looks so heavy?
_Ulyss._ The youngest son of Priam, a true knight;
Not yet mature, yet matchless: firm of word;
Speaking in deeds, and deedless in his tongue;
Not soon provok'd, nor being provok'd soon
calm'd: His heart and hand both open and both free;
For what he has he gives, what thinks he shows;
Yet gives he not till judgment guide his bounty,
Nor dignifies an impure thought with breath:
Manly as Hector, but more dangerous;
For Hector, in his blaze of wrath, subscribes
To tender objects; but he, in heat of action,
Is more vindictive than jealous love:
They call him Troilus; and on him erect
A second hope, as fairly built as Hector. [Thus says Æneas; one that knows the youth;
Even to his inches, and with private soul
Did in great Ilion thus translate him to me.]

_Agarum._ Hector and Ajax fight.

_Agam._ They are in action. 112

1 Vindictive, original form of vindictive.
2 Even to his inches, i.e. minutely, thoroughly.
ACT IV. Scene 5.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

ACT IV. Scene 5.

Nest. Now, Ajax, hold thine own!

Tro. Hector, thou sleep'st;

Awake thee!

Agam. His blows are well disposed:—there, Ajax!

Dio. You must no more. [Trumpets cease.

Æne. Princes, enough, so please you.

Ajax. I am not warm yet; let us fight again.

Dio. As Hector pleases.

Hect. Why, then will I no more:—Thou art, great lord, my father's sister's son, A cousin-german to great Priam's seed; The obligation of our blood forbids A gory emulation 'twixt us twain:

[ Were thy commixtion Greek and Trojan so That thou could'st stay, "This hand is Grecian all, And this is Trojan; the sinews of this leg All Greek, and this all Troy; my mother's blood Runs on the dexter\(^1\) cheek, and this sinister\(^2\) BOUNDS in my father's," by Jove multipotent, Thou shouldst not bear from me a Grecian member Wherein my sword had not impressure made Of our rank feud: but the just gods gainsay That any drop thou borrow'dst from thy mother, My sacred aunt, should by my mortal sword Be drained!] Let me embrace thee, Ajax: By him that thunders, thou hast lusty arms; Hector would have them fall upon him thus: Cousin, all honour to thee!

Ajax. I thank thee, Hector: Thou art too gentle and too free a man: I came to kill thee, cousin, and bear hence A great addition earned in thy death.

[ Hect. Not Neoptolemus so mirable\(^3\)— On whose bright crest Fame with her loud'st eyes Cries "This is he"—could promise to himself A thought of added honour torn from Hector.]

Æne. There is expectance here from both the sides, What further you will do.

Hect. We'll answer it;\(^4\) The issue is embracement:—Ajax, farewell.

Ajax. If I might in entreaties find success— As well\(^5\) I have the chance—I would desire My famous cousin to our Grecian tents. 151

Dio. Tis Agamemnon's wish; and great Achilles Doth long to see unarmed the valiant Hector. Hect. Æneas, call my brother Troilus to me: And signify this loving interview To the expecters of our Trojan part; Desire them home. [Æneas goes to Troilus and other Trojans at back]—Give me thy hand, my cousin [to Ajax]; I will go eat with thee, and see your knights.

Ajax. Great Agamemnon comes to meet us here.

Hect. The worthiest of them tell me name by name;\(^6\)

[ But for Achilles, mine own searching eyes Shall find him by his large and portly size.]

Agam. Worthy of arms! as welcome as to one That would be rid of such an enemy; [But that's no welcome: understand more clear, What's past and what's to come is strew'd with husks And formless ruin of oblivion; But in this extant\(^4\) moment, faith and troth, Strain'd purely from all hollow bias-drawing! Bids thee, with most divine integrity,]

From heart of very heart, great Hector, welcome.

Hect. I thank thee, most imperious Agamemnon. [Æneas and Troilus advance.

Agam. [To Troilus] My well-fam'd lord of Troy, no less to you.

Men. Let me confirm my princely brother's greeting;— You brace of warlike brothers, welcome hither.

Hect. Who must we answer?

Æne. The noble Menelaus.

Hect. O, you, my lord? by Mars his gauntlet, thanks!

Mock not, that I affect th' untrad'st oath; Your quondam wife swears still by Venus' glove:

She's well, but bade me not commend her to you.

Men. Name her not now, sir; she's a deadly theme.

Hect. O, pardon; I offend.]

Nest. [To Hector] I have, thou gallant Trojan, seen thee oft,

\(^{1}\) Dexter, right.  \(^{2}\) Sinister, left.  \(^{3}\) Mirable, to be wondered at.  \(^{4}\) It, i.e. the expectance.  \(^{5}\) Sell, seldom.  \(^{6}\) Extant = present.  \(^{7}\) Bias-drawing, turning away.  \(^{8}\) Untrad'd, out of the beaten path, uncommon.
ACT IV. Scene 5.

Labouring for destiny, make cruel way
Through ranks of Greekish youth; and I have seen thee,
[As hot as Perseus, spur the Phrygian steed,
Despising many forfeits and subduements,]
When thou hast hung thy advanced sword
i’ th’ air,
Not letting it decline on the declin’d;
That I have said to some my standers-by,
“Lo, Jupiter is yonder, dealing life!”
[And I have seen thee pause and take thy breath,
When that a ring of Greeks have hemm’d thee in,
Like an Olympian wrestling: this have I seen;
But this thy countenance, still lock’d in steel,
I never saw till now.] I knew thy grandsire,
And once fought with him: he was a soldier good;
But, by great Mars, the captain of us all,
Never like thee. Let an old man embrace thee;
And, worthy warrior, welcome to our tents.
Æne. Tis the old Nestor.
Hect. Let me embrace thee, good old chronicle,
That hast so long walk’d hand in hand with time:—
Most reverend Nestor, I am glad to clasp thee.
Nest. I would my arms could match thee in contention,
As they contend with thee in courtesy.
Hect. I would they could.
Nest. Ha!
By this white beard, I’d fight with thee to-morrow:—
Well, welcome, welcome!—I have seen the time—
Ulyss. [Interrupting] I wonder now how yonder city stands
When we have here her base and pillar by us.
Hect. I know your favour, Lord Ulysses, well.
Ah, sir, there’s many a Greek and Trojan dead;
Since first I saw yourself and Diomed
In Ilion, on your Greekish embassy.
Ulyss. Sir, I foretold you then what would ensue:

My prophecy is but half his journey yet;
For yonder walls, that perty front your town,
Yond towers, whose wanton tops do buse the clouds,
Must kiss their own feet.

Hect. I must not believe you:
There they stand yet; and modestly I think,
The fall of every Phrygian stone will cost
A drop of Grecian blood: the end crowns all;
And that old common arbitrator, Time,
Will one day end it.

Ulyss. So to him we leave it.

[Most gentle and most valiant Hector, welcome:
After the general, I beseech you next
To feast with me, and see me at my tent.
Achil. [I shall forestall thee, Lord Ulysses, thou!—
]

Now, Hector, I have fed mine eyes on thee;
I have with exact view perus’d thee, Hector,
And quoted joint by joint.
Hect. Is this Achilles?
Achil. I am Achilles.
Hect. Stand fair, I pray thee: let me look on thee.
Achil. Behold thy fill.
Hect. Nay, I have done already.
Achil. Thou art too brief: I will the second time,
As I would buy thee, view thee limb by limb.
Hect. [O, like a book of sport thou ’lt read me o’er;
But there’s more in me than thou understand’st.

Why dost thou so oppress me with thine eye?
Achil. Tell me, you heavens, in which part of his body
Shall I destroy him? whether there, [or there,] or there?
[That I may give the local wound a name,
And make distinct the very breach whereout Hектор’s great spirit flew:]Answer me, heavens!
Hect. It would discredit the bless’d gods, proud man,
To answer such a question: stand again:
Think’st thou to catch my life so pleasantly
As to pree nominate in nice conjecture
Where thou wilt hit me dead?

1 Despising—not availing yourself of.
2 Perseus, i.e. lives forfeited in battle.
3 Subduements, victories.
4 Still, always.
5 Grandsire, i.e. Laomedon

6 Is but, has travelled but.
7 Buse, kiss.
8 Quoted, observed.
9 Prenominate, say beforehand.

297
TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

ACT IV. Scene 5.

Achil. I tell thee, yea.
Hect. Wert thou an oracle to tell me so,
I'd not believe thee. Henceforth guard thee
well; 228
For I'll not kill thee there, nor there, nor
there;
But, by the forge that stithied Mars his helm,
I'll kill thee every where, yes, o'er and o'er.—
You wisest Grecians, pardon me this brag,
His insolence draws folly from my lips;
But I'll endeavour deeds to match these words,
Or may I never—

Ajax. Do not chafe thee, cousin:—
And you, Achilles, let these threats alone,
Till accident or purpose bring you to 't: 232
You may have every day enough of Hector,
If you have stomach; the general state, I fear,
Can scarce entreat you to be odd with him.

Hect. I pray you, let us see you in the field:
We have had pelting wars, since you refus'd
The Grecians' cause.

Achil. Dost thou entreat me, Hector?
To-morrow do I meet thee, fell as death;
To-night all friends.

Hect. Thy hand upon that match.
Agam. First, all you peers of Greece, go to my tent; 271
There in the full° convive° we: afterwards,
As Hector's leisure and your bounties shall Concur together, severally entreat° him.—
Beat loud the tabourines, let the trumpets blow,
That this great soldier may his welcome know.

[Exeunt all except Troilus and Ulysses.

Tro. My Lord Ulysses, tell me, I beseech you,
In what place of the field doth Calchas keep Ulyss. At Menelaus' tent, most princely
Troilus:

There Diomed doth feast with him to-night;
Who neither looks upon the heaven nor earth,
But gives all gaze and bent of amorous view
On the fair Cressid.

Tro. Shall I, sweet lord, be bound to you so much,
After we part from Agamemnon's tent,
To bring me thither?

Ulyss. You shall command me, sir.
As gentle' tell me, of what honour was
This Cressida in Troy? Had she no lover there
That wails her absence?

Tro. O sir, to such as boasting show their scars 236
A mock is due. Will you walk on, my lord?
She was belov'd, she lov'd; she is, and doth:
But still sweet love is food for fortune's tooth.

[Exeunt.

ACT V.

Enter Achilles and Patroclus.

Achil. I'll heat his blood with Greekish wine to-night,
Which with myscimitar I'll cool to-morrow.—
Patroclus, let us feast him to the height.

Patr. Here comes Thersites.

Enter Thersites.

Achil. How now, thou core of envy!
Thou crusty batch ° of nature, what's the news?

1 Stithied, forged. 2 Pelting = paltry. 3 In the full, i.e. all together. 4 Convive, feast. 5 Entreat, entertain. 6 As gentle = as kindly tell me. 7 Batch = baked bread.
ACT V, Scene 1.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

ACT V, Scene 1.

rottendiseasestotheouthelutagriping rupturescatarrhsofgraveltheback lethargicsoldpalsiesraweyestdirt-rotten liverswheezinglungsbloodsfullofimposthumesciaticslimekinssuthethpalm incurablebone-acheandtherivelledfee-simplexof thetetter, take and take again such preposterous discoverys

Patr.Why, thou damnable box of envy, thou, what meanest thou to curse thys!

Ther. Do I curse thee?

Patr.Why, no, you ruinous butt; you whoreson indistinguishable cur, no.

Ther. No! why art thou, then, exasperate, thou idle immaterialskin of sleeve-silk, thou greensarcent flap for a sore eye, thou tassel of a prodigal’s purse, thou? Ah, how the poor world is pester’d with such waterflies,— diminutives of nature!

Patr. Out, gall!

Ther. Finch-egg!

Achil. My sweet Patroclus, I am thwarted quite
From my great purpose in to-morrow’s battle.
Here is a letter from Queen Hecuba;
A token from her daughter, my fair love;
Both taxing me and gaging me to keep
An oath that I have sworn. I will not break it:
Fall Greeks; fail fame; honour or go or stay;
My major vow lies here, this I’ll obey.—
Come, come, Theristes, help to trim my tent;
This night in banqueting must all be spent.—
Away, Patroclus!

[Exeunt Achilles and Patroclus into tent.

Ther. With too much blood and too little brain, these two may run mad; but, if with too much brain and too little blood they do, I’ll be a curer of madmen. Here’s Agamem-non,—an honest fellow enough, and one that loves quails; but he has not so much brain as ear-wax: and the godly transformation of Jupiter there, his brother, the bull.—the primitive statue, and oblique memorial of cuckoolds;
a thrifty shoeing-horn in a chain, hanging at his brother’s leg,—to what form, but that he is, should wit larded with malice, and malice forced with wit, turn him to? To an ass, were nothing; he is both ass and ox: to an ox, were nothing; he is both ox and ass. To be a dog, a mule, a cat, a fitchew;7 a toad, a lizard, an owl, a puttock, or a herring without a roe,
I would not care;8 but to be Menelaus!—I would conspire against destiny. Ask me not what I would be, if I were not Therites; for I care not to be the louse of a lazar,9 so I were not Menelaus.—Hoy-day!—spirits and fires!

Enter Hector, Troilus, Ajax, Agamemnon, Ulysses, Nestor, Menelaus, and Diomedes,
with lights.

Agam. We go wrong, we go wrong.

Ajax. No, yonder ’tis;

There, where we see the lights.

Hect. I trouble you.

Ajax. No, not a whit.

Ulyss. Here comes himself to guide you.

Re-enter Achilles from tent.

Achil. Welcome, brave Hector; welcome, princes all.

Agam. So now, fair prince of Troy, I bid good night.

Ajax commands the guard to tend on you.

Hect. Thanks and good night to the Greeks’ general.

[Men. Good night, my lord.

Hect. Good night, sweet Lord Menelaus.

Ther. Sweet draught: sweet, quoth a’! sweet sink, sweet sewer.]

Achil. Good night and welcome, both at once, to those
That go or tarry.

Agam. Good night.

[Aeunet Agamemnon and Menelaus.

Achil. Old Nestor tarries; and you too,
Diomed,
Keep Hector company an hour or two.

Dio. I cannot, lord; I have important business,
The tide whereof is now.—Good night, great Hector.

Hect. Give me your hand.

1 Rivelled, wrinkled. 2 Discoveries, monstrousities.
3 Immaterial, slight, worthless. 4 Taxing, blaming.
5 Shoeing-horn, one subservient as a tool or instrument to another.
6 Forced, stuffed (Latin, farrire).
7 Fitchew, polecat.
8 Would not care, i.e. would not mind being.
9 Lazur, a leper, outcast.

299
ACT V. Scene 1.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

Ulyss. [Aside to Troilus] Follow his torch; he goes to Calchas' tent: I'll keep you company.

Tro. [Aside to Ulysses] Sweet air, you honour me.

Hect. And so, good night.

[Exit Diomedes; Ulysses and Troilus following.

Achil. Come, come, enter my tent.

[Exeunt Achilles, Hector, Ajax, and Nestor into tent.

Ther. That same Diomed's a false-hearted rogue, a most unjust knave; I will no more trust him when he leers than I will a serpent when he hisses: he will spend his mouth, and promise, like Brabbler the hound; but when he performs, astronomers foretell it; it is prodigious, there will come some change; the sun borrows of the moon when Diomed keeps his word. I will rather leave to see Hector than not to dog him: they say he keeps a Trojan drab, and uses the traitor Calchas' tent: I'll after.—[Nothing but lechery! all incontinent varlets!]

[Exit.

SCENE II. The same. Before Calchas' tent.

Enter Diomedes.

Dio. What, are you up here, ho! speak.

Cal. [Within] Who calls?

Dio. Diomed.—Calchas, I think. Where's your daughter?

Cal. [Within] She comes to you.

Enter Troilus and Ulysses, at some distance; after them Thersites.

Ulyss. Stand where the torch may not discover us.

Enter Cressida from tent.

Tro. Cressid comes forth to him.

Dio. How now, my charge!

Cres. Now, my sweet guardian!—Hark, a word with you.

[Whispers.

Tro. Yes, so familiar!

Ulyss. She will sing any man at first sight.

[Ther. And any man may sing her, if he can take her cliff; she's noted.]

Dio. Will you remember?

Cres. Remember! yea.

Dio. Nay, but do, then; and let your mind be coupled with your words.

Tro. What should she remember?

Ulyss. List.

Cres. Sweet honey Greek, tempt me no more to folly.

Ther. Roguery!

Dio. Nay, then,—

Cres. I'll tell you what,—

Dio. Foh, foh! come, tell a pin: you are forsworn.

Cres. In faith, I cannot: what would you have me do?

[Ther. A juggling trick,—to be secretly open.]

Dio. What did you swear you would bestow on me?

Cres. I prithee, do not hold me to mine oath; bid me do any thing but that, sweet Greek.

Dio. Good night.

Tro. Hold, patience!

Ulyss. How now, Trojan!

Cres. Diomed,—

Dio. No, no, good night: I'll be your fool no more.

Tro. Thy better must.

Cres. Hark, one word in your ear.

Tro. O plague and madness!

Ulyss. You are mov'd, prince; let us depart, I pray you, lest your displeasure should enlarge itself to wrathful terms: this place is dangerous; the time right deadly; I beseech you, go.

[Tro. Behold, I pray you!

Ulyss. Nay, good my lord, go off: you flow to great distraction; come, my lord.

Tro. I pray thee, stay.

Ulyss. You have not patience; come.

Tro. I pray you, stay; by hell and all hell's torments, I will not speak a word!

Dio. And so, good night.

Cres. Nay, but you part in anger.

Tro. Doth that grieve thee?

O wither'd truth!

Ulyss. Why, how now, lord!

\footnote{1 Cliff, i.e. clef; a term in music = key.}

\footnote{2 Thy better, meaning himself. 3 Enlarge, vent itself.}

300
TROIUS AND CRESSIDA.

ACT V. Scene 2.

Tro. I will be patient.

Cres. Guardian!—why, Greek?

Dio. Foh, foh! adieu; you palter. 1

Cres. In faith, I do not: come hither once again.

Ulyss. You shake, my lord, at something: will you go?

You will break out.

Tro. She strokes his cheek!

Ulyss. Nay, stay; by Jove, I will not speak a word:

There is between my will and all offences
A guard of patience:—stay a little while.

[Ther. How the devil luxury, with his fat rump and potato-finger, tickles these together! Fry, lechery, fry!]

Dio. But will you, then?

Cres. In faith, I will, la; never trust me else.

Dio. Give me some token for the surety of it.

Cres. I'll fetch you one. [Exit into tent.

Ulyss. You have sworn patience.

Tro. Fear me not, sweet lord; I will not be myself, nor have cognition Of what I feel: I am all patience.

Re-enter Cressida from tent.

Ther. Now the pledge; now, now, now!

Cres. Here, Diomed, keep this sleeve.

[Giving him the sleeve given her by Troilus.

Tro. O beauty! where is thy faith?

Ulyss. My lord,—

Tro. I will be patient; outwardly I will.

Cres. You look upon that sleeve; behold it well.—

He lov'd me—O false wench!—Give't me again.

Cres. Sweet honey Greek, tempt me no more to folly.—(Act v. 2. 12.)

Dio. Whose was't?

Cres. It is no matter, now I have't again. I will not meet with you to-morrow night: I prithee, Diomed, visit me no more.

Ther. Now she sharpens:—well said, whetstone!

Dio. I shall have it.

Cres. What, this?

Dio. Ay, that.

Cres. O all you gods!—O pretty, pretty pledge! Thy master now lies thinking in his bed Of thee and me; and sighs, and takes my glove, And gives memorial dainty kisses to it, As I kiss thee. [Kissing the sleeve; Diomed snatches it from her] Nay, do not snatch it from me; He that takes that doth take my heart withal.

Dio. I had your heart before, this follows it.

Tro. I did swear patience.

70

1 Palter, trifle.
ACT V. Scene 2.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

Cres. You shall not have it, Diomed; faith, you shall not;
I'll give you something else.
Dio. I will have this: whose was it?
Cres. 'Tis no matter.
Dio. Come, tell me whose it was.
Cres. 'Twas one's that lov'd me better than you will.
But, now you have it, take it.
Dio. Whose was it?
Cres. By all Diana's waiting-women yond, and by herself, I will not tell you whose.
Dio. To-morrow will I wear it on my helm; And grieve his spirit that dares not challenge it.
Tro. Wert thou the devil, and wor'st it on thy horn, It should be challeng'd.
Cres. Well, well, 'tis done, 'tis past;—and yet it is not; I will not keep my word.
Dio. Why, then, farewell; Thou never shalt mock Diomed again.
Cres. You shall not go:—one cannot speak a word, But it straight starts you.
Dio. I do not like this fooling.
Ther. Nor I, by Pluto: but that that likes not you pleases me best.
Dio. What, shall I come? the hour?
Cres. Ay, come:—O Jove!—do come:—I shall be plagu'd.
Dio. Farewell till then.
Cres. Good night: I prithee, come.

[Exit Diomedes.

Troilus, farewell! one eye yet looks on thee; But with my heart the other eye doth see.
Ah, poor our sex! this fault in us I find, The error of our eye directs our mind: [What error leads must err; O, then conclude Mind sway'd by eyes are full of turpitude.] [Exit.

Ther. A proof of strength she could not publish more,
Unless she said, "My mind is now turn'd whore."

Ulyss. All's done, my lord.
Tro. It is.

Ulyss. Why stay we, then?
Tro. To make a recordation to my soul Of every syllable that here was spoke. But [if I tell how these two did co-act, Shall I not lie in publishing a truth? Sith] yet there is a credence in my heart, [An esperance so obstinately strong,] That doth invert th' attest of eyes and ears; [As if those organs had deceptive functions, Created only to calumniate.] [Pause, overcome by emotion.
Was Cressid here?
Ulyss. I cannot conjure, Trojan.
Tro. She was not, sure.
Ulyss. Most sure she was.
[Tro. Why, my negation hath no taste of madness.
Ulyss. Nor mine, my lord: Cressid was here but now.] [Pause.
Tro. Let it not be believ'd for womanhood! Think, we had mothers; do not give advantage To stubborn critics,—apit, without a theme, For depravation,—to square the general sex By Cressid's rule: rather think this not Cressid. Ulyss. What hath she done, prince, that can soil our mothers? Tro. Nothing at all, unless that this were she. Ther. Will be swagger himself out on's own eyes?

Tro. This she? no, this is Diomed's Cressid:
If beauty have a soul, this is not she;
If souls guide vows, if vows be sanctimonies,
If sanctimonies be the gods' delight, If there be rule in unity itself,
This is not she. [O madness of discourse, That cause sets up with and against itself! Bi-fold authority! where reason can revolt Without perdition, and lose assume all reason Without revolt:] this is, and is not, Cressid! Within my soul there doth conduce a fight Of this strange nature, that a thing inseparable Divides more wider than the sky and earth; [And yet the spacious breadth of this division Admits no orifex for a point, as subtle As Ariachne's broken web, to enter. ] Instance, O instance! strong as Pluto's gates; Cressid is mine, tied with the bonds of heaven:

1 Diana's waiting-women, i.e. the stars.
2 Yond, yonder.
3 Poor our sex, i.e. our poor sex.

302

Taste, suggestion in it.
4 Swagger himself, &c. = persuade himself he never saw.
5 Orifex, orifice.
TROILUS AND CRESSIDA
Act V, Scene III, line 16

Cass. The gods are dead! to hot and perishing men.
ACT V. Scene 2.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

ACT V. Scene 3.

Ther. Would I could meet that rogue Diomed! I would croak like a raven; I would bode, I would bode. [Patroclus will give me any thing for the intelligence of this whore; the parrot will not do more for an almond than he for a commodious drab.] Lechery, lechery; still, wars and lechery; nothing else holds fashion; a burning devil take them! [Exit.

SCENE III. Troy. Priam's palace.

Enter Hector and Andromache.

And. When was my lord so much ungently temper'd,
To stop his ears against admonishment?
Unarm, unarm, and do not fight to-day.
Hect. You train' me to offend you; get you in:
By all the everlasting gods, I'll go!
And. My dreams will, sure, prove ominous' to the day.
Hect. No more, I say.

Enter Cassandra.

Cas. Where is my brother Hector?
And. Here, sister; arm'd, and bloody in intent.
Consort with me in loud and dear petition,
Pursue us him on knees; for I have dream'd
Of bloody turbulence, and this whole night
Hath nothing been but shapes and forms of slaughter.

Cas. O, it is true.

Hect. Ho! bid my trumpet sound!
Cas. No notes of sally, for the heavens, sweet brother.
Hect. Be gone, I say: the gods have heard me swear.
Cas. The gods are deaf to hot and peevish vows:
They are polluted offerings, more abhor'd
Than spotted livers in the sacrifice.
And. O, be persuaded! do not count it holy
To hurt by being just: it is as lawful,
For we would give much, to use violent thefts,
And rob in the behalf of charity.
Cas. It is the purpose that makes strong the vow;

---

1 Oris, leavings
2 Fancy, love.
3 Constraining'd = compressed; an obvious Latinism.
4 Concupis, concupiscence.
5 Stand by, be compared with.
6 Train, lead.
7 Ominous, fatal.
8 For = because.
9 Use, practise.
But vows to every purpose must not hold:
Unarm, sweet Hector.

_Hect._

Hold you still, I say;
Mine honour keeps the weather of my fate:
Life every man holds dear; but the brave man
Holds honour far more precious-dear than life.

_Enter Troilus._

How now, young man! mean'st thou to fight
to-day?

And._ Cassandra, call my father to persuade.

[Exit Cassandra.

_Hect._

No, faith, young Troilus; doff thy harness, youth;
I am to-day i' the vein of chivalry:
Let grow thy sinews till their knots be strong,
And tempt not yet the brushes of the war.
Unarm thee, go; and doubt thou not, brave boy,
I'll stand to-day for thee, and me, and Troy.

_Tro._ Brother, you have a vice of mercy in you,
Which better fits a lion than a man.

_Hect._

What vice is that, good Troilus? chide me for it.

_Tro._ When many times the captive Grecians fall,
Even in the fan and wind of your fair sword,
You bid them rise, and live.

_Hect._ O, 'tis fair play.

_Tro._ Fool's play, by heaven, Hector.

_Hect._ How now! how now!

_Tro._ For the love of all the gods,
Let's leave the hermit pity with our mothers;
And when we have our armours buckled on,
The venom'd vengeance ride upon our swords,
Spur them to ruthless work, rein them from ruth.

_Hect._ Fie, savage, fie!

_Tro._ Hector, then 'tis wars.

_Hect._ Troilus, I would not have you fight
to-day.

_Tro._ Who should withhold me?
Not fate, obedience, nor the hand of Mars
Beckoning with fiery truncheon on my retire;
Not Priamus and Hecuba on knees,
Their eyes o'ergalled with recourse of tears;
Nor you, my brother, with your true sword drawn,
Oppos'd to hinder me, should stop my way,
But by my ruin.

1 Recourse, i.e. that come and go.

3 Engag'd, pledged.
ACT V. Scene 3.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

Go in, and cheer the town: we'll forth and fight;
Do deeds worth praise, and tell you them at night.
Pri. Farewell: the gods with safety stand about thee!

[Exeunt severally Priam and Hector.
Alarums.

TRO. They're at it, hark!—proud Diomed, believe,
I come to lose my arm, or win my sleeve.

As TROILUS is going out, enter from the other side PANDARUS.

PAN. Do you hear, my lord? do you hear?

TRO. Words, words, mere words, no matter from the heart;
The' effect doth operate another way.—(Act v. s. 107, 108.)

Tro. What now?
Pan. Here's a letter come from yond poor girl.

Tro. Let me read.

Pan. A whomson tisick, a whomson rascally tisick so troubles me, and the foolish fortune of this girl; and what one thing, what another, that I shall leave you one o'this days: and I have a rheum in mine eyes too; and such an ache in my bones, that, unless a man were curs'd,¹ I cannot tell what to think on't.—
What says she there?

Tro. Words, words, mere words, no matter from the heart;
Th' effect doth operate another way.—

[Tearing the letter.

Go, wind, to wind, there turn and change together.—

¹ Curs'd, by a witch, or some evil agency.

305 132
ACT V. Scene 4.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

My love with words and errors still she feeds;
But edifies another with her deeds.

[Exeunt severally.

SCENE IV. Plains between Troy and the Grecian camp.

Alarums: excursions. Enter Thermesites.

Therm. Now they are clapping-clawing one another; I'll go look on. That dissembling abominable varlet, Diomed, has got that same scurfy dotting foolish young knave's sleeve of Troy there in his helm: I would fain see them meet; that that young Trojan ass, [that loves the whore there,] might send that Greekish [whoremasterly] villain, with the sleeve, back to the dissembling luxurious drab, of a sleeveless errand. O the t’other side, the policy of those crafty swearing rascals—that stale old mouse-eaten dry cheese, Nestor, and that same dog-fox, Ulysses—is not proved worth a blackberry;—they set me up, in policy, that mongrel cur, Ajax, against that dog of as bad a kind, Achilles; and now is the cur Ajax prouder than the cur Achilles, and will not arm to-day; whereupon the Grecians begin to proclaim barbarism, and policy grows into an ill opinion.—Soft! here comes sleeve, and t’other.

Enter Diomedes, Troilus following.

Troilus. Fly not; for shouldst thou take the river Styx,
I would swim after.

Diomedes. Thou dost miscall retire:
I do not fly; but advantageous care
Withdrew me from the odds of multitude:
Have at thee!

[Therm. Hold thy whore, Grecian!—now for thy whore, Trojan!—now the sleeve, now the sleeve!]

[Exeunt Troilus and Diomedes, fighting.

Enter Hector.

Hector. What art thou, Greek? art thou for Hector's match?
Art thou of blood and honour?

Therm. No, no,—I am a rascal; a scurfy railing knave; a very filthy rogue.

Hect. I do believe thee;—live.

[Exit. Therm. God-a-mercy, that thou wilt believe me; but a plague break thy neck for frightening me!—What's become of the wenching rogues? I think they have swallowed one another: I would laugh at that miracle:—yet, in a sort, lechery eats itself.] I'll seek them. [Exit.

SCENE V. Another part of the plains.

Enter Diomedes and a Servant.

Dio. Go, go, my servant, take thou Troilus’ horse;
Present the fair steed to my lady Cressid:
Fellow, commend my service to her beauty;
Tell her I have chastis’d the amorous Trojan,
And am her knight by proof.

Serv. I go, my lord. [Exit.

Enter Agamemnon.

Agamemnon. Renew, renew! The fierce Polydames Hath beat down Menon: [bastard Margareton Hath Doreus prisoner, And stands colossus-wise, waving his beam, Upon the passed corses of the kings.
Epitrophon and Cedius: Polyxenes is slain;
Amphimachus and Thoas deadly hurt;
Patroclus ta’en or slain; and Palamedes
Sore hurt and bruis’d: the dreadful Sagittary Appals our numbers:—haste we, Diomed, To reinforcement, or we perish all.

Enter Nestor.

Nestor. Go, bear Patroclus’ body to Achilles; And bid the mail-pac’d Ajax arm for shame.— There is a thousand Hector’s in the field: Now here he fights on Galathe his horse,
And there lacks work; anon he’s there afoot,
And there they fly or die, like scaled sculls.
Before the belching whale; then is he yonder,
And there the stravv Greek, ripe for his edge,
Fall down before him, like the mower’s swath.
Here, there, and every where, he leaves and takes;
Dexterity so obeying appetite,
That what he will he does; and does so much,
That proof is call’d impossibility.

1 Barbarism, mere strength, force, opposed to policy.
ACT V. Scene 5.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

Enter Ulysses.

Ulyss. O, courage, courage, princes! great Achilles
Isarming, weeping, cursing, vowing vengeance:
Patroclus' wounds have roused his drowsy blood,
Together with his mangled Myrmidons,
That noseless, handless, hack'd and chipp'd,
come to him,
Crying on Hector. Ajax hath lost a friend,
And foams at mouth, and he is arm'd and at it,
Roaring for Troilus; who hath done to-day
Mad and fantastic execution;
Engaging and redeeming of himself, With such a carelesse force and forcelesse care,
As if that luck, in very spite of cunning,
Bade him win all.

Enter Ajax.

Dio. Ay, there, there.

Nest. So, so, we draw together.

[ Enter Achilles.

Achil. Where is this Hector?—
Come, come, thou boy-queller, show thy face;
Know what it is to meet Achilles angry:—
Hector! where's Hector? I will none but Hector. ]

[ Exit.

SCENE VI. Another part of the plains.

Enter Ajax.

Ajax. Troilus, thou coward Troilus, show thy head!

Enter Diomedes.

Dio. Troilus, I say! where's Troilus?

Ajax. What wouldst thou?

Dio. I would correct him.

Ajax. Were I the general, thou shouldst have my office
Ere that correction.—Troilus, I say! what,
Troilus!

Enter Troilus.

Tro. O traitor Diomed!—turn thy false face, thou traitor,
And pay the life thou ow'st me for my horse!

Dio. Ha, art thou there?

Ajax. I'll fight with him alone: stand, Diomed.

Dio. He is my prize; I will not look upon.

Tro. Come, both you cogging Greeks; have at you both! [Exeunt, fighting.

[ Enter Hector.

Hect. Yea, Troilus? O, well fought, my youngest brother!

Enter Achilles.

Achil. Now do I see thee, ha!—have at thee,
Hector!

Hect. Pause, if thou wilt.

Achil. I do disdain thy courtesy, proud Trojan:
Be happy that my arms are out of use:
My rest and negligence befriended thee now,
But thou anon shalt hear of me again;
Till when, go seek thy fortune. [Exit.

Hect. Fare thee well:—
I would have been much more a fresher man,
Had I expected thee.

Re-enter Troilus.

How now, my brother!

Tro. Ajax hath ta'en Æneas: shall it be?

No, by the flame of yonder glorious heaven,
He shall not carry him; I'll be ta'en too,
Or bring him off:—fate, hear me what I say!
I reck not though I end my life to-day. [Exit.

Enter one in sumptuous armour.

Hect. Stand, stand, thou Greek; thou art a goodly mark:—
No? wilt thou not?—I like thy armour well;
I'll frush it, and unlock the rivets all,
But I'll be master of it:—wilt thou not, beast, abide?
Why, then fly on, I'll hunt thee for thy hide.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VII. Another part of the plains.

Enter Achilles with Myrmidons.

Achil. Come here about me, you my Myrmidons;
Mark what I say. Attend me where I wheel:

---

1 Redeeming, &c., i.e. rescuing himself from the foe.

2 Cogging, cheating.

3 Frush, batter.
Strike not a stroke, but keep yourselves in breath:
And when I have the bloody Hector found,
Empale him with your weapons round about;
In fellest manner execute your aims.
Follow me, sirs, and my proceedings eye:
It is decreed Hector the great must die. [Exeunt.

Enter Menelaus and Paris, fighting; then Thersites.

Thers. The cuckold and the cuckold-maker are at it.—Now, bull! now, dog! 'Loo, Paris, 'loo! now my double-henned sparrow! 'loo, Paris, 'loo!—The bull has the game:—ware horns, ho! [Exeunt Paris and Menelaus.

Enter Margareton.

Mar. Turn, slave, and fight.
Thers. What art thou?
Thers. I am a bastard too; I love bastards:
I am a bastard begot, bastard instructed, bastard in mind, bastard in valour, in every thing illegitimate. One bear will not bite another, and wherefore should one bastard? Take heed, the quarrel's most ominous to us: if the son of a whore fight for a whore, he tempts judgment:¹ farewell, bastard. [Exit.

Mar. The devil take thee, coward! [Exit.

Scene VIII. Another part of the plains.

Enter Hector.

Hec. [Most putrefied core, so fair without,
Thy goodly armour thus hath cost thy life.] Now is my day's work done; I'll take good breath:
Rest, sword; thou hast thy fill of blood and death. [Puts off his helmet, and hangs his shield behind him.

¹ Judgment, i.e. of heaven.

308
Enter Achilles and Myrmidons.

Ach. Look, Hector, how the sun begins to set;
How ugly night comes breathing at his heels:
Even with the vail and darkening of the sun,
To close the day up, Hector’s life is done.

Hect. I am unarmed; forego this vantage, Greek.

Ach. Strike, fellows, strike; this is the man I seek.

[Hector falls.

So, Illion, fall thou next! now, Troy, sink down!

Here lies thy heart, thy sinews, and thy bone.—
On, Myrmidons; and cry you all amain,
"Achilles hath the mighty Hector slain."

[A retreat sounded.

Hark! a retire upon our Grecian part.

Myr. The Trojan trumpets sound the like, my lord.

Ach. The dragon wing of night o’er spreads the earth,
And, stickler-like, the armies separates.

My half-supp’d sword, that frankly would have fed,
Please’d with this dainty bait, thus goes to bed.

Sheathes his sword.

Come, tie his body to my horse’s tail;—
Along the field I will the Trojan trail.

[Exeunt.

Scene IX. Another part of the plains.

Enter Agamemnon, Ajax, Menelaus, Nestor, Diomedes, and others, marching. Shouts within.

Agam. Hark! hark! what shout is that?

Nest. Peace, drums!

[Within] Achilles! Achilles! Hector’s slain!

Achilles! Dio. The bruit is, Hector’s slain, and by Achilles.

Ajax. If it be so, yet bragless let it be;
Great Hector was a man as good as he.

Agam. March patiently along;—let one be sent
To pray Achilles see us at our tent.—

If in his death the gods have us befriended,
Great Troy is ours, and our sharp wars are ended.

[Exeunt, marching.

Scene X. Another part of the plains.

Enter Æneas and Trojans.

Æne. Stand, ho! yet are we masters of the field:
Never go home; here starve we out the night.

Enter Troilus.

Tro. Hector is slain.

All. Hector!—the gods forbid!

Tro. He’s dead; and at the murderer’s horse’s tail,
In beastly sort, dragg’d through the shameful field.—

Frown on, you heavens, effect your rage with speed!

Sit, gods, upon your thrones, and smile at Troy!

I say, at once let your brief plagues be mercy,
And linger not our sure destructions on!

Æne. My lord, you do discomfort all the host.

Tro. You understand me not that tell me so:
I do not speak of flight, of fear, of death;
But dare all imminence that gods and men
Address their dangers in. Hector is gone:
Who shall tell Priam so, or Hecuba?

Let him that will a screech-owl aye be call’d,
Go into Troy, and say there “Hector’s dead.”

[There is a word will Priam turn to stone;

Make wells and Niobes of the maids and wives,
Cold statues of the youth; and, in a word,
Scare Troy out of itself. But, march away:
Hector is dead; there is no more to say.

Stay yet.—] You vile abominable tents,
Thus proudly pight upon our Phrygian plains,
Let Titan rise as early as he dare,
I’ll through and through you!—and, thou great-siz’d coward,
No space of earth shall sunder our two hates:
I’ll haunt thee like a wicked conscience still,
That mouldeth goblins swift as frenzy thoughts.—

Strike a free march to Troy!—with comfort go:

[Shouts.]

1 Vail, descent.
2 A retire, i.e. the sound for retiring.
3 Stickler-like, umpire-like. 4 Frankly, to the full.

5 Linger on—protract. 6 Fight, pitched.
Hope of revenge shall hide our inward woe.

[Exeunt Æneas and Trojans.

[As Troilus is going out, enter, from the other side, Pandarus.

Pan. But hear you, hear you!

Tro. Hence, broker-lackey! ignominy and shame
Pursue thy life, and live aye with thy name!

[Exit.

Pan. A goodly medicine for my aching bones!—

O world! world! world! thus is the poor agent despised! O traitors and bawds, how earnestly are you set a-work, and how ill requited! why should our endeavour be so loved, and the performance so loathed? what verse for it? what instance for it?—Let me see:

Fully merrily the humble-bee doth sing,
Till he hath lost his honey and his sting;
And being once subdued in armed tail,
Sweet honey and sweet notes together fail.—

Good traders in the flesh, set this in your painted cloths.

As many as be here of pander's hall,
Your eyes, half out, weep out at Pandar's fall;
Or if you cannot weep, yet give some groans,
Though not for me, yet for your aching bones.
Brethren and sisters of the hold-door trade,
Some two months hence my will shall here be made:
It should be now, but that my fear is this,—
Some galled goose of Winchester would his:
Till then I'll sweat, and seek about for cates;
And at that time bequeath you my diseases.

[Exit.]
NOTES TO TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

PROLOGUE.

1. Lines 1–31.—This prologue is not given in the Quarto; it is only found in the Folio. Ritson and Steevens condemn it as not genuine, and amongst modern critics Mr. Fleay finds in the lines "much work that is unlike Shakespeare's" (Life and Work of Shakespeare, p. 299). Grant White attributed the authorship to Chapman.

2. Line 1: In Troy, there lies the scene.—Not an unusual beginning: so the prologue to the Broken Heart (Ford) commences, "Our scene is Sparta."

3. Line 8: whose strong immures.—We have the verb several times in Shakespeare; e.g. Venus and Adonis, 1194:

   "Mene to immure herself and not be seen;"

   Richard III. iv. 1. 109; Sonnet xxxv. 8. Mure, substantive, occurs in II. Henry IV. iv. 4. 119; circummure in Measure for Measure, iv. 1. 28.

4. Line 15: Prisim’s six-gated city.—So the Folio. Theobald, to suit the plural verb, sperr up, below (line 19), needlessly changed to "six gates i the city," and was followed by Hamner.

5. Line 17: Antenorides.—P. have Antenonidus; the change (Theobald’s), adopted by most editors, appears necessary. Shakespeare is obviously following the account in Caxton’s Destruction of Troy, where, in the third book, a description of Troy is given: "In this city were six gates; the one was named Dardane, the second Timbria, the third Helias, the fourth Chetas, the fifth Troyen, and the sixth Antenorides" (Destruction, bk. 3, p. 4, ed. 1706). Dyce, too, quotes Lydgate, The history, Sege and dystruccyon of Troye:

   "The fourth gate hyghe also Cethesa;"

   The fyfe Troiana, the synth Anthonyses, where the edition of 1555 alters Anthonyses to the nearly right reading Antinories.

6. Line 18: FULFILLING bolts; i.e. which fill the aperture so closely that no room is left; for this, the etymological sense of the word, we may compare Lucrece, 1258.

7. Line 19: SPERR up the sons of Troy.—V. 1 has stirre, out of which no meaning can be got. Theobald made the admirable suggestion sperr; Collier’s MS. Corrector had sparr in the same sense. The use of the word is well supported. Thus Spenser, in The Faerie Queene, writes:

   "The other which was entered laboured fast
   To sperr the gate."

   —Bk. v. c. x. st. xxxvii.
NOTES TO TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

ACT I. Scene 1.

11. Line 7: and shrewd to their strength.—For Shakespeare's use of "to"-"in addition to," see Abbott's Shakespearean Grammar, pp. 121, 122. Compare Macbeth, iii. 1, 51-53:

"'tis much he dares;
And, to that dauntless temper of his mind,
He hath a wisdom;
and same play, i. 6. 19.

12. Line 14: I'll not meddle nor make.—Evidently a proverbial phrase, equivalent to "I will keep clear of it." Cf. line 56. So in Much Ado, iii. 3. 56: "and, for such kind of men, the less you meddle or make with them, why, the more is for your honesty."

13. Lines 30, 31:

And when fair Cressid comes into my thoughts,—
So, traitor!—"when she comes!"—"When is she thence?"

We have here an excellent correction of the text. Q. and F. 1 and F. 2 gave:

then she comes, when she is thence.

The change is unimpeachable; the credit is due to Rowe, second edn.

14. Line 41: An her hair were not somewhat darker.—This is one of the many allusions that might be quoted to the distress felt by our ancestors for dark hair and eyes. Walker (A Critical Examination of the Text of Shakespeare, vol. iii. p. 190) aptly refers to Massinger's Parliament of Love, where, in act ii. scene 3, Beaupré says:

Like me, sir!

One of my dark complexion?

—Massinger's Works, Cunningham's ed. p. 177.

Still more to the point, however, is Bonnet cxvii, the first of the second great series of sonnets:

In the old age black was not counted fair,
Or if it were, it bore not beauty's name;
But now is black beauty's successive heir,
And beauty slander'd with a baleful shame.

Therefore my mistress' brows are raven black,
Her eyes so suited, and they mourners seem
At such who, not born fair, no beauty lack,
Slandering creation with a false esteem.

Compare Love's Labour's Lost, iii. 198, 199, and the note (197) on Midsummer Night's Dream, iii. 2. 257. Red hair was regarded by the Puritans as a decided blemish; cf. Middleton's A Chaste Maid in Cheapside, iii. 2 (Dyce's ed.), vol. iv. p. 47.

15. Line 56: Handlist in thy discourse, 0, that her hand.—For a similar word-play compare Titus Andronicus, i. 2. 19. Malone well remarks upon the curious reference which Shakespeare seems to have felt for the beauty of a woman's hand. Note, for instance, the delicacy and suggestiveness of the epithet and imagery in the following passages: Romeo and Juliet, iii. 2. 35, 36, where we have the splendid lines:

they may seize

On the white wonder of dear Juliet's hand;

Winter's Tale, iv. 4. 573-576:

this hand,
As soft as dove's down and as white as it.
Or Ethiopian's tooth, or the fam'd snow, that's bolted
By the northern blasts thrice o'er;
and Lucrece, 393–396, a perfect picture:
Without the bed her other fair hand was,
On the green covert; whose perfect white
Shone like an April daisy on the grass.

[In the Q. the punctuation is thus:
Endless in thy discourse: O that her hand.
The Ff. have:
Handless in thy discourse: O that her Hand.

Some editors, having regard to the punctuation of the old copies, make the verb handless govern some of the nouns in the line above. Capell, for instance, puts a semicolon after guest in line 54, making her voice governed by handless. Malone was the first to punctuate line 55 as it is in our text. Other conjectures have been made by various editors in order to make the passage intelligible. With regard to the punctuation of the old copies, certainly O that her hand seems more like an exclamation than the object of the sentence; but if we take that her hand to be the accusative case, and explain it as we have in our footnote, then we must suppose O to be strictly a mere interjection, a parenthetical expression of rapture. For that her hand = "that hand of hers" compare the following passages: Antony and Cleopatra, ii. 2. 19: "They deman that thy spirit;" and in the same play, iv. 14. 79: "Draw that thy honest sword;" and also Macbeth, i. 7. 55: "that their fitness."—P. A. X.

16. Line 57: to whose soft seizure—Seizure is used passively; touch would be more natural.

17. Lines 58, 59:
The eunuch’s down is harsh, and spirit of sense
Hard as the palm of ploughman.

These lines are not easy. What are we to make of spirit of sense? Warburton, of course, emended, proposing spirit of sense; upon which Johnson bluntly remarked: "It is not proper to make a lover profess to praise his mistress in spirit of sense; for though he often does it in spite of the sense of others, his own senses are subdued to his desires." I see no necessity for any alteration. I think the sense is: "sense, i.e. sensibility personified, is not so delicate, so impalpable, as Cressida’s hand." I believe the words can bear this interpretation, and it seems to me to carry the line of thought. To make spirit of sense a mere variant on whose soft seizure is surely wrong; the lines contain two distinct conceptions. Also we must not press hard as the palm, etc. too closely; the poet merely wishes to suggest something rough and coarse in contrast to that which, next to Cressida’s hand, is the most ethereal thing we can conceive, viz. sensibility itself. Compare iii. 3. 106, and Julius Caesar, iv. 2. 74.

18. Line 68: she has the mends in her own hands.—This, as Steevens satisfactorily shows, was a cant phrase meaning "to make the best of a bad bargain; do the best one can." In this sense it is used by Field in his Woman is A Weathercock, 1612: "I shall stay here and have my head broke, and then I have the mends in my own hands" (Dodgley, Old Plays, ed. Carew Hazlitt (1875), vol. xi. p. 25). Johnson’s interpretation of the passage is characteristic: "She may mend her complexion with the assistance of cosmetics," on the principle apparently advocated in Randolph’s Jealous Lovers, iv. 3:
Paint, ladies, while you live, and plaster fair,
But when the house is fallen, ’tis past repair.

19. Lines 78, 79: as fair on Friday as Helen is on Sunday.—Friday being a fast day when the "suit of humiliation" would be worn, while Sunday is a signal for donning smart attire. It is hardly necessary to point out the glaring anachronism; the play is full of such errors.

20. Line 90: And he’s as tetchy to be woo’d; i.e. "fretful;" a corruption, perhaps, of "toughy." So Romeo and Juliet, i. 3. 32.
To see it tetchy, and fall out.

21. Line 106: Let it be call’d the wild and wandering flood.—A finely alliterative effect that comes in the last verse of the introductory stanza to In Memoriam. Later on in the same poem Tennyson beautifully applies the epithet wandering to the sea:
O Mother, praying God will save
Thy sailor—while thy head is bow’d,
His heavy-shotted hammock abroad
Drops in his east and wandering grave. —Canto vi.

22. Line 108: How now, Prince Troilus! wherefore not a-field!—Troilus is always a dissolute in Shakespeare; so Walker, Shakespeare’s Verification, pp. 164–165. Thus in Lucrece, 1456, we have:
Here many Hector faints, here Troilus swounds.
Again in the Merchant of Venice, in the almost incomparable first scene of the fifth act, lines 3, 4:

in such a night
Troilus methinks mounted the Trojan wall.
The only possible exception occurs in the present play, v. 2. 101, where the common reading is:
May worthy Troilus be half attach’d?
Probably Shakespeare thought the name was derived from Troy. Peele, we may note, treats the word rightly as a trisyllable; e.g. Tale of Troy:
So hardy was the true knight Troilus.
—Peele’s Works, p. 555.

23. Line 109: this woman’s answer sorts.—Troilus means that the logic of his reply—"not there because not there"—is the logic, or rather no-logic, in which women indulge; and then he proceeds to play upon woman, womanish.

24. Line 115: Paris is gird’d with Mentor’s horn.—Alluding to the idea of which our old dramatists make perpetual mention, that the husband of an unfaithful wife was a cuckold, or as Mirabel says in The Wild Goose Chase, i. 3: "a gentleman of antler." Perhaps the most elaborate treatment of the subject comes in Middleton’s A Chaste Maid in Cheapside, where we hardly know whether most to ridicule or to despise the complacent Allwit. Similar references occur later on in this play.

ACT I. Scene 2.

25. Line 8: he was harnessed light.—Light may refer to the weight of their armour; more probably, however, it means "nimblly," "quickly." Theobald needlessly altered to "harness-dight," a reading, he remarked, which "gives us the poet's meaning in the properest terms imaginable." He was followed by Hamner.
26. Lines 9, 10:

where EVERY FLOWER

Did, as a prophet, WEEP.

So in Midsummer Night's Dream, iii. 1. 204;

And when she weeps, WEEP every little FLOW\n
Dew on the ground naturally suggests tears.

27. Line 15: a very man PER SE.—Gray refers to the Testament of Cresseide:

Of faire Cresseide, the Soure and a PER SE
Of Troi and Greece.

28. Line 20: their particular ADDITIONS.—Here, as often, in the sense of "titles," "denominations." Malone says it was a law term, and in Cowell's Interpreter (ed. 1637) Addition is thus explained, "a title given to a man over and above his Christian and surname, shewing his estate, degree, occupation, trade, age, place of dwelling, &c."
Compare Coriolanus, i. 9. 66; and for an instance outside Shakespeare, Bussy D'Amblois, iv. 1:

Man is a name of honour for a king:

Additions take away from each thing.

—Chapman's Works, p. 163.

29. Line 28: merry AGAINST THE HAIR.—Compare a contre-poil: as we should say, "against the grain." The idea came from stroking the fur of animals the reverse way. Justice Shallow uses the expression in Merry Wives,
il. 3. 41:

if you should fight, you go AGAINST THE HAIR of your professions.

30. Line 46: When were you at ILIUM?—Shakespeare, as Hamner and the other editors point out, applies the same Ilium only to Priam's palace, and not to the city at large. In this he was following Caxton's Destruction of Troy, where the palace is thus described: "In this open space of the city, upon a rock, King Priamus did build his rich palace named Ilium, that was one of the richest and strongest in all the world. It was of height five hundred paces, besides the height of the towers, whereof there was great plenty, so high, as it seemed to them that saw from far, they reach Heaven. And in this palace King Priamus did make the richest Hall that was at that time in all the world: within which was his throne;
and the table whereupon he did eat, and held his estate among his nobles, princes, lords, and barons, was of gold and silver, precious stones, and of ivory" (Ok. iii. p. 5, ed.
1705).

31. Line 55: he'll LAY ABOUT him to-day.—We have a similar expression in Henry V. v. 2. 147: "I could lay on like a butcher;" and compare Macbeth's, "Lay on, Macduff,;" v. 3. 83.

32. Line 80: gone barefoot to India.—A like exploit is suggested in Othello, iv. 3. 38, 39: "I know a lady in Venice would have walked barefoot to Palestine for a touch of his nether lip." We are reminded somewhat of the ve-cacious Chronicles of Sir John Mandeville.

33. Line 92: Hector shall not have his WIT; i.e. Troilus'
WIT. For wit Q. and F. read will. Rowe made the change.

34. Line 118: Then she's a MERRY GREEK.—Compare iv.
4. 53. It is a classical touch. See Horace, Satires, ii. 2.
where the hard life of a Roman soldier is contrasted with the easier, somewhat effeminate ways of the Greek:

Si Romana fatigat

Militia amasset, Gracius.

So in Plautus, Mostellaria, i. 1. 21, perrogocari = per totam notcem potare (O'Reilly). The idea passed into classical English; e.g. Ben Jonson, Volpone, iii. 5:

Let's die like Romans
Since we have lived like Grecians.

—Works. iii. p. 286, and Gifford's note.

Minasbeu (1617) gives (under Greeks) ""a merie Greeks, Hilarie Gracies, a Jester," and in Bolster Dolster one of the dramatis personae is Mathew Merrygreeks who throughout acts up to his name; cf. i. 1, Arber's Reprint, p. 13.
Nares (Halliwell's ed.) has a vague generalism: "the Greeks were proverbially spoken of by the Romans as fond of good living and free potations."

35. Line 120: into the COMPASS'D windowe.—For compass'd = "rounded," compare Venus and Adonis, 272:
"compass'd crest;" also "compass'd cape." (Taming of the Shrew, iv. 3. 140). "Row window" would be more intelligible to us. Compassed, according to Malone, was also applied to a particular kind of ceiling.

36. Line 129: so old a LIFTER.—A word that has only survived in the special phrases, shop/lifter and cattle-lifter. Though not found elsewhere in Shakespeare it occurs with tolerable frequency in the Elizabethan dramatists. So in Ben Jonson's Cynthia's Revels, i. 1, we have "one other peculiar virtue you possess, is lifting" (Works, vol. ii. 221). In Middleton's Roaring Girl, "cheaters, lifters and foists" are mentioned in the same sentence (Works, vol. iii. 546). Etymologically the word is best seen in the Gothic lifjan = to steal; cognate with Latin elepero (likeat).

37. Line 158: With mild-stones.—A proverbial phrase= not to weep at all, to be hard-hearted. Cf. Richard III.
il. 3. 554:

Your eyes drop mild-stones, when fools' eyes fall tears;
and see notes 160 and 204 of that play.

38. Line 171: Here's but one and fifty hairs.—Curiously enough Q. and F. unanimously give "two and fifty." The correction (Theobald's) ought, I think, to be adopted, though the Cambridge editors keep to the copies. Fifty was the traditional number of Priam's sons. Shakespeare, however, may have made the mistake.

39. Line 178: "The FORKED one."—See note 24; and compare Othello, iii. 3. 276:

Even then this for-baited plague is fate to us.

So, too, Winter's Tale, i. 2. 156, spoken appropriately enough by Leontes.

40. Line 182: that it PASSED.—The meaning is clear: "it was excessive, beggared description." So in Merry Wives of Windsor we have (i. 1. 310) "the women have so cried and shriek'd at it, that it pass'd," and later in the same play the verb occurs twice in the present tense, with the same meaning: "Why, this pass'd! Master Ford," iv. 2.
127, and line 143. See Timon of Athens, i. 1. 12, and com-pere the ordinary adjectival use of the participle, passing. For instances outside Shakespeare note Greene, Works, p. 100, and Peele, Works, p. 510.

41. Line 206: That's ASTERION: he has a shrewd wit.—Shakespeare, as Steevens points out, is thinking of Lydgate's description of Asterion:

Copious in words, and one that much time spent
To jest, whereas he was in company,
So drie, that no man could it spie:
And therewith held his comencesse so well,
That every man resorted great content
To heare him speake, and pretty jests to tel,
When he was pleasant and in merriment:
For troth that he most commonly was sad,
Yet in his speche some jest he alwayes had.

Asterion was one of the Trojan leaders who escaped; see Virgil's Æneid, I. 242-249.

42. Line 212: Will he GIVE you the NOD?—Steevens says that to give the nod was a card term. There certainly was a game called noddy, to which references are not infrequent. Compare, for instance, Westward Ho, lv. 1:

Bird. Come, shall's go to noddy?

Honey. Ay, an thou wilt, for half an hour.

—Webster's Works, p. 309.

In any case, Cressida is simply playing on the slang meaning of noddy, which then, as now, signified "a simpleton;" hence she hints that if Pandarus gets another nod he will be more of a noddy than ever. I find very much the same sort of quibble in Northward Ho, ll. 1:

'Soot, what tricks at noddy these are?

—Webster, p. 297.

Minaheu, I may add, has a very characteristic explanation of the word: "A Noddis; because he nods when he should speak—A fools" (Dictionary, 1817).

43. Line 228: by God's lid.—A curious oath, which seems, however, to have been proverbial. So in Field's A Woman is a Weathercock, v. 2, we have:

Why then, by God's lid, thou art a base rogue. I knew I should live to tell thee so.

For lid—eyelid, cf. Hamlet, i. 2. 70, 71:

Do not for ever with thy valued lid
Seek for thy noble father in the dust.

44. Line 245: HELENUS is a priest.—So in Carton's Destruction of Troy, bk. iii. p. 3, he is "a man that knew all the arts liberal." After the fall of Troy Helenus reappears in the third book of the Æneid, lines 235-305.

45. Line 250: baked with no DATES in the pie.—Plies with dates in them appear to have been almost as inevitable in Elizabethan cookery as the "green sauce" with which the dramatists garnished their dishes, or as those plates of prunes to which continual reference is made. Compare Romeo and Juliet, iv. 4. 2:

They call for dates and quinces in the pastry.

So, too, All's Well that Ends Well, i. 1. 172.

46. Line 258: at what WARD you lie.—The poet has borrowed a term from fencing. So in I. Henry IV. ii. 4.

 Thou knowest my old ward; here I say, and thus I bore my point.

47. Lines 304-306:

Pan. I'll be with you, niece, by and by.

Crea. To bring, uncle?

Pan. Ay, a token from Troilus.

This very obscure and doubtful expression to bring occurs in Peele's Sir Clymon and Sir Clamydes:

And I'll close with Bryan till I have gotten the thing

That he hath promised me, and then I'll be with him to bring.

—Peele's Works, p. 503.

Commenting on the passage just quoted, Dyce gives several other places where the phrase is found: Kyd's Spanish Tragedy, i. 2; Beaumont and Fletcher's Scornful Lady, v. 4; and Harington's Orlando Furioso, bk. xxxix.

48. In addition to these Grant White quotes from Tusser's Five Hundred Points of Good Husbandry:

For carman and coiler harps both on a string.
In winter they cast to be with thee to bring.

See also Dyce's Middle Temple, ii. 147, with his glossary to Shakespeare, p. 52. The meaning of the phrase cannot be determined; it was a piece of contemporary slang, the key to which has been lost. To bring, uncle! should certainly be printed as a query.

49. Lines 313: Things won are done; JOY'S SOUL lies in the doing.—That is to say, "the essence of the pleasure lies in the doing:"

—a fine expression. F. 2 and F. 3 have the soul's joy, a correction as obvious as it is tame and ineffective. Hamner preferred it. The best commentary on the thought developed in the passage is the great sonnet cxxix.:

The expense of spirit in a waste of shame
Is lust in action.

For the converse idea we may compare the Friar's speech in Much Ado, iv. 1. 230-235.

49. Lines 319-321:

Achievement is command; ungain'd, beseech:

Then, though my heart's content firm love doth bear,

Nothing of that shall from mine eyes appear.

If line 319 is to be altered, we should, I think, adopt (with Singer) Mr. Harrison's very ingenious suggestion—"Achieved, men us command." Collier's "Achieved men still command," seems to me far less satisfactory. I believe, however, that the text of the copies should be retained. The difficulty comes from the poet's characteristic compression of thought, and in such maxims the sense generally gains in concentration at the expense of the clearness of expression. Summarized, the lines mean:

"When men have won us they are our rulers; before they win us they are our suppliants." For achievement compare Taming of the Shrew, i. 2. 338:

Achieve the elder, set the younger free.

In the next line (320) Warburton took heart's content to signify "heart's capacity." Perhaps, however, Cressida simply means that love is the basis of her happiness.

ACT I. SCENE 3.

50. Lines 14, 15:

trial did draw

BIAS and thwart, not answering the aim.

These are bowling terms, best illustrated perhaps by a passage in King John, ii. 574-579:

Commodity, the bias of the world, The world, who of itself is peised well, Made to run even upon even ground, Till this advantage, this line-drawing bias,
ACT I. Scene 3.

NOTES TO TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

51. Lines 17-19:

Do you with cheeks abash'd behold our women, And call them shame.

Them must clearly refer back to works, which Walker condemns as "palpably wrong" (A Critical Examination, III. p. 192). Works, though not impossible, is certainly weak. We want a more definite word, implying "disgrace," "defeat," and it is tempting to adopt (as does Dyce) the correction of Collier's MS. Corrector wreaks. Singer less happily proposed mocks.

52. Line 32: Nestor shall apply.—Perhaps in the sense of "attend to."

53. Line 45: Or made a roast for Neptune.—Referring to the custom of soaking toast in wine. So in the Merry Wives, III. 5. 3, Falstaff, adorning Bardolph to fetch a quart of sack, adds: "put a toast in 't." In the passage before us the "sucky boat" is to be the dainty morsel for Neptune to swallow.

54. Line 48: The herd hath more annoyance by the breeze.—F. 1 has breeze here, and in the passage from Antony and Cleopatra, quoted below, brise. The word is also written brise, and in Minshew brisse; a species of stinging gadfly, often used metaphorically to signify something "stinging," "annoying." Cf. Antony and Cleopatra, III. 10. 14:

The brise upon her, like a cow in June.

So in Ben Jonson's The Poetaster, Ill. 1.:

I can hold no longer, This brise has prick'd my patience.

—Works, vol. II. p. 441.

It is, as Grey in his notes points out, the word used by Dryden in translating Georgics, III. 232:

This flying plague, to mark its quality, Astres the Greeks call, Agency we;
A fierce, loud sounding bruse, their stings draw blood, And drive the cattle gagging through the wood.

55. Line 51: And flies fled under shade.—That is to say, "are fled." Theobald and Hamner needlessly changed to "get under shade." Walker's "flee under" is preferable.

56. Line 54: Returns to chiding fortune.—F. 1 and F. 2 have retires; F. 3 and F. 4, and Quarto, retires. Some change is necessary. Hamner and Collier's MS. Corrector proposed replies; Pope, returns; Staunton, redicides; Dyce —and this is certainly the best—returns. So the Cambridge editors and Golbe Edn.

57. Line 64: Should hold up high in brace.—The editors are doubtless right in tracing here an allusion to the custom of engraving laws and public records on brass, and hanging them up on the walls of temples and other buildings of general resort. It is the reference, perhaps, in Measure for Measure, v. 1. 11, 12.

58. Line 65: As venerable Nestor, match'd in silver.—A technical engraver's term. The word has survived in hatchment and "cross hatcheting," a process, I believe, of shading familiar to all artists. Cotgrave has "hache royalle;" also "hache d'armes." The verb hacher he translates "to hack, sheared, slice; also, to hatch a hilt." Similarly hatch'd = "hatched as the hilt of a sword." Perhaps the allusion is to enamel work or carving of some sort on the handle. In any case, it enables us to explain satisfactorily the rather curious phrase "hatched in blood," which Beaumont and Fletcher occasionally use (e.g. in The Humorous Lieutenant, i. 1), the fact simply being that the blood dripping from the blade was regarded as a kind of ornament. In Twelfth Night, Ill. 4. 257, Sir Andrew is described as a "knight, dubb'd with unhatch'd rapier and on carpet consideration," though some editors there read unhacked. Taking the present passage we must refer silver, not, as did Johnson, to Nestor's voice, but to his white hair. Compare line 286, and IV. 5. 309. Tyrwhitt conjectured thatch'd; but he must have forgotten, or did not know of, Shirley's exact reproduction of Shakespeare's line:

Thy hair is fine as gold, thy chin is hatch'd with silver.

The following lines (68-69) need no explanation, much less correction: bond of air is thoroughly Shakespearean.

The whole passage is evidently a reminiscence of a stanza in Lucrece, 1401-1407:

There pleaseing might you see grave Nestor stand, As't were encouraging the Greeks to fight; Making such sober action with his hand, That it beguiled attention, charm'd the sight: In speech, it seem'd, his beard, all silver white, Wagg'd up and down, and from his lips did fly That winnding breath, which purs'd up to the sky.

The suggested comparison is not, I think, without point.

59. Line 73: When near Thersites open his mastic jaws.—Apparently mastic is a corrupt form of mastix, which in Terence means "a rascal," literally "one that always wants whistling." In late Latin the word came to signify "a whip," "scourge," and that must be the sense here. Many editors, however, read mastif. This line, it should be noted, is considered by Mr. Play in a very strong support to his theory that the character of Thersites is a satirical portrait of Dekker. Why? Because Dekker in the Poetaster is called rank, an astonishing coincidence with the first half of our verse, while mastix is the clearest of allusions to Dekker's Satio-Mastix. It is ingenious, mais ce n'est pas la critique.

60. Line 81: When that the general is not like the king.—The general should be to an army what the ace is to the bees, viz. the central rallying point to which each member may resort. The sense is excellent. Yet the frenzy of emulation has not spared the line. Not like; is not liked o' t., is not the life of, have all been suggested.

61. Line 85: The planets, and this centre.—Referring obviously to the Ptolemaic system of astronomy, in which the earth was the centre. So Hamlet, II. 2. 157-159:

I will find
Where truth is hid, though it were hid indeed
Within the centre.

"Fix like the centre" was not an unusual expression. Cf. Bussy d'Amblois, II. 1, Chapman's Works, p. 162.
NOTES TO TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

ACT I. Scene 3.

62. Line 97: Inconstancy, course, proportion, &c.—Inconstancy seems to = constancy, persistency. According to Nares the word does not occur elsewhere. We may note here that this fine speech, where the perfect clearness of thought and expression leaves little scope for the annotator, has been mercilessly mangled in Dryden's version. Indeed the whole of the scene (with which Dryden opens his play) has been unsparingly retrimmed.

63. Line 100: Married calm of states.—Married, here simply means "closely united," as in Milton's:
Lydian airs
Married to immortal verse.

Compare Romeo and Juliet, note 43.

64. Line 115: And make a sop of all this solid globe.—So in Lear, ii. 2. 35: "Draw, you rogue, . . . I'll make a sop o' the moonshine of you." Compare, too, Richard III. i. 4. 162; see also note 53.

65. Line 127: And this neglect is of degree it is.—Neglect occurs again in Pericles, ill. 3. 20, where, however, Pf. read neglect. The general idea brought out in the passage is, that each man desires to aggrandize himself, and, in order to do so, slight his immediate superior.

66. Line 157: Troy in our weakness stands.—State (Q.) is more graphic than lives (Pf.); at least it seems to remind us of Virgil's "Troiaque nunc stareet."

67. Line 158: And, like a strutting player.—It is curious to note with what almost invariable contempt Shakespeare speaks of the stage and of the actor's calling, which, for a time at least, was his own. Compare the famous lines in Macbeth, v. 5. 24-26:
Life's but a walking shadow, a poor player
That struts and frets his hour upon the stage
And then is heard no more.

Above all, in the Sonnets, where alone we can trace the personality of the poet, where—to adopt Matthew Arnold's line—Shakespeare "abides our question"—he gives full vent to his loathing of the actor's life:
Alias, it's true I have gone here and there
And made myself a motley to the view.
Gored mine own thoughts, sold cheap what is most dear,
Made old offences of affections new.

This (ex.) and the following sonnet are purely autobiographical; they let us know how Shakespeare estimated the art of the actor.

For he who struts his hour upon the stage
Can scarce protect his fame thro' half an age;
Nor pen nor pencil can the actor save;
Both art and artist have one common grave.

The lines were written by Garrick. [I cannot agree with the views here expressed by Mr. Verity, although they are doubtless shared by many. In this passage, and in the one taken from Macbeth, Shakespeare is merely putting into the mouths of his characters the conventional estimate of the actor's profession which was held by Society in his time. The dignified and nobly-worded defence of acting and actors by Hamlet is worth a hundred such commonplace sneers; and as for Sonnet cxl. (not ex.), which latter has little to do with his profession of actor, the less said about that the better. Its unhealthy and morbid tone does Shakespeare little credit. If once we lose sight of the intense artificiality of the greater portion of the Sonnets, we must be driven to very awkward conclusions as to Shakespeare's character.]—F. A. M.

68. Line 157: O'er-wrested seeming.—Q. and Pf. read "ore-rested;" the correction (made by Pope) seems certain. For the metaphor compare Ill. 3. 23, and note 194. Delius' "o'er-jested" is ingenious.

69. Line 171: Arming to answer in a night-alarm.—So in Henry V. ii. 4. 2, 3:
And more than carefully it us concerns
To answer royally in our defences.

In each case the idea is "repelling an attack."

70. Line 180: Generals and generals of grace exact.—This seems to mean "our individual and collective qualities of perfection," or as Johnson phrases it, of "excellence irreproachable;" but I cannot help suspecting some corruption in the line. Staunton's suggestion "of grace and act" would make fair sense. Collier's MS. Corrector gave "all grace extract," i.e. deprived of all the grace which really belonged to them.

71. Line 194: As stuff for these two to make paradises.—The force of paradizes is not very clear. Johnson wished that the copies had given paradies.

72. Line 195: To weaken and discredit our exposure;—i.e. he minimizes the dangers to which we are exposed. In the following speech Ulysses develops the idea that in war policy and forethought should count for more than brute strength and bravery.

73. Line 196: They call this bed-work, mappery, closet-war.—Theobald punctuated "bed-work mappy'ry, closet war," i.e. treating bed-work as an adjective.

74. Lines 211, 212:
Achilles' horse
Makes many Thetis' sons;

i.e. at this rate Achilles' horse is as good as Achilles himself. It is superfluous to say that Achilles was the son of "sea-born" Thetis.

75. Line 234: A stranger to those most imperial looks.—And yet this was the seventh year of the war. Perhaps, as Steevens explains, Shakespeare thought that the leaders on either side fought with beavers to their helmets after the manner of the mediaeval knights. So in act iv. & 156, 190, Nestor says to Hector:
This thy countenance, still look'd in steel,
I never saw till now.

76. Line 235: Courtiers as free, as Deborah.—The word debonair only occurs in this passage in Shakespeare. Milton's line in L'Allegro (24) it would be superfluous to quote, but it may be worth while to note that Milton was plagiarizing from Thomas Randolph, in whose Aristippus we have:
A bowl of wine is wondrous good cheer,
To make one blithe, buxom and debonair.

Perhaps Randolph in turn had remembered Pericles, i. Prolog. 23.

77. Lines 238, 239:
Joy's accord,
Nothing so full of heart.
NOTES TO TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

I think we must take this (with Theobald) as an ablative absolute = Jove's presence. The interpretation, of course, is awkward, if not impossible, but the corrections have little to say for themselves. Steevens proposed "Jove's a lord;" Malone, most confidently, "Jove's a God;" Mason, most grotesquely, "Jove's own bird."

78. Line 264: that praise, SOLE PUN, transcends.—Collier's MS. Corrector gave soul-pure, an expression, said Collier, "of great force and beauty;" but to Dyce it conveyed "no meaning at all."

79. Line 292: this dull and LONG-continu'd TRUCE.—This is inconsistent with what has preceded; cf. for instance, the second scene, line 34. It is one of the contradictions that point to the composite nature of the play.

80. Lines 299, 270: CONFESSION, With truant vows to her own lips he loves. i.e. confession (or profession, which Hamner reads) made with idle vows to the lips of her whom he loves.

81. Line 272: to shew this CHALLENGE.—The single combat between Hector and Ajax occurs in the seventh Iliad, 215–290. Such incidents abound in the old romances.

82. Line 282: The Grecian dames are SUFFRUM.—Compare Beatrice's complaint: "Thus goes every one to the world but I, and I am sunburn'd: I may sit in a corner, and cry Heigh-ho for a husband!" (Much Ado, ii. I. 331–333; and see note 132 of that play). In the Tempest, iv. I. 134 the word does not bear any uncomplimentary associations.

83. Line 296: I'll hide my silver beard in a gold BEAKER.—Properly beaker signified the visor of the helmet, its sense in the present passage; cf. Hamlet, i. 2. 290, with Mr. Aldis Wright's note. Often used for the helmet itself; so I. Henry IV. iv. 1. 104. Skeat derives from berbere, a bit; another derivation is boire, because the beaver had to be raised if the wearer wanted to drink. Compare III. Henry VI. note 29.

84. Line 277: And in my VANTBRACE.—Q. has vambrace; a species of armour for the arm = avent brase. Compare "Vantbrace and greaves and gauntlet" (Samson Agonistes, 1121).

85. Line 313: Be you my TIME; i.e. "Time brings all schemes to maturity; in the present case do you fulfil the office of Time."

86. Lines 324, 295: The purpose is perspicuous even as SUBSTANCE, Whose GROSSNESS little CHARACTERS sum up. Warburton has a recondite note on these lines, the meaning of which seems to me fairly simple. Substance = estate, property; grossness = gross sum, value; character = numerals; and the whole idea is parallel to the thought expressed in Henry V. prologue to act i. 15, 16:

c. a crooked figure may Attend in little place a million.

Compare, too, the Winter's Tale, i. 2. 6, 7:

like a cipher,
Yet standing in rich place.

87. Line 341: shall give a SCANTLING, &c.—Scantling here signifies, not so much "a sample" (Schmidt, Shakespeare Lexicon), as "a measure," "proportion." Properly it means "a cut piece of timber;" then, apparently, "a small piece of anything." So Malone quotes from Florio's translation (1603) of Montaigne's Essays: "When the lion's skin will not suffice, we must add a scantling of the fox's." For derivation, cf. French eschantillon. The general = the community, as in Julius Caesar, ii. 1. 12, and Hamlet, ii. 2. 457: "it was caviare to the general."

88. Line 343, 344:

And in such INDEXES, although small PRICKS
To their subsequent volumes.

Several passages illustrate Shakespeare's use of the word index; e.g. Hamlet, iii. 4. 51, 52:

"Ay me, what act
That roars so loud, and thunders in the index!"

Compare, too, Othello, ii. 1. 363: "an index and obscure prologue," and Richard III. ii. 2. 148: "as index to the story we late talk'd of." It is not enough in explaining these lines to say that the index was usually prefixed to a volume; it should be remembered that the word did not bear quite its modern sense, but signified what we should now call the "table of contents." So Minshew defines it: "Table in a book." Prick was used for a small mark or point; so in expression "prick of noon."

89. Lines 361, 362:

The lustre of the better yet to show,
Shall show the better.

So the Folio, a great improvement on the reading of Q.:

The lustre of the better shall exceed,
By showing the worse first.

Grant White's

Shall show the better thus. Do not consent gives an easier rhythm.

90. Lines 375, 376:

let BLOCKISH AJAX draw

The sort.

As applied to Telamonian Ajax the epithet blockish (and in line 381, dull brainless) is not very appropriate. It the Iliad he is the type of strength, but not of dullness; and blockish could scarcely be said of the subject of Sophocles' drama. Probably, as the editors explain, Shakespeare has confounded the Telamonian Ajax with Ajax Oileus.

91. Line 392: Must T A R K E the mastiffs on.—This was a sportsman's term = to urge on dogs to fight; cf. King John, iv. 1. 117, and Hamlet, ii. 2. 370: "and the nation holds it no sin to tarre them to controversye."

ACT II. SCENE I.

92. Line 6: a bottyche core.—Grant White has an interesting note on this disputed expression. "The old copies," he says, "have 'a bottyche core,' which reading has been hitherto retained, although its meaning is past conjecture. But core is a mere phonographic spelling of corps. See Bacon's Life of Henry VII. p. 17: 'For he was in a core of people whose affections he suspected.' Theorizes makes a pun, and uses general to refer to Agamemnon and to
NOTES TO TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

ACT II. Scene 1.

... the general body or corps of soldiers as in act iv. scene 5 of this play." Grant White prints "corps;" Collier’s MS. Corrector had the obvious "core." Throughout this first part of the scene we have persistent quibbling and word-play.

"It has always been a source of wonder to me how commentators could have missed the obvious meaning of the word "core" here, and have wanted to make utterly unnecessary emendations. Even Stanhope, who is generally so careful to abstain from tampering with the text, suggests "bolky cor." If we read the whole speech—"it is not a delicate or pleasant one—we shall at once see the meaning of the word core. Core, from the Latin cor, means, as is well known, "a kernel" or "seed-vessel of any fruit," and it also means in medicine "the slough which forms at the central part of buds" (see Hobbs’s Dict. of Medical Terms, sub "sorb"); and Johnson (ed. 1756) defines the word as "the matter contained in a boil or sore," and appends a quotation from Dryden:

Launce the sore, And cut the head; for, till the core be found, The secret vice is fed, and gathers ground.

There very probably is a pun intended on "core" and "corps (= "body of men," or simply "body"); but there can be little doubt that the meaning of the word core in this passage is the one given above. —F. A. M."

95. Lines 13, 14: The Plague of Greece upon thee, thou Mongrel new-witted lord!—Referring, probably, to the plague sent by Apollo upon the army of the Greeks, mentioned in the first book of the Iliad. Mongrel, because Ajax’s father, Telamon, was a Greek, his mother, Helen, a Trojan; cf. iv. 5. 120. For beef-witted Grey (Notes) very badly conjectured half-witted; he must have forgotten Sir Andrew’s memorable "I am a great eater of beef," and I believe that does harm to my wit" (Twelfth Night, i. 3. 99-91). Shakespeare suggests a similar antagonism in Henry V. iii. 7. 161, and in Marlowe’s Edward II. ii. 2, the brilliant court favourite, Gaweston, scornfully bids the English nobles “go sit at home and eat their tenants’ beef” (Marlowe’s Works, Bullen’s ed. ii. 150).

96. Line 15: thou viewest least.—Q. has "untailed." Pl. "whised"; the latter is probably a corruption of "wineste." Why should the reading of Q. have been changed? "Because," says Johnson, "want of salt was no fault in leaven;" to which Malone replies that "leaven without the addition of salt does not make good bread."

This is specializing too deeply; the poet was not a baker, and only a professional instinct could appreciate these editorial subtleties. The fact, I imagine, is, that of the two epithets "wineste" was far more the graphic, more offensive, and therefore the more appropriate; hence its substitution. As to the proposed alternatives, Hamner suggested "shaminist," which he explained to mean "crooked;" Theobald, "unwineasteat;" Warburton, "windystate." Collier’s MS. Corrector agreed with the Folio. For "wine" or "wineaste" = "mouldy," L. sacceus, Nares quotes from the Mirror for Magistrates, p. 417:

A sodder’s hands must oft be dyed with gore, Lest, starke with rest, they wineaste or hoare.

Compare, too, Beaumont’s Letter prefixed to Spleth’s edition of Chaucer, 1602, and subsequently reprinted: "Many of Chaucer’s words are become as it were wineaste and hoarse with over long lying." The substantive is given, and rightly explained, by Minshew. As to etymology, Skeat connects with A.S. fneaglan = to become mouldy, the same root being seen in A.S. fenn = mire, whence modern "fenn.""

96. Lines 30-48:

Ajax. Mistresse Therites!
Ther. Thou shouldst strike him.
Ajax. Corloaf!
Ther. He would pun thee into shivers with his fat, as a sailor breaks a biscuit.

There are one or two points here. "Why Mistresse Therites?" says Walker (A Critical Examination, iii. p. 193), and Nares echoed the query. Surely the application of the word to Therites is not so inappropriate or strange. He is a sordid, quick of tongue and coward of heart, and in Hamlet’s phrase, "must fall a cursing, like a very drab." He stings and buzzes about the unwieldy Ajax, and the latter expresses his contempt for mere cleverness by retorting, You are not a man at all, you are only a shrill-tongued shrew. More formidable is the "Cologaf" crux, chiefly because of the disagreement of Q. and F. 1. F. 1 gives the text printed above; Q. assigns the speeches as follows:

Ajax. Mistresse Therites.
Hee would punne thee into shivers with his fat."

Obviously the question resolves itself into this: to whom is Corloaf as a term of contempt most applicable? To Ajax, as spoken by Therites, or vice versa? The accounts of the word vary. Nares gives the following: "Corloaf. A large loaf. Cob is used in composition to express large, as cob-nut, cob-swan." Similarly Gifford in a note on Every Man in his Humour, i. 3, says: "our old writers used the word as a distinctive mark of bulk" (Ben Jonson’s Works, vol. i. p. 28). From this it would seem that the Quart is right. But Minshew in his Dictionary speaks of a cob as "a bunne. It is a little loaf made with a round head, such as cob-irons which support the fire." He translates it by the French briquet, and briquet again in Cotgrave = "little round loaves or lumps, made of fine meal, . . . bunnes, lenten loaves". Minshew, therefore, and Cotgrave favour the Folio; "little round lumps" would nicely fit one’s conception of Therites. But the point cannot be definitely settled; the meanings of cob are too various; the Imperial Dictionary enumerates no less than eleven. Of these a very curious one occurs in Nashe’s The Unfortunate Traveller, where he speaks of a "lord high regent of rashers of the coles and red her-ring cobs" (Nashe’s Prose Works, ed. Grosart, in Ruth Library, vol. v. p. 16); cf. too, his tract, A Prognostication, vol. ii. p. 163, and Greene’s Looking Glass for London and England, p. 144. Doron’s eulogium in Menaphon begins: “Sit down Carmela, here are cobs for kings,” where, however, the reference may be to apples (Greene’s Works, p. 291). I have known the expression cob applied by Lancashire people to small buns; perhaps its survival is a mere localism. Etymologically pun = pound, the d in the latter being excrescent; from A.S. punidan.

96. Line 46: Thou stood for a witch!—Alluding, as Grey points out, to one of the many kinds of witch-torture.
ACT II. Scene 1.

NOTES TO TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

There is a reference to the custom in Brand's chapter on "Witches" (Popular Antiquities, Bohn's ed. iii. p. 33).

97. Line 48: an assinigo may tutor thee.—Q. and F. have assinico, from which Singer conjectured that the true reading was assinico, from Spanish assinico = a young or little ass. Pope proposed Assinigo, a Portuguese word for ass; probably this is right, the word being found in Beaumont and Fletcher (see Dyce's ed. iii. 107) and elsewhere.

98. Line 75: All eavions have ears thus long; i.e. donkey's ears.—By evasion he means the artifices which a man employs in an argument. The whole expression is an admirably humorous way of representing the clumsiness of Ajax in discussion.

99. Line 77: and his pia mater is not worth.—Properly the pia mater is one of the membranous coverings of the brain; often, however, used as here to signify the brain itself. So in Twelfth Night, l. 5. 128, the clown is afraid that Sir Toby "has a most weak pia mater;" compare, too, Love's Labour's Lost, iv. 2. 71. In Randolph's Aristippus the quack physician, Sigmor Medico de Campo, opines that the physician after his beating is in a paroxysm: "By my troth, sir, he is wonderfully hurt. His pia mater, I perceive, is clean out of joint; of the twenty bones of the cranium there is but one left" (Randolph's Works, p. 32). The converse, dura mater, Shakespeare does not use.

100. Line 96.—Will you set your wit to a fool's play, i.e. match your wit against.—The term is taken from tennis, to which allusions are frequent. Compare Midsummer Night's Dream, iii. 1. 137. So in the Witch of Edmonton, ii. 1:

A ball well bandied, now the set's half won.

101. Line 107: and you as under an impress.—Enforced service. So in Hamlet, i. 1. 75:

Why such impress of shipwrights.

102. Line 192: to Achilles! to.—Thersites keeps up the previous metaphor of yoking, imitating what he supposes Nestor to say to Achilles.

103. Line 192.—Achilles' Brach.—Q. and F. read brooch. The almost certain emendation was made by Rowe. Johnson, with forensic subtlety, suggested that a brooch being "an appendant ornament," the phrase might here signify "one of Achilles' hangings on!" Malone hazarded break = op; compare Twelfth Night, ii. 5. 114: "Marry, hang thee, brooch!" The objection to brooch is that Shakespeare uses the word at least once in a complimentary sense:

the brooch, indeed,
And gem of all the nation;—Hamlet, iv. 7. 94.

compare, too, Richard III. v. 5. 66. Brach is explained by v. 1. 18, 19.

ACT II. Scene 2.

104. Lines 14, 15:

the wound of peace is surely,
Surety secure.

An obvious Latinism. Compare Henry V. iv. Prol. 17:

Proud of their numbers, and secure in soul.

So in the present play, iv. 5. 72. We may remember too the couplet in L'Allegro:

Sometimes with sure, delight

The upland hamslets will invite.

—91, 92.

105. Line 19: 'mongst many thousand givers.—Mirabeau has a long account of the word: "made," he says, "of the French Decimes and signifies tenth, or the tenth part of all the fruits, either of the earth, or beasts, or our labour due unto God, and so consequently to him that is of the Lord's lot, and hath his share, viz. our Pastor. It signifies also the tenth of all spiritual livings, yearly given to the Prince—which in ancient times were paid to the Popes, until Pope Urban gave them to Richard the Second, to aid him against Charles, the French King. Lastly it signifies a tribute levied of the Temporalities" (Dictionary, p. 234). In the present passage, of course, the word merely means "tenth of the army."

106. Line 20.—The fast proportion of his infinite!—"That greatness," says Johnson, "to which no measure bears any proportion," a fine expression needlessly changed by some last-century editors to "fast proportion." "Fast proportion" is a curiously felicitous proposal. The words should, I think, be hyphenated.

107. Line 32: you bite so sharp at reasons.—Perhaps, as Malone thinks, a quibble is intended such as Dogberry is guilty of in Much Ado, v. 1. 212.

108. Lines 49, 50:

reason and respect

Make lives pale.

So in Lucrce, 274, 275:

Then, childish fear, avant! debating, die!

Respect and reason, wait on wrinkled age.

In each case respect means caution, fear of consequences. Falstaff, it will be remembered, branded a pale liver as "the badge of pusillanimity and cowardice" (II. Henry IV. iv. 3. 113).

109. Line 52: What is sought, but as 'twas said—"Grey quotes Butler's couplet:

For what's the worth of anything
But so much money as 't will bring?

110. Lines 58-60:

And the will does, that is attributes
To what infectiously itself affects,
Without some image of th' affected merit.

The meaning is fairly simple: "the man is foolish who invests an object with excellence, and excessively admires that excellence, when all the time it has no foundation in fact, but is simply the creation of his fancy."

111. Line 64.—Two traded pilots; i.e. professional, experienced. See note 272, and compare King John, iv. 3. 109.

112. Line 71: in unrespective sieve.—Q. has wise, F. 1, same, F. 2, F. 3, F. 4, place. Serve, the reading in effect of Q., makes excellent sense, the limitation of the word to utensils with which to strain or riddle things being comparatively modern: indeed in some country districts it is still applied to a certain kind of fruit-basket. So Browning in his poem, A Soliloquy of the Spanish Cloister, has:
When he gathers his greenages,
Ope a crew and slip it in,
Probably the sisters in which witches were floated to sea were wicker vessels of some kind. Originally they may have been made of rushes, which would explain the origin of the word, sease, and the cognate forms in Icelandic and Swedish, signifying a rush.

113. Line 79: and makes stale the morning.—This, the Folio reading, has perhaps more force than the pace of the Quarto, which Malone retains. Shakespeare is fond of stale both adjective and verb; compare Winter's Tale, iv. 1. 13-14:
so shall I do
To the freshest things now reigning, and make stale
The glistering of this present.
But the word occurs too frequently to need illustration.

114. Line 82: Whose price hath launch'd above a thousand ships.—Shakespeare is reproducing the opening lines of the great passage in Marlowe's Doctor Faustus, scene xiv. lines 83, 84:
Was this the face that launch'd a thousand ships
And burnt the topless towers of Ilium?
It may be worth while to note that Christopher Marlowe is the only contemporary dramatist to whom Shakespeare definitely alludes in terms of admiration; it is pleasant to think that it should be so. Modern criticism abundantly recognizes the fact that Marlowe rendered English literature the most signal and sovereign service, at once by freeing blank verse from the fetters imposed upon it by the authors of the dreary Gorboduc, by elevating, and to a certain extent fixing the form and style of the romantic drama, and by driving off the stage the "jigging veins of rhyming mother wits" that are satirized in the prelogue to Tamburlaine. Shakespeare's debt to Marlowe was great, and passages in his plays show that he was familiar with the works of his brother poet. Thus in As You Like It we have (iii. 5. 88) the direct apostrophe to the "Dead shepherd," followed by the quotation of the line from Hero and Leander, which soon becomes a proverb:

Who ever lov'd that lov'd not at first sight?
—Hero and Leander, First Sestad, line 175.
Again, in The Merry Wives of Windsor, iii. 1. 17-20, a stanza is introduced from the immortal lyric, "Come live with me and be my love." For similar Marlowe touches compare Two Gentlemen of Verona, i. 1. 20-27 (a less complimentary allusion), All's Well that Ends Well, ii. 3. 74, 75, and Romeo and Juliet, v. 1. 8, where Romeo's "breath'd such life with kisses in my lips" is an obvious reminiscence of Hero and Leander, Second Sestad, line 2.

115. Lines 87, 88:
for you all clapp'd your hands,
And cried, "Inestimable!"
The account in Caxton's Troybook of the carrying-off of Helen is very quaint and picturesque; this is the description of Paris' return: "There came forth of the Town King Priamus with a great company of noblemen, and received his children and his friends with great joy, who came to Helen, and bowed courteously to her, and welcomed her honourably. And when they came nigh the city, they found great store of people glad of their coming, with instruments of music: and in such joy came into the palace of King Priamus: he himself lighted down and helped Helen from her palmyre, and led her by the hand into the hall, and made great joy all the night, throughout all the city for these tidings. And the next morning, Paris by consent of his father, wedded Helen in the temple of Pallas, and the feasts were lengthened throughout all the city, for space of eight days" (Destruction of Troy, book iii. p. 19).

VOL. V.

116. Line 90: And do a deed that fortune never did.—I think the meaning is: "you are more fickle than fortune herself. One day you rate Helen above all price; the next, when you have won her, she is of no account in your eyes. Fortune's wheel is not so variable."

117. Line 100.—It is Cassandra.—In Caxton's Troybook Cassandra, "a noble virgin; learned with sciences, and knew things that were to come," foretells, as here, the destruction of Troy, until "King Priamus hearing it intreated her to cease, but she would not. And then he commanded her to be cast into prison, where she was kept many days" (book III. p. 19). It is a point to be noticed that Shakespeare does not make more out of Cassandra. In Troilus and Cressida she is only, to echo Heine's criticism, "an ordinary prophetess of evil," whereas it would have been an easy task to invest her figure with a mysterious impressive awe.

118. Line 104: mid-age and wrinkled old.—Q. has elders; F. old. Perhaps with Walker we should emend still further to "mid age and wrinkled old;" the gain in symmetry is obvious.

119. Lines 110, 111:
Our Firebrand brother, Paris, burns us all.
Cry, Trojans, cry! A HELEN AND A WO!
The language and the allusions here are quite classical. "Firebrand brother" refers to Hecuba's dream, in which she supposed herself to be pregnant of a burning torch. It is a detail unknown to Homer: compare, however, Aenid, vi. 320:

nec facie tantum
Classis praegnans ignes ecalce jugales.
So also in Aenid, x. 704, 705:

et facie praegnans
Classis regias Paris creat.
Parallel references might be quoted from English classics. Thus Poole, in The Tale of Troy, has:

She dreams, and gives her lord to understand
That she should soon bring forth a fire-brand.
—Works, p. 351.

A Helen and a wo reminds us of the famous line in the Agamemnon (880), which Browning vividly reproduced in:

Ship's hell, Man's hell, City's hell.

120. Line 116: no DISCOVERER OF REASON.—The same phrase occurs in Hamlet, i. 2. 150:
O God! a beast, that wants discover of reason.
Compare same play, iv. 4. 86:
Sure, he that made us with such large discover;
and Othello, iv. 2. 158:
Either in discover of thought or actual deed.

321 133
NOTES TO TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

In each case discourse bears the once common, but now obsolete, sense of reasoning; it points to the working of the mind, to the logical processes through which the latter must pass in arguing.

121. Line 138: my propension; i.e. inclination. Cf. line 190: "I propend to you."

122. Line 141: Paris should ne'er retract.—Compare Iliad, vii. 362.

123. Line 150: the ransack'd queen.—Ransack'd here = the Latin raptis; it means simply "taken away by force," that force being employed not against the person taken away, but against the persons from whom she was taken. Schmidt explains the word as "ransacked" in this play; but this might be misleading, unless it were explained that ransack'd, in legal phraseology, meant, originally, what we now call "abduction;" and therefore ransacked would mean simply "abducted," and not, as it would imply generally nowadays, the crime of rape. It will be noticed that just above, in line 148, Paris uses rape in the sense in which it was used in Shakespeare's time, for mere "abduction." According to Cowell rape was used only in this sense in civil law, never in criminal. Spenser uses the word ransack'd in the sense of "violent" (bk. i. c. i. st. 6) in the well-known passage where Archimago tries to ravish Uxa:

And win rich spoils of ransack'd chastity.

Of course the queen is Helen, not, as Hunter says, Hesione.

124. Line 162: The world's large spaces cannot parallel; i.e. cannot produce her equal.

125. Line 165: Have glos'd. A glose or a glos is a commentary; the word generally bears the idea of "deceit;" cf. Milton's "well plac'd words of glosing courtesy" (Comus, 161). It is not hard to see how the meaning arose. The gloss (γλώσσα) was the word which needed explanation; then it came to signify the explanation itself, and finally, by an easy transition, a false explanation. A good instance of its use occurs in Ford's Perkin Warbeck, i. 2:

You construe my griefs to so hard a sense,
That where the less is argument of pity,
Matter of earnest love, your glose corrupts it.

—Ford's Works, ii. 17.

126. Line 168: whom Aristotle thought.—To avoid the rather absurd anachronism Rowe and Pope read (with splendid courage) "whom greater ages think!" For the sentiment we are referred to Bacon, Advancement of Learning, bk. ii. xxii.

127. Line 172: Have ears more deaf than adders.—An old superstition, often alluded to; thus, in Randolph's The Muse's Looking Glass the Anchorite remarks:

How happy are the sots that have no eyes!
How blessed the adders that have no ears.

—Works, vol. i. p. 207.

Compare II. Henry VI. iii. 2. 78:

What art thou, like the adder, waxen deaf?

and see note 188 of that play.

128. Line 189: in very of truth; i.e. "judging the matter solely on the ground of what is just and right." This speech is a fine piece of characterization.

129. Line 302: canonize us.—This is Shakespeare's invariable accentuation of the word. Compare Hamlet, i. 4. 47:

"Why thou canst not' bones, hearsed in death;"

and King John, iii. 1. 177:

"Canonized, and worship'd as a saint."

See, too, II. Henry VI. i. 3. 63. Similarly in Marlowe's Faustus, i. 1. 118, we find:

Shall make all nations to canonize us.

Whereas Chapman, in Byron's Conspiracy, ll. 1. writes:

Should make your highness canonized a saint.

(Works, edn. 1874, p. 229.)

ACT II. SCENE 3.

130. Line 7: a rare engineer.—All such words as engineer, sonneteer, matineer, etc., were formerly spelt with a final er instead of eer. So in Chapman's Monsieur D'Olive, iii. 1, we have: "by the brains of some great engineer" (Works, edn. 1874, p. 159). For an exhaustive discussion of the question see Walker, Shakespeare's Verbatim, pp. 217-227.

131. Line 10: lose all the serpentine craft of thy caduceus.—A classical touch, as Steevens notes; cf. Martial Epigrams, bk. vii. 74:

Cyleneus collique decus, facunde ministris,

Aurora cui terrae virga draconem visuit.

132. Line 27: a gift counterfeiter.—Hamner, following Rowe, read counter. In a note on As You Like It, ii. 7. 63 ("What, for a counter, would I do but good?") Knight says that these counters or jettons were made of various metals, for the most part at Nürnberg. They were used to count with, and are alluded to in Julius Caesar, iv. 3. 80 (where see Clarendon Press note), and Winter's Tale, i. 3. 38; also in this play, ii. 2. 28. In the present passage slip'd is used quibblingly in allusion to the spurious coins known as slips—a word-play which the dramatists were very fond. So in Romeo and Juliet, ii. 4. 50, 51, when Romeo asks "What counterfeited did I give you?" Mercutio replies, "The slip, sir, the slip;" so also Venus and Adonis, 515. Ben Jonson, too, in Every Man in His Humour, ii. 3, has: "Let the world think me a bad counterfeit if I cannot give him the slip at an instant."

133. Line 37: never shrouded any but Lazarus.—Generally applied to people afflicted with leprosy; cf. "most Lazar-like," Hamlet, i. 5. 72. It is perhaps superfluous to note the derivation; from Lazarus, Luke xvi. 30.

134. Line 56: I'll decline the whole question.—Theretofore borrows a term from the grammar-book, and then proceeds to quibble upon it. Compare Richard III. iv. 4. 97.

135. Line 58: He shent our messengers.—Q. has sate; Pf. sent. The absolutely certain emendation in the text is due to Theobald. Hamner printed "he sent us messengers" (very poor); while Collier followed his MS. Corrector in reading "we sent our messengers," objecting to Theobald's conjecture on the ground that the fact of Achilles rebuking the messenger had not been stated in the play. Shent, it may be noted, entirely agrees with scene iii. of the first act, where Achilles is said to have taken pleasure in seeing Patroclus' pageant (i.e. mimic and burlesque) Agamemnon and the other leaders; also, if, as Dyce ingeniously suggests, the sites of the Quarto is a corruption of rates, we have a fresh argument in favour of shent, a word which Shakespeare uses several times, e.g. Merry Wives of Windsor, i. 4. 38; Twelfth Night, iv. 2. 112; Hamlet, iii. 2. 416.

136. Line 103: if he have lost his argument. Here in the sense of theme, subject; cf. argumentum. The word is of too frequent occurrence in Shakespeare to require illustration. We may remember, however, Milton's famous invocation:

what in me is dark
Illumine, what is low raise and support,
That to the height of this great argument
I may assert Eternal Providence
And justify the ways of God to men.
—Paradise Lost, i. 27-30.

137. Line 113: The elephant hath joints, but none for courtesy. Cf. iii. 3. 48, 49. That the elephant's legs had no joints was a current superstition.

138. Line 121: An after-dinner's breath. So in Hamlet, v. 2. 182. "'tis the breathing time of day with me." In each case the idea suggested is "light exercise," "relaxation."

139. Line 124: Than in the note of judgment. Note of judgment seems to be equivalent to judgment simply; so we now speak of a person as "having no judgment;" but possibly "judged by other people" may be the idea. The text of this passage has been needlessly emended in various details.

140. Line 138: His humorous predominance. Shakespeare is referring to the astrological term; it occurs in Lear, i. 2. 184: "knaves, thieves, and treachers, by spherical predominance."

141. Line 139: His petty commonplace. Shakespeare, his ends, his foes. P. have "petitish lines;" Q. "his course and time, his ends and flowers;" Pope reads his course and times. The emendation in the text is due to Hamner. A similar confusion, lines for tunes, occurs in Merry Wives of Windsor, iv. 2. 22, where the correction was made by Theobald. For tunes (= whims, freaks), cf. Winter's Tale, ii. 2. 30.

142. Line 149: In second voice we'll not be satisfied, i.e. "a substitute will not be sufficient, he must come himself."

143. Line 160: I do hate a proud man, &c. For the thought cf. i. 3. 241, 249.

144. Line 177: the death-tokens of't. A reference to the small dark spots which appeared on the skins of people infected with the plague; they were supposed to portend certain death. Cf. Antony and Cleopatra, iii. 10. 9, 10: like the token'd pestilence, Where death is sure.

145. Line 196: with his own shank. Scam = tallow, fat; cf. ensamed, Hamlet, iii. 4. 92.

146. Line 213: I'll fare him. In Shakespeare only occurs here (where, however, Q. has push) and in act v. 6. 10. It is found in Greene's Works, p. 94 and Marlowe (Bullen's ed. vol. l. p. 59); also in Massinger (Works, p. 10), Virgin Martyr, ii. 2; and in The White Devil of Webster (Works, ed. Dyce, vol. i. p. 8). The word is Scandinavian origin (Skæl). Browning has it in "Child Roland to the Dark Tower came," stanza xii.

147. Line 215: I'll pluck his pride. We have Phæsus in Merry Wives, i. 1. 3; while the Taming of the Shrew begins: "I'll pluck thee, in faith" (see note 1 of that play). The etymology of the word is not clear, nor its exact meaning. I take, however, the following from the Imperial Dictionary, sub voce Feæs. "[Perhaps connected with Sw.Brixen, fæsen, D. cousen, Fr. fœser, to whip.] To whip with rods; to tease; to worry. Written also Feæse, Feæs, and Fœsae." The same authority gives a substantive Feæs = "State of being anxious or excited; worry; vexation." The eighteenth-century commentators seem to have misunderstood the word. Hamner, for instance, explains it: "to separate a twist into single threads. In the figurative sense it may well enough be taken like tease;" and this is the account offered by Steevens, Johnson, and others. But feæse in this sense looks like a derivative from the A.S. fæsæ = thread; cf. G. fæser. According to Gifford it was in his days still in common use in the west of England, and meant "to beat," "to chastise." This is obviously its sense in the present passage, and as a localism the word may still survive. Wedgewood has a long article on the subject, discriminating between the two meanings.

148. Line 227: The raven shades blackness. Obviously another version of the proverb, "the kettle calls the pot black." See Bohn's Proverbs, p. 105.

149. Line 229: I'll let his humours blood. Malone points out that a collection of epigrams, satires, &c., was printed in 1600 with the title, The Letting of Humours Blood in the Head Vaine.

150. Line 227: should eat swords first. It is not necessary to change the reading; but Gray's ingenious proposal deserves mention: "should eat words first." In the next two lines there is an obvious word-play.

151. Line 233: his ambition is dry. Dry often = thirsty. Cf. Romeo and Juliet, iii. 5. 69:

Dry sorrow drinks our blood.

152. Line 244: A wheatscom dog, that shall palter thus with us! Here palter is used in the sense of trifle; in Macbeth, v. 8. 20, and Julius Cæsar, ii. 1. 196 = "equivocating." Skeat derives it from palter, rags, and says that it originally meant "to deal in rags," and so "to haggle about paltry things."

153. Line 232: Praise him that got thee, she that gave thee suck; i.e. Telamon and Eribea though later in this play (iv. 5. 83) Hesione is represented as having been the mother of Ajax.

155. Line 260: like a bourn, a pale, a shore. — For bourn = boundary (its etymological meaning) cf. Winter’s Tale, i. 2. 154: No bourn to twist his and mine.

156. Line 283: He must, he is, he cannot but he wise.—Such brachylogy is characteristic. Compare i. 3. 289.

ACT III. SCENE 1.

157. Line 14: You are in the state of grace.—Referring obviously to the previous quibble, “know your honour better,” i.e. a better man. Throughout this scene the servant persistently plays on words and misunderstands his interlocutor. Q. and F. print the line as a query.

158. Lines 33, 34: the mortal venus, . . . love’s invisible soul.—That is to say, Helen, the representative of Venus on earth. Invisible has been changed by some editors to visible, and I think there is a good deal to be said for the correction.

159. Line 53: good broken music.—This was the name technically applied to the music of stringed instruments. Its use here is one more instance of Shakespeare’s perfect familiarity with the terminology of arts other than his own. For music in particular the poet seems to have felt a special sympathy. So Casar in describing Cassius, says: he loves no plays, As thou dost, Antony; he hears no music.

—Julius Caesar, i. 3. 203, 204.

And still more decisive is a passage in The Merchant of Venice, v. 1. 83-86:

The man that hath no music in himself, Nor is mov’d with concord of sweet sounds, Is fit for treasons, stratagems, and spoils.

Goethe had exactly the same feeling. He speaks of himself as having been inspired during the composition of his Iphigenien by listening to Gluck’s cantata; and apropos of the same play, we find him writing to the Frau Von Stein: “My soul by the delicious tones is gradually freed from the shackles of deeds and protocols. A quartette in the green room. I am sitting here, calling the distant forms gently to me. One scene must be floated off to-day.”—Feb. 22nd, 1779. Reverting to Shakespeare, we must remember that “unmusical” was not always an appropriate epithet to apply to the English. The mass of ballads and songs scattered throughout the plays and lyrical miscellanies of the Elizabethan and Jacobean periods points to a widely-diffused and, using the word in its best sense, popular love of music; and modern research has established the fact that, next to the Italian composers, English musicians enjoyed the highest continental renown. Probably the death of Purcell and the advent of Handel decided the eclipse of national music.

160. Line 61: you say so in fitts.—A fit was a division in a poem, or a measure in dancing, or a verse of a song. Thus in the ballad of King Emetre we have:

What wold ye doe with my harpe, he sayd,
If I did sell it yet?
To playes my wife and me a fitt,
When abed together wee bee.
—Percy’s Reliques, King Emetre, lines 241-244.

So in Ralph Boister Doister, ii. 3, Truepeny says: “Shall we sing a fitte to welcome our friends, Arnot?” (Arber’s Reprint, p. 36). Not elsewhere in Shakespeare: the word is familiar to Chaucer students, being the A.S. flit—a song. In the present passage there appears to be some quibble, though one does not quite see how.

161. Line 74: You shall not bob us out of our melody.—Properly bob = to jerk, but by some undefined means the word gradually got the idea of cheating, obtaining by fraud. Compare Othello, v. 1. 18:

gold and jewels that I bob’d from him.

Again, in the Witch of Edmonton, iii. 2, a father looking upon the dead body of his child says:

I’ll not own her now. She’s none of mine:
Bob me off with a dumb show!

Here the sense obviously is “to trick me with a show!” I find a curious phrase in Gliathorne’s The Lady Mother, printed in Bullen’s Old Plays, ii. p. 146, where a man remarks that another character is “like a bobbed hawk,” i.e. like a hawk which has missed its prey, has struck that is, at some small bird, and struck unsuccessfully. Very possibly it is from some such metaphor that the word came eventually to signify any cheating, tricking operation. The Imperial Dictionary has an excellent account sub bob.

162. Line 96: with my disposer Cressida.—A well-known crux. Indeed the whole passage from What says my sweet queen, my very very sweet queen! down to Cressida (95), is difficult, the arrangement of the lines, in which I have followed Dyce and the Cambridge editors, being somewhat confused. There are two points to be noticed, points upon which many editors have gone hopelessly wrong. Q. and F. assign the words, You must not know where he sups, to Helen: they certainly should form part of Pandarus’ speech; the change was made by Hamner, and simplifies the dialogue very considerably. That is he first point: the other is “my disposer Cressida.” How can Paris speak of Cressida as his disposer? The editors could not answer the question, and took refuge in rearrangements of the lines, in emendations of disposer, and other expedients which it could serve no purpose to enumerate at length. Enough to say that Collier (still assigning the speech to Paris) would read disposer, i.e. as not allowing the merits of Paris; while many editors substituted Helen for Paris and changed to disposer (Steevens, Ritson) or disposer (Warburton), the meaning in either case being that Cressida had supplanted Helen in the affections of Paris. See the very elaborate notes in Malone’s Var. Ed. vol. viii. pp. 318-330. Disposer will be equivalent to “She who disposes or isolines me to mirth by her pleasant (and rather free) talk.” So Dyce.

163. Line 102: I spy.—Probably alluding to the well-known game.

164. Line 118: Ay, you may, you may.—Evidently a current piece of slang. So Coriolanus, iii. 3. 90. In the present case it is a humorona way of saying “I see you are flattering and fooling me.”

165. Line 119: this love will undo us all.—That this remark should be placed in the mouth of Helen—that she—causes mati tanti—should instinctively feel how fatal...
her amour was bound to prove, is a fine touch, and is noted by Heine in his Shakespeare's Frauen und Mädchen. The editors have not remarked what is, I believe, the case, viz., that the expression is some catch from a song; compare Field's A Woman is a Weathercock, iii. 5 (Doddley, xi. 54).

168. Line 131: —-the wound to kill; i.e. the killing wound. This, like the other ballad-matches in the play, seems to be untraceable.

167. Line 146: He eate nothing but DOYES.—In The Merchant of Venice, ii. 2. 144, Gobbo has a "dish of doves" that he would fain bestow on Leontes. In Italy they are a very common article of food.

168. Line 144: Why, they are VIPERS.—Referring, as Hunter says, to Acts xxviii. 5: "there came a viper out of the heat."

169. Line 157: Than all the ISLAND KINGS.—The leaders that is, who came from "the isles of Greece, the isles of Greece."

ACT III. SCENE 2.

170. Line 1: Pandarus' ORCHARD.—Here, as often, orchard is synonymous with garden. So in Hamlet, i. 5. 59: "Sleeping within my orchard," and in many other passages. See Much Ado, note 62. Compare Chapman's Widow's Tears, ii. 2:

I. What news, Lycurgus? Where's the lady?
Lycurgus. Retired into her orchard. —Works, p. 357.

We repeatedly come across the expression "orchard of the Hesperides," e.g. in Marlowe's Hero and Leander, Sedley ii. line 398; Middleton's The Changeling, iii. 3 (Works, vol. iv. p. 250); and Massinger's Emperor of the East, iv. 1, and Virgin Martyr, iv. 3 (Works, pp. 340 and 27). There is no reason why the word should be limited to places where fruit is grown; etymologically it simply means herb yard, coming from A. S. wyt = a root.

171. Line 23: Lowe's thrice-REFUSED nectar.—It have reputed; so too (according to Dyce) some copies of the Quarto; but see Cambridge Shakespeare, vi. p. 265. Collier's MS. Corrector read refused; there can be no question which is preferable. For an instance of the verb repulse see Shirley's Lady of Pleasure, act v. sc. 1:

The winds shall play soft descant on our feet
And breathe rich odours to refresh the air.

172. Line 29: As doth a BATTLE, when they charge.—Battle often signifies a battalian. So in Caxton's Description of Troy we read: "In the night passed, Hector having the charge of them in the city, ordered early his battalions in a plain that was in the city, and put in the first battle two thousand knights" (bk. iii. p. 40). Milton, too, has:

So under airy cope together rushed
Both battle main. —Paradise Lost, vi. 915-916.

173. Line 54: as if she were FRAY'D with a sprite.—Fray is short for fray fray, which comes from a low Latin word fraternitas to break the king's peace. The same root is clearly seen in G. friede. For use of fray Steevens quotes from Chapman's twenty-first Iliad:

all the massacres
Left for the Greeks, could put on looks of no more overthrow Than now fray'd life.

174. Line 45: you must be WATCH'd are you be made TAME?—Referring obviously to the custom of taming hawks by keeping them from sleep. So in Othello, iii. 3. 23, "I'll watch him tame;" and Taming of the Shrew, iv. 1. 193-196:

Another way I have to man my haggard,
That is, to watch her, as we watch these kites.

For Shakespeare's use of such technical terms see note 178.

175. Line 48: we'll put you i' the FIELDS.—Q. has files; F. 1, file; and F. 2, F. 3, and F. 4, files. Hamner reads files, and in a note remarks, "alluding to the custom of putting the men suspected of cowardice in the middle place." There can be no doubt, however, that files is the right reading, and that the editors of the Second Folio made the correction from not understanding the word. Fill, or thill, is simply the shaft of a cart; the word is cognate with the German diael = plank. Full-horse occurs in Merchant of Venice, ii. 2. 101; see note 130 of that play.

176. Line 52: rub on, and kiss the mistress.—All these terms are taken from the game of bowls. The mistress was the "small ball . . . now called the Jack, at which the players aim" (Nares). A bowl that kissed the mistress (i.e. remained touching the jack) was in the most favourable position; cf. Cymbeline, ii. 1. 2. Rub on is not so easily explained. Mr. Aldis Wright in his note on Richard II. iii. 4. 4, quotes from Fuller's Holy State, book i. chap. 1:

"But as a rubbe to an overthrown bowl proves an helpe by hindering it; so afflictions bring the souls of God's Saints to the mark." [Johnson gives as one of the special meanings of rub: "Inequality of ground, that hinders the motion of a bowl;" a definition which the Imperial Dist. follows, quoting the passage from Fuller, given above. But in British Rural Sports, by Stonehenge (J. H. Walsh), 1881 (15th edn.), rub is thus defined: "Rub or Set.—When a jack or a bowl in its transit, strikes or touches any object or thing on the green which alters or impedes its motion;" and afterwards in Rule 17: "If a running bowl before it has reached the parallel of the jack do rub or set on any person (not of the playing party), or on a bowl or jack belonging to another party, it can be played again;" and in the next rule 18: "If the jack do rub or set on a bowl or person not belonging to the party," &c. From these extracts it would appear that to rub (in the game of bowls) meant "to come into contact with" any obstacle animate or "inanimate." —F. A. M.) For rub (subst.) = obstacle, see King John, iii. 4. 128. The origin of the expression "there's the rub" is clear.

177. Line 54: a kiss in PER-FARM !—Pee, from A. S. fæh, properly meant cattle, as the natural form of property in an early civilization; then property in general, but more especially land. Compare, in part, the use of pecus, pecundia. Per-farm signifies, I suppose, free-simple, the most advantageous and lasting system of tenure. We have a "fée grieve" in Macbeth, iv. 3. 196, and "sold in fee," Hamlet, iv. 4. 22.

178. Line 55, 56: The falcon as the tereol, for all the ducks & the river.—The falcon was the female hawk; the tereol, the male; the former was the larger and stronger. So Ootgrav, sub voco Tiersote, has "The tassell, or male of any kind of hawk; so termed because he is commonly a third part lesse than the female." See Skeat upon tercel. Pandarums means that he will match his niece against Troilus. Rowe misunderstood the passage and read "the falcon has the tercel;" so Pope. Tyrwhitt ingeniously conjectured "at the tercel." In the second half of the quotation we have an allusion to what appears to have been a favourite amusement, i.e. hawkimg along river banks. So in Ben Jonson's The Forest (III.) one of the country pursuits mentioned is:

Or hawking at the river.

So, too, Chaucer's Sir Thopas:

Coste hunt at wild deer,
And ride on hawkyng for yerre,
With gray goshauck on hoede.
---Chaucer, Works, Bohn's ed. ii. p. 118.

Cunningham, in his edition of Gifford's Massinger, p. 640, remarks upon the close familiarity with country customs that our old dramatists display: they seem, he says, "to have been, in the language of the present day, keen sportsmen." This is perfectly true: the works of Massinger, Ben Jonson, and others, abound with terms drawn from the technicalities of hunting, hawking, and kindred pursuits. In the case of Shakespeare, however, it was only one aspect of the poet's immense range of knowledge. Nihil non sitiget: he draws his metaphors and similes from every possible subject; and he invariably writes with a minute accuracy which at one moment convinces us that he must have been a painter, at another that he must have been a musician, at a third a lawyer, and so on through a dozen other professions.

179. Line 62: "In witness whereof," &c.---Alluding, says Grey, to the usual conclusion of indentures: "to which the parties to these presents have interchangeably set their hands and seals." Shakespeare was fond of this metaphor of sealing a compact. Compare Measure for Measure, iv. 1, the boy's song; Venus and Adonis, 611 and 618.

180. Line 80: in all Cupid's peacient there is presented no monster.---"From this passage," says Steevens, "a Fear appears to have been a personage in other pageants; or perhaps in our ancient moralities." To this circumstance Aspathia alludes in The Maltes Tragedy:

And then a Fear: Do that Fear bravely, wench.

Perhaps in Antony and Cleopatra, ii. 2. 196-218, in the great passage describing the first meeting of the Queen and Antony, Shakespeare had in his mind's eye the details of some such Pageant of Love as is here hinted at.

181. Line 104: shall be a mock for his truth.---Malone explains this, "Even malice (for such is the meaning of the word envy) shall not be able to impeach his truth, or attack him in any other way, except by ridiculing him for his constancy." This may be right; I should have thought, however, that the meaning was rather, "the worst that malice can say against him will be but a mock, a trite which his constancy can afford to despise, i.e. his loyalty will be raised above and superior to the assaults of jealousy."

182. Line 119: they are BURS, I can tell you.---Properly "burs" mean the unopened flowers of the Burdock (Arctium Lappa) (Ellacombe, p. 32); a plant common on waste places by road-sides. The bracts of the involucres which inclose the young flowers are furnished with hooked tips, which cling persistently to one's clothes or to a dog's coat, or to any other object. Several British wild plants are called Burs; e.g. the Bur-marigold, the Bur-parasite, the Bur-reed; but none deserve the name better than the Burdock. It is cognate, no doubt, with the French bourre, applied to the hair of animals or the fluffy pollen shed by some plants. Milton speaks of "rude burns and thistles" (Comus, 353), and Shakespeare has the word several times. "Nay, triar, I am a kind of bur; I shall stick" (Measure for Measure, iv. 3. 189).

183. Line 160. CUNNING in dumness.---Pope's correction of the coming of Q. and Fl. The change seems entirely necessary. In the next line soul of counsel=the very essence of my design. Soul was used in this sense in act i. 2. 818.

184. Line 165: KIND OF SELF resides with you.---Collier's MS. Corrector gave a kind self; at the best an unnecessary change. The idea is the same as in Sonnet cxxxiii. 13, 14:

for I, being pent in thee,
Perforce am thine, and all that is in me.

185. Lines 163, 164: Or else you love not; for to be wise and love
Exceeds man's might; that dwells with gods above.

First, as to the origin of the expression to be wise and love; it is a literal reproduction of the maxim of Publius Syrus: "amarre et sapere vix deo coequidenter." Curiously enough, the proverb is to be frequently found in Elizabethan and Jacobean writers. Bacon, for instance, in his Essay on Love, has: "for there was never proud man thought so abundantly well of himself as the lover doth of the person loved; and therefore it was well said that it is impossible to love and to be wise" (Works, ed. Spedding, vol. vi. p. 398). The occurrence, by the way, of the saying in the Essays and in Troilus and Cressida must be as much and drink to the supporters of the "Bacon wrote Shakespeare" theory. Still Shakespeare is not the only poet who used it. Tyrwhitt quotes from The Shepherd's Calendar, March:

To be wise, and skie to love,
Is granted scarce to gods above.

For a partial application of the idea we may compare Middleton's Women Beware Women, i. 2 (early). But the real difficulty, the rock over which the editorial barques of Hamner and others have hopelessly been shattered, is the unlucky for in line 163. "Why for," said Malone, finding the unfortunate for "inconsequent." No doubt Cressida's reasoning is a trite irregular. Such arguments would not pass muster in Mill's Logic; but the editors might have remembered that, in the first place, the speaker is a woman; and, in the second place, being in love, she cannot, according to her own showing, "be wise." Really it is perfectly easy to trace the line of thought. "I angiled," she says, "for your thoughts, but got nothing out of you, either because you are not in love, or because you are too wise;" and then the words wise and love remind her of the proverb, and she whimically rounds off her sentence with, "for you know, you can't both love and be wise." It is an admirable mon
NOTES TO TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

ACT III. Scene 2.

aguerter, a triumph of feminine reasoning power, and ten times as true to life as the logical proprieties suggested by the commentators, amongst whom Hamner barbarously printed, "a sign you love not" (183).

183. Line 155: Outliving beauty’s outward.—The substantial use of adjectives is very common in Elizabethan English. Thus in Shakespeare we have pale=paleness, Venus and Adonis, 598; Lucrece, 1512; fair=fairness, Sonnet lviii. 3; vast= vastness, Hamlet, l. 2. 195; and many others. See Abbott, A Shakespearean Grammar, pp. 20, 21.

187. Line 172: Might be affronted . . . —For affront =confront cf. Hamlet, iii. 1. 31. So in the well-known line from Paradise Lost, l. 991:

And with their darkness durest affront this light.

188. Line 180: as plantation to the moon.—This line is best illustrated by a passage which Farmer quotes from Reginald Scott’s Discoverie of Witchcraft: “The poor husbandman perceiveth that the increase of the moone maketh plants fruitful so: as in the full moone they are in the best strength; decealing in the wane; and in the conjunction do utterlie wither and fade.” Pope misunderstood and altered to planets. So Theobald.

189. Line 181: As iron to Adamant.—Adamant here, as often, signifies the magnet, or lodestone. So, to take an instance outside Shakespeare, in the Return from Parnassus, ii. 1 we have:

I am her needle: she is my Adamant.

Compare Midsummer Night’s Dream, ii. 1. 196, note 115.

190. Line 195: When waterdrops have worn the stones of Troy.—We may remember the familiar line:

Gutta cavat tapisdem, non vi sed sapc cadendo.

So Lucretius, bk. iv. 1290, 1291;

None videt estam guttas in rins cadentes

Honoris templo in spatio pertundere sann.

So also Shakespeare himself in Lucrece, 959. Grey, too, in his notes refers to Spencer, sonnet xxvii.

191. Line 201: or STEPDAME to her son.—Quite a classical touch. The Latin poets delight to lavish abuse on the "injusta noverca" (Virg., Eclogues, iii. 33). On the English stage she is not such a familiar figure. In the next line (202) stick=stab; cf. Two Gentlemen of Verona, i. 1. 106. This speech is a finely-developed piece of character-drawing. Cresseida’s floridasseverations of loyalty are a fit prelude to her final faithlessness.

192. Line 217: press it to death.—See Much Ado, note 173. A description of the punishment will be found in the successive editions of Chamberlaynes’ Angline Notitia.

ACT III. SCENE 3.

193. Lines 3-5.

Appear it to your mind
That, through the sight I bear in things, to LOVE
I have abandon’d Troy.

This is a passage of considerable difficulty. According to the Cambridge editors things to love is the reading of the Quarto and the first three Folios. Johnson, however, says "the word is so printed that nothing but the sense can determine whether it be love or Jove." He himself printed Jove, which, combined with the next line, certainly gives a possible sense. Myself I think that we ought to retain what is almost conclusively the reading of the old copies, viz. to love; placing, then, the comma after things, and taking to love with what follows, we may interpret the passage with Steevens: "I have left Troy to the dominion of love, to the consequences of the amour of Paris and Helen." Obviously this is not a little line-drawn and suggestive of special pleading; but, unless we adopt one of the sweeping emendations proposed, I do not see what else can be made of the lines. Grant White’s explanation, "Through my peculiar knowledge as to where it is well to place affection or regard I have abandon’d Troy," seems to me—and I am glad to observe that Dyce was of the same opinion—extraordinarily weak. Rowe, and after him Theobald, followed F. & in reading "in things to come." Collie’s MS. Corrector gave "things above," and in the previous line quite needlessly altered appear to appeal. Dyce prints to Jove, and puts the comma at the end of the line. In Carton’s Destruction of Troy a dialogue takes place between Cressida and Calchas on the arrival of the former in the Greek camp. She reproaches her father with having been a traitor to his country, to which he replies: "Ha, ha, my daughter, thinkest thou it is a fit thing to despise the answer of the gods, and especially in that which touches my health. I know certainly by their answers this war shall not endure long, this city shall be destroyed, and the nobles also, and the burgesses, and therefore it is better for us to be here safe, than to be slain with them" (book iii. pp. 55, 56). Similarly Lydgate represents Calchas as warned by his "sight in things to come," (?) to desert the cause of the Trojans. The seer enters Apollo’s temple and consults the god, and suddenly comes the answer:

Be right well ware thou ne tourne agayn
To Troy townes, for that were but in vayne,
For finally leme this thyngys of me,
In shorte space it shall destroyed be.

194. Lines 22-24:

this Aeconer,
I know, is such a wret in their affairs,
That their negociations all must black.

Theobald conjectured rest, which Hamner printed. Malone, too, was inclined to adopt the same reading. "At Aeconer," he says (Var. Ed. vol. viii. p. 341), "is such a stay or support of their affairs. All the ancient English muskets had rests by which they were supported. The subsequent words, 'Wanting his manage,' appear to me to confirm the emendation." If we are to read rest we may remember that then, as now, it was applied to a part of the violin, from which in the present passage the metaphor might possibly be drawn. Compare Return from Parnassus, Arber’s Reprint, p. 68:

How can he play whose heartstrings broken are?
How can he keep his rest that ne’er found rest?

Really, however, there is not the slightest necessity for meddling with the text. Rest makes excellent sense. We have already had the same idea in "o’er-revered," i. 3.
NOTES TO TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

157. The wrest was an instrument for tightening or drawing with the strings of a harp; hence the appropriateness here of the word slack that immediately follows. For similar metaphor compare Macbeth, l. 7. 60. In a very curious letter: 'wherein, part of the entertainment unto the queen's Majesty, at Killingworth Castl, in Warwick Sheer, in this Somers Progress, 1575, is signified,' written by Robert Laneham, and quoted in part in the introductory essay to Percy's Reliques of Ancient English Poetry, we have a minute account of the equipment of an ancient minstrel, and amongst his accoutrements were: 'About his neck a red ribbon suitable to his girdle. His harp in good grace dependent before him. His wrest tyed to a green lace and hanging by.’ So again in A treatise between truth and invention, printed among Skelton's Works, and referred to by Douce (Illustrations, vol. ii. p. 61), we find:

- A harpe gathente sounde as it sette.
- The harper may wrest it untnautible.
- A harper with his wrest may tune the harpe wrong.
- Mysteromy of an instrument shall hurt a true song.

Equally to the point is his reference to King James's edict against combats: "this small instrument the tongue being kept in tune by the wrest of saw." In Minshew's Dictionary, ed. 1627, p. 727, the verb to wrest is explained: "to winde, to wring, to straine," and translated by the Latin tygere, contygere. Johnson seems to have misunderstood the word. "It is used," he says, speaking of the substantive, "in Spenser and Shakespeare for an active or moving power: I suppose from the force of a tiltter acting with his lance in his rest;" and then he quotes the lines given above.

190. Line 98: how dearly ever parted.—That is to say, gifted, endowed. So in Ben Jonson's Every Man in his Humour, Macente is described in the Character of the Persons as "a man well ported, a sufficient scholar and travelled." Compare also Cure for a Cuckold, act v. sc. 1: for as you are every way well-ported.

190. Lines 105, 106: nor doth the eye itself, that most pure spirit of sense, behold itself.

For the idea expressed in this passage compare Julius Cesar, l. 2. 52, 55. Spirit of sense we have already had, with a somewhat different meaning, l. 1. 58. These lines (105, 106) are omitted in all the Folios.

201. Line 109: speculatio.—Not merely "vision," "power of sight," but "intelligence," operating through the medium of the eye. So in Macbeth, III. 4. 86:

-Thou hast no speculation in those eyes
Which thou dost glare with!

202. Line 110: miroir'd.—Q. and F. have married, which the Cambridge editors retain, though the Globe ed. prints miroir'd. The latter is the most certain (at least I think so) emendation of Collier's M3. Corrector. It has been adopted by Singer and Dyce. Dr. Ingley condemned the conjecture as "just one of those emendations which beguile the judgment, hurl criticism, and entail our love of the surprising and ingenious. But it is not sound." To which I think we may reply with Dyce, Why? Malone gives married without any note. If we retain this reading the word must bear much the meaning as in l. 2. 100, i.e. closely united, allied. Mirror as a verb does not occur elsewhere in Shakespeare. For the thought compare King John, ii. 496-500.

202. Line 130: who, like an arch, reverberates.—Q. and F. I read reverberates, i.e., says Boswell (Malone, Var. Ed. vol. viii. 349), "they who applaud reverberate. This elliptic mode of expression is in our author's manner." But lower down we have receive and renders, and at least the verbs must be uniform—all singular or plural. It is best therefore to read reverberates with F. 2, F. 3, and F. 4; so the Cambridge editors, Globe edn., Dyce, and most texts. Who will then—which, i.e. "applause which." For a full discussion of Shakespeare's use of the relative pronouns (who, which, and that) see Abbott, Shakespearean Grammar, pp. 175-187.

204. Lines 123-128: I saw much rapt in this, &c.—These lines have passed in the hands of the editors through the strangest metamorphoses. The text here printed is that given by the First Folio. It is retained by the Cambridge editors, and makes excellent verse. The reading of the Quarto is as follows:

I was much rapt in this,
And apprehended here immediately.
The unknowne Aias, heven what a man is there?
A very horse, that he has knowes not what Nature what things there are Now it may be worth while to pause for a moment and observe how Pope and Hamner treated the passage. Their respective texts throw some light on the spirit in which they approached Shakespeare; not assuredly that “spirit of reverence” which Coleridge described as the first essential of an editor. Pope, then, followed the Folio down to Ajax; afterwards he read:

Heaven is a man’s own refuge: A very horse, He knows not his own nature: what things are Most absid in regard, and dear in use.

Hammer, who in his preface declared that his guiding principle had been never “to give a loose to fancy, or indulge a licentious spirit of criticism,” printed the following rearrangement of the lines:

I was much rapt
In this I read, and apprized here
Immediately the unknown Ajax: heavens!
What a man’s there? A very horse, that has
He knows not what: in nature what things there are Most absid in regard, and dear in use.

The third line is surely a rhetorical curiosity. Unknownto mean, as Johnson explains it, “who has abilities which are not brought into use.”

206. Line 141: And great Troy SHREWING. —So the Quarto. F. 1 has the far less graphic shrinking.

206. Line 145: Time hath, my lord, a wallet at his back. —Shakespeare may have been thinking of Spenser’s Faerie Queene, bk. vi. c. viii. stanza xxiv.:

Here in this bottle I said the sorry maid,
I put the tears of my contrition,
Till to the brim I have it full drained;
And in this bag which I behind me dam,
I put repentance for things past and gone.
Yet is the bottle leak, and bag so torn
That all which I put in falls out anon,
And is behind me trodden down of scorn,
Who mocketh all my pils, and lauds the more I mourn.

207. Line 150: PERSERVANCE, dear my lord. —Perservance only occurs in one other passage in Shakespeare, where it has the same accent as here, viz. in Macbeth, iv. 3. 98: "Bounty, perservance, mercy, lowliness."

Shakespeare never uses our modern verb persever at all, but always persevere. In one passage in Lear (iii. 5. 225) the Q2 reads persever, but F1 rightly print persever.

208. Line 153: to the adjunct near. —Hammer’s excellent correction of the Folio reading, “abject, near.” This simile does not occur in the Quarto. Throughout this speech (which a recent critic, Mr. W. S. Lilly, has singled out as one of the very finest in all literature) the readings are in small points confused and, so to speak, fluctuating.

209. Line 158: Grasp in the corner: welcome ever smiles. —I have ventured here to adopt (with Dyce) Pope’s correction. Q. and F1 read “the welcome;” but omitting the we gain a far more pointed antithesis. Hammer’s suggestion, “grasp the corner,” deserves to be mentioned.

210. Lines 178, 179:

And give to dust, that is a little gilt,
More laud than gild o’er dusted.

Give: the old copies have go; the correction (due to Thrilby) was first adopted by Theobald. For gild ("to gild") in the second line Theobald and others, e.g. Stenton, would substitute gold; needlessly, however, because gild may well bear the sense of gold. Cf. Richard II. ii. 1. 283-286:

Redeem from breaking pawn the blinsh’d crown,
Wipe off the dust that hides our sovereign’s gild,
And make high majesty look like itself.

The thought embodied is quite clear. “That which is solid and good, but a little antiquated, will always be put on one side in favour of that which is new and attractive, though sham and unlasting.”

211. Line 198: Made emulous missions ’mongst the gods themselves. —Referring obviously to the fact that the deities of Olympus took part in the struggle, some fighting for the Greeks, some for the Trojans. Shakespeare may have borrowed the idea from Chapman’s translation.

212. Line 197: Knows almost every grain of Pluto’s gold. —The Folio has “every grain of Plutus gold;” so again in Julius Caesar, iv. 3. 101: “dearer than Plutus mine.” It seems best to alter to Plutus, although the confusion of the two deities is a very common occurrence in Elizabethan literature. Thus in Hero and Leander, second sextet, we find:

Whence his admireing eyes more pleasure took
Than Dirc, or heaves of gold fixing his look. —p. 636.

A still clearer instance comes in the Duchess of Malfi, iii. 2:

Plutus, the god of riches,
When he’s sent by Jupiter to any man,
He goes limping. —Webster’s Works, p. 79.

Compare, too, the following from Hannibal and Scipio, reprinted among Bullen’s Old Plays, New Series, vol. i. p. 187:

Borrow of Plutus; he will not deny it
Upon your bond. Stay: here’s a great misleading;
His state and riches were of poet’s making.

In Timon of Athens, i. 1. 287, the Folio gives Plutus, which inclines us to attribute the error in the present line and in the Julius Cesar passage to the copyist rather than to Shakespeare himself. For the classical side of the question see Aristophanes, Plutus, 727.

213. Line 199: Keeps place with thought; i.e. “there is,” says the sonorous Warburton, “in the providence of a state, as in the providence of the universe, a kind of ubiquity.” He rightly condemns the obvious and prosaic suggestion, “Keeps pace.” In the next line a syllable is wanting, which has led to various proposals, amongst which Collier’s “dumb crudities,” i.e. before they become thoughts, seems to me best. But to my ear dumb crudities in its emphatic position, forming the cadence of the verse, is equivalent to two feet.

214. Lines 222, 223:

Sweet, rouse yourself; and the weak wanton Cupid
Shall from your neck unloose.

Collier adopted the Swift of his MS. Corrector. Perhaps wanton should be treated as a substantive, and line 222 pointed, the weak wanton, Cupid. So Walker.

215. Line 225: Be shook to air.—Q. has air simply; F 1 and F. 2 says ayre. Collier read with his MS. Corrector every air.

216. Line 229: My name is shrilly gon’d.—Metaphor from bull-baiting. So in Hamlet, v. 2. 360, 361:

I have a voice and precedent of peace,
To keep my name unbrok’n.

The editors compare Sonnet ex.

329
NOTES TO TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

ACT III. Scene 3.

217. Line 231: Seal a commission to a blank of danger.
—Schmidt (Shakespeare Lexicon) quotes amongst the passages, e.g. Hamlet, iv. 1. 42; Othello, iii. 4. 129, in which a blank signifies “the white mark in the centre of a target.” How he applies the metaphor here I cannot see. The word surely bears the same sense as in Richard II. ii. 1. 240, 250:
And daily new exactions are devis'd,
As blanks, benevolences,—I got not what.

Compare, too, in the same play, i. 4. 48, and note 101; in the Clarendon Press ed. of Richard II. Mr. Aldis Wright gives two interesting quotations from Holinshed that perfectly illustrate the use of the word: “many blanke charters were devised . . . when they were so sealed the king’s officers wrote in the same what liked them.” Holinshed p. 1102, col. 1; and again: “moreover they were compelled to put their hands and seals to certaine blanks . . . in the whiche, when it pleased hym hee might write, what hee thought good.” (p. 1105, col. 1).
So in the Revenger’s Tragedy we have:
Yet words are but great men’s blanks.

Briefly, it is our idea of “a blank cheque,” as explained in note 101, Richard II.; and the metaphor exactly suits the present passage. Hunter repeats Schmidt’s mistake.

218. Lines 252, 253: like an hostess that hath no arithmetic.—Compare the scornful reference in i. 2. 129 to a tapster’s arithmetic.

219. Line 254: God b’w’ ye.—Q. and Fr. gave “God buy you.” Rows corrected.

220. Line 305: to make catlings on; i.e. catcunt. In Romeo and Juliet, iv. 5. 182, one of the musicians bears the expressive name “Simon Catling.”

ACT IV. SCENE 1.

221. Line 8: Witness the progress of your speech.—Proces here has almost the legal official sense seen in the French procès verbal.

222. Line 11: During all question of the gentle truce.—Apparently question is equivalent, in some rather vague undefined way, to intercourse; but Johnson was inclined to read quiet.

223. Line 20: In humane gentleness.—Pope, absurdly enough, retained the old pointing of the lines, which made exquisite nonsense:
And thou shalt hunt a lion that will fly
With his face backward in humane gentleness.
Theobald naturally seized upon such an opening for labourd sarcasm at the expense of his arch foe. Walker, comparing Midsummer Night’s Dream, ii. 2. 57-60, would read “in humane gentleness” (A Critical Examination, iii. 195); a needless change.

224. Line 36: His purpose meets you; i.e. “I bring you his orders;” “I am his messenger.”

225. Line 48: The bitter disposition of the time.—Disposition—circumstances of, i.e. the way affairs are disposed, arranged; not a very common meaning.
ACT IV. Scene 1.

NOTES TO TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

ACT IV. Scene 4.

It seems to me that the key to the meaning of the whole passage lies in line 77:

"But we in silence hold this virtue well."—

Paris here answers, with the courtesy and dignity of a gentleman, the vulgar abuse which Diomedes, with such execrably bad taste, heaps upon Helen in the presence of the man who might have wronged her husband, but was all the more bound to defend her. He has already rebuked Diomedes above in line 67:

"You are too bitter to your countrywoman; but Diomedes, far from taking any notice of this rebuke, merely becomes more abusive. The reply of Paris may be awkwardly worded, but the meaning is quite clear; and the dignified sarcasm of it could hardly fail to have penetrated even Diomedes’ panoply of self-conceit. ‘‘You,’ Paris says, ‘practise the common trick of a petty dealer;’—chapman is evidently used here in a contemptuous sense (see the last note)—‘you run down the article you want to buy, but we decline to compete with you on your own ground; we despise such tricks, and in silence hold fast to this virtue, not to ‘puff’ (as we should say) ‘what we have to sell, but to let its value speak for itself.’’ Of course he means that they will part with Helen only as the prize of victory, and not for money, but the great point is that he excuses himself: for not defending her from Diomedes’ vulgar abuse by pointing out that, in such a case, a noble nature thinks silence the best answer. The fancied necessity of having a rhyming couplet at the end of the scene may, perhaps, account for the somewhat obscure wording of the passage in the last two lines.—P. A. M.

ACT IV. Scene 2.

229. Lines 4-6:

sleep KILL those pretty eyes,
And give as soft ATTACHMENT to thy senses
As infants’ empty of all thought.

KILL, a very strong and effective word, was changed by Pope to seal. Attachment = arrestment, a sense that the verb very frequently bears; e.g. II. Henry IV. iv. 2. 109:

Of capital treason I attach you both.

With line 6 compare Merry Wives, v. 5. 56:

Sleep she as sound as careless infancy

230. Line 12: VENOMOUS wights; i.e., says Steevens, “Fenícii, those who practise nocturnal sorcery;” the explanation does not seem to me entirely satisfactory.

231. Line 13: AS TERIOUSLY as hell.—The Folioe have a curious variant: Husbly.

232. Line 33: A poor CAPOCHIO.—The word was too many for the printers; it appears in Q. and F. as chipochio. Theobald suggested capochio = the thick head of a club, and then, by a natural transition, “a thick-headed man,” i.e. a simpleton. A = Ah, very probably; and Dyce prints the latter.

233. Line 68: you’ll be so true to him, to be false to him; i.e. “in pretending that he is not here, and thus (as you think) serving his interest, you are really doing him harm.”

234. Line 62: My matter is so RASH; i.e. requiring such haste. For a somewhat similar, though not precisely parallel use, compare Romeo and Juliet, ii. 2. 118:

It is too rash, too unadvised, too sudden.

235. Line 73: We met by chance.—Troilus means to enjoin secrecy upon Helen.

236. Line 74: the secrets of nature.—So the Folioe; Q. has “secrets of neighbour Pandar.” The editors have displayed considerable ingenuity in correcting what needs no correction. Secret is here a triallayble: scanned so the line runs with perfect smoothness. Walker (Shakespeare’s versification, p. 10) quotes several verses where secret has a triallayble force; e.g. Edward II., v. 4. 28:

Well do it bravely, and be secret;

and same play, v. 6. 5:

Whether thou wilt be secret in this.

337. Line 103: I know no touch of contemptuous.—For touch = feeling, compare Macbeth, iv. 2. 9.

338. Line 106: the very CROWN of falsehood.—Compare Cymbeline, i. 6. 4:

My supreme crown of grief.

A natural metaphor to signify the culminating point in anything. So Tennyson’s “sorrow’s crown of sorrow.” In the next line (107) Hamner greatly weakened the vigour of the verse by omitting (with F. 2 and F. 3) forces.

ACT IV. Scene 3.

339. Line 1: It is great morning.—Rather an awkward Gallicism, grand-jour; repeated in Cymbeline, iv. 2. 61.

ACT IV. Scene 4.

440. Line 4: And VIOLENTeth in a sense as strong.—So Q.; the Folioe give:

And no less in a sense as strong;

which Pope changed to:

And in its sense so less strong.

Q., no doubt, is right. Ben Jonson in The Devil is an Ass, ii. 2, has:

Nor nature violence least in both these.

Farmer also refers (rather vaguely) to a passage in Fuller’s Worthies: “his former adversaries violent—against him;” it will be found in Natick’s ed. of the Worthies, vol. iii. p. 510.

441. Line 15: at the goodly saying is.—I have not been able to trace this song; it is not given in Chappell, from which, perhaps, we may conclude that its origin is not known.

442. Line 21: By FRIENDSHIP nor by speaking.—This is not very far short of being sheer nonsense; perhaps we should read with Collier’s MS. Corrector “by silence.”

443. Line 26: in so STRAIN’T a purity.—An obvious and effective metaphor. Fy. are far less graphic: “strange a purity.”

331
ACT IV. Scene 4.

NOTES TO TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

244. Line 36: JUSTLES roughly by.—It is worth while to notice that Shakespeare always uses the now obsolete form justle. So in Byron's Conspiracy (1806), i. 1, Chapman has:

And justle with the ocean for a room.

Milton translates the concurrentia sors of Juvenal (Satire xvi. 19) by "justling rocks" (Paradise Lost, II. 1017). When, or why, justle drove out its brother form I do not know.

245. Lines 52, 53:

some say the Genius so cries "Come!"

The editors naturally refer to Pope's lines in The Dying Christian to his Soul:

Hark! they whisper: angels say

"Sister spirit, come away."

Pope, we may remember, repeats the thought in Eloisa to Abelard:

"Come, sister, come," it said, or seemed to say,

"Thy place is here, and sister come away."

246. Line 55: rain, to lay this wind.—Referring to the current idea that rain falling stopped a wind. Compare Lucan, 1790:

At last it rains, and busy winds give o'er.

So Macbeth, i. 7. 25.

247. Line 58: the MERRY GREEKES.—See note (34) on 1. 2. 118.

248. Lines 75-80.—A full discussion of the difficulties of this passage is not possible in the space at our disposal. It must be sufficient if I say that line 79 is omitted in the Quarto; that line 80 reads as follows in the Folio:

Flawing and swelling o'er with arts and exercises:

and that in my text I have followed the Cambridge editors. Line 80, as given by the Folio, is surely wrong: flawing (= flowing—a misprint) and swelling cannot very well be anything but variae lectiones; it is a question, therefore, which epithet we should adopt, and flawing seems to be the most likely to be correct. It was probably a marginal correction of swelling, the latter being added by the printer through some misunderstanding.

249. Line 98: Presuming on their changeful potency.—Why this line should be emended I know not, except indeed that there will always be some one ready to alter a verse of Shakespeare. Presuming simply means "testing," "trying," in other words, "seeing how far we can go;" and taken in this way the words admirably round off the preceding thought. Collier adopted childish, the proposal of his MS. Corrector, and found it excellent, whereas to Dyce's thinking starker nonsense was never put on paper. Quot homines, etc.

250. Line 106: catch more simplicity.—Not a very lucid phrase. Apparently Troilus means that while others win high praise he has to be content with "a plain simple approbation:" so Johnson.

251. Line 124: To shame the zeal of my petition.—Q. and Ff. all read zeal, which Delius retains, with what sense it is hard to see. The emendation, due to Warburton, gives fair sense. According to Walker the converse error, zeal for zeal, occurs in II. Henry IV. iv. 2. 27.

252. Line 134: I'll answer to my LUST.—Not an easy line. Lust is difficult, and the editors have been very ingenious in emending it away. Of the proposed corrections Walker's "to my lust" is decidedly good, the sense being "answer to my name; when I am elsewhere I will be Diomed; here I am the Greek ambassador." Myself I would suggest—and I observe the idea has occurred to Mr. Lettsom—"thy lust," i.e. will answer you in any way you please. The change is slight and the sense gives fairly adequate. Perhaps, however, we should keep to the copes and explain, "When I am hence I shall be ready to answer for what I have done here—been pleased to do." Lust repeatedly—pleasure, its original meaning in O.E.

253. Line 138: Come, to the port.—The parallel scene in Chaucer—Troylus and Chryseide, bk. v.—should be compared with Shakespeare's work. I do not think Chaucer suffers in the comparison. Dryden in his "respectful perversion" of the play abridges and entirely transforms the episode.

254. Lines 146-150: Let us make ready . . . and single chivalry.—Five lines omitted in Q. Malone thinks they were added by the actors for the sake of concluding with a rhymed couplet. But without them the scene would end very abruptly, for which reason we may fairly attribute them to Shakespeare. The Folios give the speech "Let us make ready" to Diomed—a most obvious mistake noted by Ribson and others; Diomed has made his exit with Troilus and Cressida.

ACT IV. Scene 5.

[In the old copies we have, at the beginning of this scene, the stage-direction, Lists set out. This is absurd, and introduces unnecessarily the customs of medieval chivalry in the Grecian camp. — F. A. M.]

255. Line 8: till thy sphered his cheek.—We have repeated allusions in the dramatists to bows, a game at which churchwardens seem to have been peculiarly proficient. An exact parallel to the present line occurs in Webster's Vittoria Coromona, i.:

That nobleman Corbi faith his cheek hath a most excellent bias; it would fain jump with my mistress.

—Works, p. 7.

Steevies says, with what authority I know not, "the idea is taken from the puffy cheeks of the winds as represented in old prints and maps." The bias of a bow is the weight of lead inserted in one side of it, causing the bow to twist in its course towards that side. If the bow is held with the bias on the outer side, it will run with an outward curve; if on the inside, it will "twist in." Cf. note on iii. 2. 52, and King John, ii. I. 574-581.

256. Lines 20-23.—These lines are given as prose in Q. and Ff.; first arranged in verse-form by Pope.

257. Line 22: that WINTER from your lips; i.e. Nestor. A natural metaphor. So in Randolph's Hey for Honesty:

Can any man endure to spend his youth in kissing Winter's frozen lips?

—Works, p. 47.

258. Line 37: I'll make my match to live; i.e. "I will make such bargains as I may live by," says Johnson, and his explanation is probably right; but the phrase is very clumsy.
NOTES TO TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

260. Line 55: There's language in her eye.—Steevens quotes a curiously parallel thought from St. Chrysostom: "non locuta es lingua, sed locuta es gezmam; non locuta es voce, sed ordis locuta es clarissim quam voce."

260. Line 56: Nay, her foot speaks; her wanton spirits look out.—For "spirit" pronounced as a monosyllable, cf. Tempest, i. 2. 468; Julius Cæsar, i. 1. 29. A scansion very common in Milton; e.g. A Vacation Exercise:

Which deepest spirits and choicest win desire.

261. Line 59: That gives accosting welcome.—Q. and F. have "a coating welcome," which Steevens interprets "a sidelong glance of invitation;" but what point there is in saying that a welcome is sidelong before it comes, or how it can be sidelong, Steevens does not make clear. Mason's accosting seems to me certain: it has been adopted by Grant White, Dyce, and other editors; cf. Walker, A Critical Examination, vol. i. p. 199. For the exact force of the word see Sir Toby Belch's commentary, Twelfth Night, i. 3. 60. The only passage that at all makes in favour of the reading of the copies is Venus and Adonis, 870:

And all in haste she costes to the cry.

Collier's MS. Corrector gave occasion.

262. Line 60: Andwide unclose the tables of their thoughts.—So "our heart's table" (=tablet), All's Well That Ends Well, i. 1. 106. Hamlet speaks of "the table of my memory" (I. 5. 98).

263. Lines 73-75,—This speech is given to Agamemnon in Q. and F. Theobald restored it to Achilles, and rightly; Æneas' reply sufficiently shows who the last speaker must have been.

264. Line 91: either to the uttermost.—We have just had the phrase to the edge of all extremity (66). Colgrave translates combustes utemuram by "to fight at sharpe, to fight it out, or to the uttermost." Shakespeare uses to the utterness in Macbeth, i. 1. 71.

265. Line 103: For dignifies an improper thought with breath.—Q. has impair, F. impair. If retained, this would mean "a thought unworthy of his character," i.e. "not equal to him;" but for the use of the adjective no authority is given; in the passage (quoted by Steevens) in the Preface to Chapman's Shield of Achilles (1568) the word, as Dyce has conclusively shown, is a substantive. I think, therefore, that we should adopt the correction impair—it only differs from the Quarto by a single letter—suggested by Johnson, and accepted amongst modern editors by Dyce and Grant White. See, however, the note (xviii.) in Cambridge Shakespeare, vol. vi. p. 298.

266. Line 112: Translate him to me; i.e. "explain his character." For translate = interpret, cf. Hamlet, i. 1. 2.

267. Line 120: my father's sister's son.—See ii. 1. 14, with note.

268. Line 142: Not neoptolemus so mirabile.—Of course Achilles himself is meant. Shakespeare had no Lempière to consult, and may have thought that Neoptolemus was the nomen gentilissimum. Warburton's "Neoptolemus' sive transisse" was amazing, even for Warburton.

269. Line 148: Fame with her loudest oars.—This was (and is) the regular proclamation of a crier, a summons in fact to people to be silent and lend attention. So in The Sun's Darling we have (ll. 1): "No more of this; awake the music! Oyes! music!" (Ford's Works, vol. ii. p. 399). Cf. also Dekker: "And, like a Dutch crier, make proclamation with thy drum; the effect of thy O-yes being, That if any man, woman, or child . . ." (Prose Works, ed. Grosart, vol. ii. p. 204). Though, obviously enough, the French imperative (from an obsolete word oisir, upon which see Littre), it seems by some process of popular abbreviation to have been pronounced monosyllabically, the last syllable almost disappearing. Compare Merry Wives, v. 5. 45:

Mistress Quickly. Crier Hobgoblin, make the fairy Oyes.

Pistol. Elves, list your names; silence, you sly toys.

There is a still more curious form-variant in Gabriel Harvey's Four Letters: "As they will needs notoriously proclaime themselves: as it were with a publice oh-ay" (Harvey's Prose Works, in Routh Library, vol. i. p. 234). I have noticed a strange seventeenth-century use of the word which seems to show that from meaning the call of the crier, it came eventually to signify the crier himself; the instance occurs in the prologue to Lee's Theodosius:

Your lawyer too, that like an Oyes bawls,
That drowes the market higher in the stalls.

Perhaps, however, this was merely a fragment of contemporary slang. We must not forget the legal phrase oyer et terminer, on which see the Imperial Dictionary, s.v.

270. Lines 165-170.—Six lines wanting in the Quarto.

271. Line 172: most imperious Agamemnon.—For imperious = imperial, cf. Venus and Adonis, 995, 996:

She clepes him king of graves and grave for kings, imperious supreme of all mortal things.

272. Line 178: the untraded oath.—That is to say, the unfamiliar, unusual oath. Etymologically trade and tред are the same word. Hence the old meaning of trade was a path; from which it came to signify "a beaten track," and then, by a natural metaphor, "a business." Its original sense is seen in Richard II. iii. 3. 156-157:

Or I'll be buried in the king's highway,
Some way of common trade, where subjects' feet
May hourly tramp;

where Theobald needlessly substituted tread. "Trade wind" is simply "the wind that keeps a beaten track," i.e. blows always in the same direction. Compare use of traded in act ii. 2. 64. For oath Ò has the not unnatural variant earth; for "that I" it gives "thy."

273. Line 202: good old chronicle.—So Hamlet speaks of the players as "the abstract and brief chronicles of the time" (ll. 2. 545).

274. Line 220: Fond towers, whose wanton tops do burst the clouds.—Compare Pericles, i. 4. 24:

Whose towers bore heads so high they kiss'd the clouds.

276. Line 224: the end crowns all.—We have the same proverb (finis coronat opus) in All's Well That Ends Well, iv. 4. 35.
NOTES TO TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

ACT IV. Scene 5.

278. Line 230: I shall forestall thee, Lord Ulysses, thou!—Why thou? The repetition, says Steevens, was intended as an insult. So in Tempest, i. 2. 313, 314:

What, ho! slave! Caliban!

Thou earth, thou! speak.

But why should Achilles wish to insult Ulysses? Tyrwhitt saw the difficulty and proposed though, of which Ritson approved. Walker, condemning thou as "certainly wrong," suggested there, i.e. "in that matter" (A Critical Examination, vol. iii. p. 201). I have not ventured to introduce into the text either of these corrections. [One would expect Achilles to address any insult he had to spare to Hector, whom he treats much as a beer-sodden barge would treat a first-rate amateur boxer with whom he was about to fight. Certainly Shakespeare does not favour the Greeks in this play; and such an ill-mannered brute, as Achilles is here represented, would have been likely enough to insult Ulysses or any one else, as long as he could do so with impunity.—F. A. M.]

277. Line 233: And quoted joint by joint.—For quote = to observe, compare Hamlet, ii. 1. 112: "I had not quoted him;" and Romeo and Juliet, i. 4. 31:

What curious eye doth quote deformities?

From the French oeil, i.e. the margin of a book where notes and observations could be written.

278. Line 243: Shall I destroy him? whether there, or there?—An awkward verse, in which one is tempted (with Pope) to omit the last or there; but line 254 favours the text as it stands. For whether as a monosyllable (whet), cf. Tempest, v. 1. 111. See Abbott, Shakespearean Grammar, p. 348.

279. Line 250: in NICE conjecture.—The adjective here suggests the idea of "fastidious minuteness," "precision. Etymologically the word comes from Latin necesse, through the O.F. nice; hence its original meaning was foolish, ignorant, in which sense Chaucer uses both substantive and adjective. Cotgrave gives nicely as an equivalent for migneunement, which exactly fits the present passage.

280. Line 256: that STIFFTHY Mars his helm.—Theobald would read smithied; he made the same change in Hamlet, iii. 2. 69, where the substantive occurs. The stiffly was the place where the anvil stood. Malone says that the word was still used in his time in Yorkshire.

281. Line 257: We have had PETINGE ears.—So "petting river." Midsommer Night's Dream, ii. 1. 91: "Poor petting villages," Lear, ii. 3. 18; often in North's Flutarch.

282. Line 275: Beat loud the labourines.—For these words Q. has to taste your bounties, i.e. "entreat him to taste," the stop at the end of line 274 being removed: the reading of the Folio is far preferable.

ACT V. SCENE 1.

283. Line 4: CORE of envy.—Compare ii. 1. 7, with note.

284. Line 5: Thou crusty BATH of nature.—Minshew (Dictionary, p. 64) defines bath "as much bread as an oven will hold at one baking." Why it should be used as a term of contempt one does not quite see. Theobald changed to bocsk. It must be remembered, however, that Theobald had previously been called a cob-loaf. The dramatists often used the word, by a natural metaphor, to signify "of the same description, kind."

285. Line 15: Achilles... VARLET.—Q. and F. I, F. 2, and F. 3 have harlot; Theobald conjectured harlot. Whether or no varlet ever bore the same sense as harlot (which is extremely doubtful; cf. however, the passage quoted by the commentators from Middleton and Dekker's Honest Whore, i. 10) there can be no possible reason for altering the text. The expression is sufficiently explained by li. 1. 126.

286. Line 32: such preposterous DISCOVERER.—Various alternative readings have been proposed. Hamner substituted debaucheries; Collier's MS. Corrector dialeuouers; Singer—and this I believe to be right—discoverers, i.e. in the sense which the word bears in Isaiah viii. 8. Discoveries, if retained, must mean that Thersites regards Patroclus as something abnormal, as, in fact, a mere varlet. See last note.

287. Line 35: akin of SLEAVE-silk.—Q. gives skreas; Fr. soye. We have the word in Macbeth, i. 2. 37: "Sleep that knits up the ravell'd sleave of care;" where the Clarendon Press note quotes from Florian: "Banasia, any kind of sleave or raw sike." Skeat connects with sipp, German schliefen, the general idea of the word being looseness, slackness; hence it would naturally serve as a term of contempt.

288. Line 38: poster'd with such WATERFILLES.—Compare Hamlet's "Doost know this water-fy!" (v. 2. 83). A water-fy flitting idly about the surface of a stream is "the proper emblem of a busy trifier." So Johnson.

289. Line 41: Finch-bog!—So in Macbeth, iv. 2. 88, 94:

What, you silly!

Young fry of treachery.

Cf. Love's Labour's Lost, v. 1. 78: "pigeon-egg of discretion."

290. Line 45: her daughter, my fair love; i.e. Polixena. This was one of the details borrowed from Carton.

291. Line 57: one that loves QUALITY; i.e. in an offensive sense; quail signifying, in contemporary argot, a wanton woman. The origin of the expression may be seen in the French proverb, "Chaud comme une coille ... " So in Cotgrave, coille oftis; cf. Littre, sub voc. Coille.

292. Line 59: transformation of Jupiter.—Warburton's explanation of this passage is satisfactory. "He calls Menelaus the transformation of Jupiter, that is, as himself explains it, the bull, on account of his horns, which he had as a cuckold. This cuckold he calls the prioritas status of cuckold: i.e. his story had made him so famous, that he stood as the great archetype of his character." The epithet oblique, if retained, must be a continuation of the idea just developed. Hamner printed antiqua; Warburton obliqua.

293. Line 67: a FITCHEW, a toad, &c.—Thersites' repertory of abuse is extensive, and more than explains why earlier in the play he was addressed as "Mistress Theractus" (ll. 1. 39). A fitchew was a polecat; as an appellation the word was not complimentary; see Lear, iv. 6. 124.
ACT V. Scene 1.  NOTES TO TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

(This word was very variously spelt, fitch, fichele, fitcher, fichow, fichow, fichole, fichuk, and is from the old Dutch fich, and old French fiches, meaning a polecat, which latter word Cotgrave explains as "a fich or fumart," the latter being the old spelling of foumart, which, in the form foumart, is the only name by which the polecat is known in the northern counties, where no form of the word fich or fichew seems to have been preserved. The name foumart was given to the polecat to distinguish it from the sweetmart or common marten, which is still not uncommon among the mountains of Cumberland and Westmoreland. Grose gives (Provincial Glossary) fitch as the form used in Warwickshire, and fitchew as that used in Essex; while in Devonshire the form is fich or fitchet.

There is a proverb in Somersetshire, "As crook as a fitchet." Of the two words the Promotorium Parvulum gives apparently no form of fich or fichew, but it gives fumarea as a form of foumart. Barret gives fiches and fulmer. Palgrave gives fulmard.

There has been some doubt as to whether fitchew really meant a polecat, or some other form of weasel, perhaps a stoat. Bailey gives fitcher, fichow, "a polecat, or strong-scented ferret." Bell in his British Quadrupeds gives the polecat under fitchet weasel, and gives as other English names only Fiches, Polecat, Foumart, Fulmart. According to his classification the common marten, or beech marten, or stone-marten, is of a different genus to the polecat or fitchet weasel, which belongs to the genus Mustelidae, while the sweetmart belongs, in common with the pine marten, to the genus Martes. It is difficult to say why Shakespeare uses the word fichew in the sense in which it evidently bears in the passage from Lear referred to above; for however much the favourite prey of the polecat, the rabbit, may deserve the character which Lear assigns to the fichew, it cannot be said that this member of the weasel tribe is particularly libidinous. The female contents herself with one family in the year, varying from four to six. "Cross as a fitchet" is a natural proverb enough, for there are few fiercer animals than the polecat, considering its size, and I have known one successfully to fight a dog which had often tackled even the most formidable half-wild cats.—F. A. M.)

A putsock is a kite, a worthless species of hawk; so Cymbeline, i. 1. 129, 140:

"I chose an eagle, and did avoid a putsock."

A herring without a roe was evidently a proverbial expression; we have it in Romeo and Juliet, ii. 4. 39.

294. Line 83: sweet sink, sweet sewer.—Q. and F. have sure; the obvious correction was made by Rowe.

295. Line 90: Brabbling the hound.—This is the name technically applied to hounds (chiefly young hounds) that give tongue, or in sportman's phrase "open," when they have not properly struck upon the haunt of game; the idea comes out clearly in a passage in Merry Wives of Windsor, iv. 2. 295-300: "Will you follow, gentlemen? I beseech you, follow; see but the issue of my jealousy: if I cry out thus upon no mast, never trust me when I open again." As to etymology, Minshew rightly connects with Dutch brabbelien = to stammer, and French babiller = use too many words (Colgrave). Brabbling he defines as "a brawle, contention, strife." Compare King John, v. 2. 161, 162:

We hold our time too precious to be spent With such a brabbler;

i.e. a noisy fellow. So "This petty brabble" (=brawl, quarrel), in Titus Andronicus, i. 1. 62. For the same sense of the word cf. Greene (Works, p. 123), and Peele, Edward I. (Works, p. 390). Perhaps the generic idea underlying and connecting these seemingly different meanings is, "to make folly, blustering noise, without end or aim."

ACT V. Scene 2.

296. Line 11: if he can take her cliff.—A term borrowed from music. So in The Lovers Melancholy, i. i., in the beautiful passage describing the meeting of Menaphon and Erocles:

The young man grew at last
Into a pretty anger that a bird,
Whom art had never taught cif, moods, or notes . . .

Steeneus, too, refers to The Chances:

Will none but my C Clif, serve your turn?

We may remember the music-lesson in the Taming of the Shrew, iii. 1. 72-80, and Bianca's reading of "the gamut of Hortensio." Colgrave, s.v. clif, gives "a clif in musicke."

In the present passage there is doubtless some offensive innuendo.

297. Line 61: You how to great distruction.—So F., while Q. has destruction. So again in scene 3, line 85.

298. Lines 55, 56: How the devil luxury, with his . . . potato-finger.—An elaborate note on this passage by Collins is printed at the end of vol. viii. of Malone, Var. Ed. It will be sufficient to say that luxury in Shakespeare always, and in the other contemporary dramatists very frequently, bears, like the French luxe, the sense of "lust," "lasciviousness." See Much Ado, note 292; to which I may add that luxurious is never used in its modern sense by Shakespeare, but always, like luxurious in canonical writings, in its worst sense of "lusty," "wanton."

299. Line 66: Here, Diomed, keep this sleeve.—Shakespeare was thinking of Chaucer's account, in whose Troylus and Crysseide (bk. v.) we have:

And after this, the story telloth us
That she him yet the faire bay steede,
The whiche she one was of Troylus;
And eke a brooch (and that was litel seide)
That Troylus' was, that yeast this Diomede;
And eke the bet from sowr hym to relie,
She made hym were a pensel of hire sleeve.

—Chaucer's Works, Bohm's ed., iii. 77.

Penetel (pennoned)—a small streamer. Commenting on the lines just quoted Bell remarks that for a knight to wear on his armour some badge or token of his mistress' love, was a common if not invariable custom. It would be easy to quote parallels without end, from the Morte D'Arthur down to Scott's novella. The editors all note the burlesque of this scene that occurs in the Historie-Mastix, 1610:

O knight, with valour in thy face,
Here take my sleeves, wear it for grace;
NOTES TO TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

ACT V. Scene 2.

Within thy helmet put the same,
Therewith to make thine enemies tame.

300. Lines 81, 82: Nay, do not snatch it from me, &c.—In Q. and F. this and the next line are given to Diomed. They clearly are a continuation of Cressida’s speech. The alteration was first adopted by Theobald.

301. Line 106: But with my heart the other eye doth see.—Johnson and Hamner preferred the more obvious:
But with my heart the other eye doth see.

Practically the meaning will be the same; but I think the text of the copies gives a better antithetical effect. This, it will be noticed, is the last speech that Cressida makes; henceforth she passes out of the play, and, but for a sorrowful reference, is forgotten. This did not suit Dryden’s taste; a guilty heroine unpunished in the fifth act was an anomaly in Restoration tragedy, and accordingly the denouement in his version is contrived on more orthodox lines. Troilus overcomes Diomedes, and is on the point of killing him, when Cressida enters and interposes. She pleads for Diomed’s life, protests innocence, is reproached and repelled by Troilus, and then to clear herself of guilt produces the inevitable dagger:

Enough, my lord; you’ve said enough.
The faithless, perjured, hated Cressida,
Shall be no more the subject of your curses;
Some few hours hence, and grief had done your work;
But then your eyes had missed the satisfaction,
Which thus I give you—thus—[She stabs herself.]

A slight dialogue follows; the heroine blesses her lover “with her latest breath,” and dies; and afterwards “the dragnet of death,” to employ a phrase of Mr. Swinburne’s, gathers in its meshes most of the remaining characters. Dramatically, such a catastrophe is effective enough; a heroine dying, after the manner of Otway’s Manon Lescaut, with innocence and love on her lips, can never fail of pathos; but, after all, it is but a stage-artifice, and inappropriate here, because nothing could win our sympathies for Cressida. Scott rightly censures Dryden’s perversion of Shakespeare’s design (Dryden’s Works, vol. vi. p. 226). [On this point see the Stage History, Introduction, p. 251.]

302. Line 122: That doth invert th’ attest of eyes and ears.—So the Quarto. F. 1 gives that test; F. 2 that rest.

303. Line 131: To stubborn CRIFFON.—Probably, as Malone says, critic is here almost synonymous with cynic; so in the familiar line, Love’s Labour’s Lost, iv. 3. 170:

And critic Timon laugh at idle toys.

304. Lines 132, 133: to square the general sex
By Cressid’s rule.

i.e. to measure by, adjust to. For a similar use of this verb, compare Comus, 329, 330:

Eye me, blest Providence, and square my trial
To my proportioned strength.

305. Line 141: rule in unity; i.e. one is not two. “This Cressida is false: my Cressida was true; they cannot be the same.”

306. Line 144: Bi-fold authority.—The Folio have a pointless variant, by foul. In line 147 conduce is highly doubtful. Rowe read commence.

307. Line 158: The fractions of her faith, orls of her love.—Orls=levellings, fragments. Cf. Lucrece, 985:

Let him have time a beggar’s orls to crave.

As to derivative of orls, Mr. Aldis Wright has the following note upon the line just quoted: “Ors is probably the A. S. ord, which means first, the beginning, and then, the point of anything; so that ‘odds and ends’ is only another form of ‘orts and ends,’ the Icelandic oddar, a point, being the same as the A. S. ord.” Professor Skeat has a different explanation. He says: “Ors, remnant, levellings (E.); M. E. orts. From A. S. or, out (what is left); ean, to eat. Proved by O. Du. ortre, a piece left after eating...same prefix or occurs in or-deal’” (Etymological Dictionary, a.v. orl.). Wedgwood, we may note, says that the verb to orl is applied in Scotland to cattle that waste their food.

In line 190 or-s-eaten must bear the general sense of surfeited.

308. Line 172: Which shipmen do the hurricane call.—We find the same form of the word in Lear, iii. 2. 2:

You cataraets and arementers, spout.

309. Line 177: wear a castle on thy head!—Steevens quotes an exact parallel to this passage from The Most Ancient and Famous History of the Renowned Prince Arthur, ed. 1634, chap. civ. ii.: “Do thou thy best, said Sir Gawaine; therefore his thee fast that thou wente gone and list thou well we shall soone come after, and breake the strongest castle that thou hast upon thy head.” Probably, therefore, to wear a castle on one’s head was a proverbial expression, meaning “to be on one’s guard,” and not impossibly may point to the devices upon helmets. I can suggest no other explanation, and the editors do not lend us any aid.

310. Line 196: the parrot will not do more for an almoner.—A proverbial expression, the locus classicus upon which is Skelton’s poem. “Speke, Parrot,” where we have in stanza 1:

And see me to create ladies of estate;
Then Parrot must have an almoner or a dath.

So later in same poem:

An Almoner now for Parrot doth dancly drest.

Compare, too, Webster’s Westward Ho, v. 4; Works, p. 242.

ACT V. Scene 3.

311. Line 1: When was my lord so much ungently tempered.—The introduction of Andromache is a curious deviation from the classical story. It is early in the Iliad, in book vii., that we have the beautiful scene in which his “dear-won wife” bids Hector refrain from the fight: “nay, Hector, thou art to me father and lady mother, yes and brother, even as thou art my goodly husband. Come now, have pity and abide here upon the tower, lest thou make thy child an orphan and thy wife a widow.” In the twenty-first book, where Hector goes out to the battle and is slain, only Priam and his “lady mother,” before the city gates, pray him return.

Shakespeare, therefore, is following the account given in Caxton’s Troy-Book, where we read: “King Priamus sent to Hector, that he keep him that day from going to battle. Wherefore Hector was angry and reproached his wife, as he that knew well that this commandment came by her. Notwithstanding he armed him: and when Andromache saw him armed she took her little children, and fell down at the feet of her husband, and humbly prayed him that he would unarmed him, but he would not do it. Then she said if not for my sares yet live plain on your little children, that I and they die not a bitter death, or that we be not led into bondage into strange countries." Compared with the wonderful pathos of Homer's story, compared even with the single unwrought narrative of the Troy-Book, there is to my mind something very tame and ineffectual in all this scene. "Andromache, I am offended with you." Contrast Homer's: "And her husband had pity to see her, and caressed her with his hand, and spake and called upon her name—'Dear one, I pray thee be not of over sorrowful heart; no man against my fate shall hurle me to Hades; only destiny, I ween, no man hath escaped, be he coward or be he valiant, when once he hath been born. But go thou to thine house, and see to thine own tasks... for war shall men provide, and I in chief of all men that dwell in Illos.'" The quotations are from the translation of the Iliad by Lang, Leaf, and Myers.
NOTES TO TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

ACT V. Scene 3.

312. Line 6: Ominous to the day.—As in Hamlet, ii. 2. 476, ominous = fatal. Pope, following Rowe, read "omni-

313. Lines 20-22:
To hurt by being just: it is as lawful,
For we would give much, to use violent thefts,
And rob in the behalf of charity.

These three lines are not in the Quarto. The composer's eye, says Malone, passed over them and gave the following speech of Cassandra to Andromache. Of line 21 F. makes nonsense; it reads:

For we would count give much to as violent thefts.

Tyrwhitt saw that count had crept in from line 19; he expunged the word, and proposed use for as in the second half of the verse. His correction is adopted in the Cambridge Shakespeare, and I agree with Duce's remark that the other attempts to mend the passage are for the most part "not worth considering." Indeed what exception can be taken to Tyrwhitt's version I am at a loss to see.

314. Line 26: keeps the weather of my fate.—The phrase seems to take the wind of, i.e. have superiority over; so Boswell. We may compare the French dire au-dessus du vent. In the next line Pope needlessly substituted bruse for dear. The repetition of the latter in 28 is conclusive against any alteration.

315. Lines 40, 41:
When many times the captive Grecian fall,
Been in the Fan and Wind of your fair sword.
We are reminded of the passage from the old play, in
"Xenes' tale to Dido," recited by the First Player in Ham-

VOL. V.

In each case Shakespeare was probably thinking of the extravagant lines in Marlowe's Dido, ii. 1. 254, 255:

Which he disdain'd, think'd it his sword about,
And with the wind thereof the King fell down.

Dido, Queen of Carthage, was written by Marlowe and Nash, and both names appeared on the title-page; it is pretty certain, however, that Nash was responsible for the greater part of the play. Cf. Introduction to Bullen's Marlowe, pp. xvii. xix.

316. Line 55: Their eyes o'ergalled.—Shakespeare uses the word elsewhere to express the effect of soreness in the eyes produced by weeping; cf. Hamlet, i. 2. 154, 156:

Ere yet the salt of most unrighteous tears had left the flushing in her o'ergalled eyes.

So, too, in Richard III. iv. 4. 53:
That reigns in o'ergalled eyes of weeping souls.

317. Line 73: shame respect; i.e. "I must go in any case; do not therefore force me into disobedience by forbidding me to go."

318. Line 91: You are amazed.—Not merely astonished; the word often signifies complete bewilderment, confusion, as in Cymbeline, iv. 3. 26; Richard II. v. 2. 85.

319. Line 112: But edifes another with her deeds.—After this verse the Folio gives these three lines:

Pand. Why, but hears ye?

Troy. Hence brother lackie; ignominie and shame

These, it will be seen, are almost identical with lines 32-34 in the last scene of this act, where they are also found in F. 1, and to which place they evidently belong. We cannot insert them in both places; there is clearly some corruption of the text. See note 349.

ACT V. SCENA 4.

320. Line 1: Now they are clapper-clawing one another.

—Doctor Calus, it will be remembered, asks, "Clapper-de-claw! vat is dat!" (Merry Wives, ii. 3. 90). The meaning may be guessed from the not too frequent passages where the word occurs. Thus, in the remarkable preface prefixed to the second issue of the Quarto of this drama, the publishers claim that it is "a new play, never staid'd with the stage, never clapper-claw'd with the palmes of the vulgar" (see Introduction, p. 24.) Ford, too, employs it graphically enough in the Lovers Melancholy, v. 1: "this she-rogue is drunk, and clapper-clawed me, without any reverence to my person, or good garments" (Works, vol. I. p. 106). The word is obviously onomatopoeic.

321. Line 9: Luxurious drab.—For luxurious see note 298.

322. Line 9: Sleevelless errand.—The epithet appears to have got a stereotyped meaning of "unprofitable," "unsuccessful." So in Nashe's Lenten Stuffe we have: "rather than hew would go home with a sleevelless answer" (Nashe's Prose Works, in Huth Library, vol. v. p. 297). The editors do not explain how the metaphor arose; perhaps it points to some custom of mediaval knight-errantry.

323. Line 19: swearing rascal.—Applied to Nestor and Ulysses, swearing is not very appropriate. One is tempted to accept Theobald's swearing.

334. Line 13: not proved worth a blackberry.—Blackberries were evidently at a discount in Shakespeare's time. Cf. Falstaff's immortal "Give you a reason on compulsion! If reasons were as plenty as blackberries, I would give no man a reason upon compulsion" (II. Henry IV. 1. 2. 384-386).

335. Line 19: here comes sleeve, and t’other.—Collier's MS. Corractor gave: "here comes sleeve and sleeveless;" an improvement, I think.

338. Line 29: Art thou of Blood and Honour!—Every now and then we light on touches the most curiously non-classical in sentiment. Here, for instance, the idea is taken from the old romances, in which it is a point of etiquette that only knights of equal birth and rank should engage in combat. We might be reading the history of such heroes as Amedis de Gaul, The Knight o' the Sun, or Palmaire of England.

Everyone will remember parallels in Don Quixote.

337. Line 33: that thou wilt believe me.—This is an exquisite touch; self-criticism from the "demagogic Cilician" (Coleridge's phrase) is the most effective of criticism.

ACT V. SCENE 5.

328. Line 2: Present the fair steed to my lady Cressid.—Chapter xvi. of Caxton's Troy-Book (III) describes how "Dyomedes smote down Troyius off his horse, and sent it to Briseis his love that received it gladly." Also in Lydgate, the various chiefs, will be noticed, are represented among the fighting, like the medieval knights, from horseback; in Homer, of course, they are always on foot, or riding in chariots.

329. Line 9: weaving his beam.—So in Samson Agonistes, 1121, 1122:

Add thy spear,
A weaver's beam, and seven-times-folded shield;
where Milton probably had in his mind's eye the description of Goliath's armour in 1 Sam. xvii. 5-7.

330. Line 14: the dreadful Sagittary.—Of this Centaur, which in the Destruction of Troy (bk. iii. chap. xiv.) is killed by Diomed, Homer, we are glad to think, has nothing to say. Curiously enough, Shakespeare introduces a Sagittary in Othello (I. i. 150); there, however, it is a less formidable monster, being, perhaps, part of the Arsenal of Venice.

331. Line 17: Go, bear Patroclus' body to Achilles.—In Iliad, xvi., Patroclus dons Achilles' armour and drives the Trojans back from the ships, but at last meets Hector and is slain. Antilochus brings the news to Achilles (Iliad, xvii. 17-22).

332. Lines 22, 23:

And there they fly or die, like scaled souls
Before the belching whale.

Etymologically scull and shoul are identical; Spenser uses the form shoul. In The Shepherd's Calendar, May, 10, 20:
Sicker this morrow, no longer ago,
I saw a shoul of shepherds outgo.

The M.R. scull, from meaning "school," came to signify "a troop, crowd" (Skeat). I find the expression "scaled of fishes" translated in Minshen (1617) by "examinum or agmen piscium." According to Elton the word was used especially on the coast of Norfolk and Suffolk, and "a school of fish" is still a phrase current among sailors. Scull, however, in this sense, is not unknown to English classical writers. Compare Milton, Paradise Lost, xil. 399, and Todd's note thereon (Works, vol. iii. p. 63):
Each bay
With fry innumerable swarms, and shools
Of fish, that with their fins and shining scales
Glide under the green wave, in sculls that oft Bank the mid sea.

Steevens, too, quotes Drayton's Polyolbion, the 29th song:

My silver-scaled sculls about my streams do sweep.

Hammer, of course, read shools in the present passage. By scaled (for which Q. has scaling) Malone understands dispersed. It is doubtful, however, whether the word can have any such sense. The dictionaries indeed recognize a verb to scale, which, they say, is to spread, and then, to scatter; but I know no case of it occurring in classical English, and in Malone's passage from Coriolanus, l. 1. 96, Theobald's state—one of his many admirable corrections—has been adopted by the Cambridge editors and the Globe ed. I think, therefore, that the epithet bears its ordinary, and, as applied to fish, perfectly appropriate, meaning; cf. Antony and Cleopatra, ii. 9. 65: "A scailer for scaled snakes!"

The smile, of course, is a natural one. So in Iliad, xxi. 25-25, we have: "As before a dolphin of huge mass fly other fish and fill the nooks of some fair-harvested bay. In terror, for he devoureth amain whichsoever of them he may catch; so along the channels of that dread stream the Trojans crouched beneath the precipitous sides." Perhaps Shakespeare's lines are a reminiscence of Chapman's translation.

333. Line 24: the strawy Greeks.—For strawy (so Q.) Ft. have strawing; the metaphor, however, running through the two lines is decisive on the point. The epithet is thoroughly Homeric.

334. Line 44: So, so, we draw together.—Steevens thinks that the idea is of horses drawing, or as we might say in current phrase, pulling together; the words would then refer to Ajax, in allusion to the fact that lately he had not co-operated well with the Greeks. It seems to me not impossible that the metaphor suggested is that of a pack of hounds drawing a covert; Ajax, Diomede, and Nestor all trying to track down Troilus.

335. Line 45: thou not-thy-Quiller, show thy face; i.e. because Hector had killed Patroclus.

ACT V. SCENE 6.

336. Line 10: I will not look upon; i.e. be a looker on. Compare Richard II. iv. 1. 257:

Nay, all of you that stand and look upon;
where the Folio changed the reading of Q. to "look upon me."

337. Line 20: I'II brush it.—Brush is the French frise-
NOTES TO TROILUS AND CRESSIDA. ACT V. Scene 7.

328. Line 6: In feilest manner execute your Austria. — Aima is Capell's indispensible correction of the copies, which all read arms. Singer, retaining arms, explains execute to mean employ, but even so the line is little better than a piece of pointless tautology.

339. Line 19: One bear will not bite another. — So Juvenal: Sevis inter se convenit uris (Satire xv. 164).

ACT V. Scene 8.

340. Line 7: Vail and darkening of the sun. — Vail = "setting;" only here as a substantive in Shakespeare. The verb (Old French vauter, i.e. vaier = ad valem) occurs very frequently.

341. Line 9: I am unarm'd; forego this vantage. — Greek. This account of Hector's death is in strict accord with the accepted traditions of the medieval romance writers. Here, for instance, is the story in Caxton's Destruction of Troy: "Among all these things, Hector had taken a noble baron of Greece that was richly armed, and to lead him out of the host at his case he cast his shield behind him, and left his breast uncovered, and as he was departing, minding not Achilles he came privily unto him and thrust his spear in his body, and Hector fell dead to the ground. When King Menon saw Hector dead, he assailed Achilles by great force, and beat him to the ground and hurt him grievously, but his men carried him into his tent upon his shield. Then for the death of Hector were all the Trojans discomfited and re-entered into their city, bearing the body of Hector with great sorrow and lamentation."

342. Line 13: And, stickler-like, the armies separate. — A stickler was a non-combattant, or, as we should say, a second, who stood by to see fair-play in fencing matches: one of his duties was to stop the duel when he thought fit. Minshew gives the word in his Dictionary: "a stickler between two, so called as putting a stick or staff between two fighting or fencing together." This nautical piece of philology was endorsed by Hamner and others until Risdon in his Remarks (1783) hinted that "the nature of the English language does not allow the derivation of stickler from stick." According to Skeat, the word is a corruption of the Middle English stithlen, stithlen = to dispose, order, arrange; it is cognate with the German stiften, stift.

343. Lines 19, 20: My half-supp'd sword, that frankly would have fed, Pleased with this dainty bait, thus goes to bed.

Poet placed these lines in the margin, and most of the editors condemn the turgid diction of Achilles' speech. It is too much in the Campbyses' vein to pass unchallenged.

344. Line 22: Along the field I will the Trojan trail.

—A strictly classical touch. The episode is given at length in Iliad xxii., which the ringing rhetoric of Pope reproduced as follows:

Thus his fell soul a thought of vengeance bred;
(Usworthy of himself, and of the dead;)
The nervous ancles bored, his feet he bound
With thongs inserted through the double wound;
These fa'd up high behind the rolling wain,
His graceful head was trail'd along the plain;
Proud on his car the insulting victor stood,
And bore aloft his arms, distilling blood.
He smites the steeds; the rapid chariot flies;
The sudden clouds of circling dust arise.
Now lost is all that formidable air;
The face divine, and long-descending hair,
Purple the ground, and streak the sable sand;
Deform'd, disheav'd, in his native land,
Given to the rage of an insulting throng,
And, in his parents' sight, now dragg'd along!

It was one of the scenes sculptured (or fresco'd) in the temple of Juno, described in the first Iliad, 483, 484:

Ter circum illiacus raptaverat Hectora vultus
Examinumque auro corpus venderbat Achilles.

Also in Lydgate, chap. xxxi. Caxton, as we have seen, represents the Trojans as bearing Hector's body back into the city, rather a remarkable deviation from classical tradition.

ACT V. Scene 9.

345. Line 6: The brut is, Hector's slain, and by Achilles; i.e. the rumour, report. The verb generally implies "announcing with noise." So Macbeth, v. 7. 21, 22:

By this great clatter, one of greatest note
Scenes cried out.

Taken from the French; probably of Celtic origin.

ACT V. Scene 10.

346. Lines 6, 7:

Frown on, you heavens, effect your rage with speed!
Sit, gods, upon your thrones, and smile at Troy!

A vexed passage. Q. and F. read:

Sit gods upon your thrones, and smile at Troy.
I say at once--

This reading, with only a slight change in the punctuation, I have retained. I cannot see with Mr. W. N. Lettsom that smile "no doubt, is nonsense;" on the contrary, the line appears to me to make excellent sense. The difficulty, I think, comes in the next verse, which certainly is very abrupt. But I doubt whether mere abruptness should justify us in altering the undisputed text of both Quarto and Folio. If, however, any change is to be adopted—and apparently the Cambridge editors recognize no such necessity—it is tempting to combine the proposals of Hamner and Lettsom, and print:

Ay, stay at once--

This line:

347. Line 18: There is a word will Priam turn to stone.

348. Line 19: Make wells and Nibbes. —Compare the Widow's Tears, iv. 2:

My sister may turn Nibbes for love.

—Chapman's Works, p. 256.

Hamner naturally changed to "wells and rivers."
NOTES TO TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

ACT V. Scene 10.

346. Lines 30, 31.—Walker (A Critical Examination, iii. p. 205) contends that these are the concluding lines of the piece: "the mind of the reader is fully satisfied, and any thing additional sounds like an impertinence and obtusion." Verses 32-34 he would place at the end of scene 3, where see note; and the rest of Pandar’s epilogue he regards as an interpolation. I think there is much to be said for this view; at any rate, one would gladly believe that the ribald rubbish with which the play ended was not written by Shakespeare. Troilus here survives. In Caxton’s Destruction of Troy he is killed by Achilles, and the event is narrated with considerable circunstanciality. Curiously enough, this detail is unknown to Homer. He merely mentions (In Iliad xxiv. 257) that Troilus (τροίλων τρόας) had been slain in battle before the time of the Iliad. Probably Vergil was the authority for the later accounts. Compare the beautiful lines in Æneid, i. 474-478, beginning:

Parte alia fugiens amnisis Troilus armis,
Infelix paer atque impar congrues Achillis—

350. Line 47: painted cloths.—This refers to the custom of hanging up texts, mottoes, verses, and what not, upon the walls of rooms. They were painted on canvas or cloth. So in As You Like It, iii. 2. 287-291, when Jaques says to Orlando, "You are full of pretty answers. Have you not been acquainted with goldsmiths’ wives, and cou’d them out of rings?" the latter replies, "Not so; but I answer you right painted cloth, from whence you have studied your questions." This, I imagine, is the allusion in the following passage from Eastward Ho (by Ben Jonson, Chapman, Marston and Shirley), iv. 1: "I hope to see thee one o’ the monuments of our city, and reckoned among her worthies to be remembered the same day with the Lady Ramsey and grave Gresham when the famous fable of Whittington and his puss shall be forgotten, and thou and thy acts become the poems for hospitals" (Chapman’s Works, p. 474). Malone has an interesting quotation from a tract published in 1601:

Read what is written on the painted cloth,
Do no man wrong; be good unto the poor.

Beware the mouse, the maggot and the moth,
And ever have an eye into the door.

Dyce in his Middle Ages, vol. iii. p. 97, has an interesting note on Dekker’s Honest Whore, v. 1. Rather more elaborate than these canvas inscriptions, though pointing the same elementary morals, must have been the tapestry scenes from the Bible with which rooms were adorned. Amongst these a favourite and appropriate subject was the story of the Prodigal, and that of Lazarus. Compare I. Henry IV. iv. 2. 27-29, and note 296 of that play. See also Merry Wives, iv. 5. 9, where the host has got ready for Falstaff a chamber "painted about with the story of the Prodigal, fresh and new."

Sometimes the designs were classical; of these the story of Actaeon seems to have been popular. Compare:

be stands
Just like Actaeon in the painted cloth.

The Fancies, ii. ii. (Ford’s Works, vol. ii. 156).

351. Line 56: Some galled geese of Winchester would hiss.—Probably this was a proverbial phrase. So in Randolph’s comedy, Hey for Honesty; Down with Knavery, iii. 5, we have "The woman, perceiving me, put forth her hand; then I fell hissing like a Winchester goose," or St. George’s dragon" (Randolph’s Works, p. 442). Unfortunately, however, many of Pandar’s remarks contain some offensive double entendre, and the present line is an instance in point. It will be sufficient to say that one disreputable quarter of London was long under the jurisdiction of the Bishop of Winchester, a fact to which there are many indirect and indelicate allusions in the dramatists. This explains a passage in Chapman’s Monseigneur D’Oliver, iv. 1; "Paris, or Fadus, or the famous school of England called Winchester, famous I mean for the geese, where scholars wear petticoats so long; all these, I say, are but bellries to the body or school of the Court" (Works, p. 181). Compare, too, the editors on I. Henry VI. i. 2. 68. Also Dyce’s note on Webster’s Cure for a Cuckold, i. 2 (Works, p. 307), and Halliwell’s Nares, sub voce Winchester. Curiously enough, a goose was also an emblem of "meere modestie" (See Brand, Popular Antiquities, i. 370).

WORDS OCCURRING ONLY IN TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

Note.—The addition of sub. adj. verb, adv. in brackets immediately after a word indicates that the word is used as a substantive, adjective, verb, or adverb, only in the passage or passages cited.

The compound words marked with an asterisk (*) are printed as two separate words in F. I.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Word</th>
<th>Act Sc.</th>
<th>Line</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Abashed</td>
<td>i. 3</td>
<td>18</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Abruptness</td>
<td>iii. 2</td>
<td>70</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Accepted</td>
<td>iii. 3</td>
<td>80</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Affectionately</td>
<td>iii. 1</td>
<td>74</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Almond</td>
<td>v. 2</td>
<td>104</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>A-mending</td>
<td>i. 3</td>
<td>159</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amidst</td>
<td>i. 3</td>
<td>91</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Antiquary (adj.)</td>
<td>ii. 3</td>
<td>262</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Appertences</td>
<td>ii. 3</td>
<td>87</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Word</th>
<th>Act Sc.</th>
<th>Line</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Aspiration</td>
<td>iv. 5</td>
<td>16</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Assimilation</td>
<td>i. 1</td>
<td>49</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Asaubjugable</td>
<td>i. 8</td>
<td>308</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Attachment</td>
<td>iv. 2</td>
<td>5</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Attest*</td>
<td>ii. 2</td>
<td>195</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Attest (sub.)</td>
<td>v. 2</td>
<td>139</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Attributive</td>
<td>ii. 2</td>
<td>58</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Word</th>
<th>Act Sc.</th>
<th>Line</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Avow*</td>
<td>i. 3</td>
<td>271</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barbarian (adj.)</td>
<td>H. 1</td>
<td>52</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Batch</td>
<td>v. 1</td>
<td>5</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Baublé*</td>
<td>i. 3</td>
<td>195</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Beam*</td>
<td>v. 5</td>
<td>9</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

* Used intransitively—i.e. assert, in Henry VIII. iv. 3. 142.
* Used adjectively.
* a spear. Used elsewhere in various other senses.

1 = acceptable.
2 See note 97.
3 = to call to witness; used three times—to certify, to testify.
WORDS PECULIAR TO TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Biax-drawing</td>
<td>iv. 5 169</td>
<td>Fits</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bi-fold</td>
<td>v. 2 144</td>
<td>Inseparable</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bitch-wolf</td>
<td>li. 1 11</td>
<td>Insubtrive</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Black-a-moor</td>
<td>l. 1 79</td>
<td>Invigiled</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blockish</td>
<td>iii. 8 378</td>
<td>Invincible</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bone ache</td>
<td>[i. 2 21</td>
<td>Foragers</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Botchy</td>
<td>l. 2 1</td>
<td>Forceless</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Boy-queller</td>
<td>v. 5 45</td>
<td>Fraction</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brabbl</td>
<td>v. 1 99</td>
<td>Fraught</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bragless</td>
<td>v. 9 5</td>
<td>Fruh</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Branchless</td>
<td>l. 3 381</td>
<td>Gainsey</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Breath</td>
<td>li. 5 121</td>
<td>Gallantry</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Broad</td>
<td>l. 8 190</td>
<td>Galled</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brokers-between</td>
<td>lii. 2 212</td>
<td>Galsified</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bugbear</td>
<td>iv. 2 24</td>
<td>Generals</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bull-bear</td>
<td>iii. 3 258</td>
<td>Greatness</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Calumniate</td>
<td>[i. 3 174</td>
<td>Grave</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Captain-general</td>
<td>iii. 3 279</td>
<td>Great-sized</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Catariss</td>
<td>v. 1 22</td>
<td>Great-sized</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Castles</td>
<td>iii. 3 307</td>
<td>Guss-gripping</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Changeful</td>
<td>iv. 4 99</td>
<td>Hooks (adj.)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Characterless</td>
<td>iii. 2 165</td>
<td>Half-supped</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chest</td>
<td>i. 3 163</td>
<td>Hamstring</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Clear adj.</td>
<td>iv. 5 10</td>
<td>Hand-homework</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Closet-war</td>
<td>i. 3 295</td>
<td>Hatched</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Co-act</td>
<td>v. 2 118</td>
<td>Heart-blood</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cobleaf</td>
<td>l. 1 41</td>
<td>Heel (verb)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cognition</td>
<td>v. 2 68</td>
<td>High-soaring</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Colourless-wise</td>
<td>v. 5 9</td>
<td>Hold-door (adj.)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Commodious</td>
<td>v. 2 196</td>
<td>Idiot-worshipers</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Community</td>
<td>i. 3 103</td>
<td>Ill-disposed</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Complimental</td>
<td>i. 3 42</td>
<td>Ill-thought</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Composure</td>
<td>i. 3 108</td>
<td>Imbecility</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Concupit</td>
<td>v. 2 177</td>
<td>Immaterial</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Conflue</td>
<td>l. 3 7</td>
<td>Immunence</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Consangunty</td>
<td>iv. 2 103</td>
<td>Indifferent</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Construing</td>
<td>v. 2 173</td>
<td>Indistiguishable</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Convince</td>
<td>II. 12 130</td>
<td>Induced</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Convive (verb)</td>
<td>iv. 5 272</td>
<td>Infectiously</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Core 11 (of a bolt)</td>
<td>i. 1 7</td>
<td>False-hearted</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Name of a dog; = a noisy fellow in John, v. 2. 128. Fain</td>
<td>i. 3 27</td>
<td>Fan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>= a gentle exercise. Used frequently</td>
<td>v. 3 41</td>
<td>Fan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>in other senses.</td>
<td>Faint</td>
<td>Fast-already</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fain</td>
<td>i. 3 27</td>
<td>Fathomless</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fast-already</td>
<td>i. 3 27</td>
<td>Fees-farm</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fast</td>
<td>v. 3 41</td>
<td>Feud</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

1 Name of a dog; = a noisy fellow in John, v. 2. 128.
2 = a gentle exercise. Used frequently in other senses.
3 = puffed with pride; used frequently in other senses.
4 = caugit.
5 = the thorax. Also Lucero, 761.
6 = sounding distinctly.
7 = societies; commonly-commonness, occurs in I. Henry IV. li. 277.
8 = union, alliance; = qualities of disposition, in Troilus, lii. 8. 261; Ant. and Cleo. li. 4. 23.
9 Word coined by Thersites for conscientious.
10 Converse. Used elsewhere in various other senses.
11 See note 9.
12 Sonsed; iv. 2.
13 = the "jack" at the game of bowls.
14 = state of confusion; = a draught, a concoction, in three passages.
15 = single; used elsewhere in many different senses.
16 = unevenly; = strangely, in other passages.

Digitized by

341
WORDS PECULIAR TO TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Omission</td>
<td>iii. 3 220</td>
<td>Recourse 10</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Oppugnancy</td>
<td>i. 3 111</td>
<td>Refractory</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Orgulous</td>
<td>Pro. 2</td>
<td>Rejoin'd</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Orfex</td>
<td>v. 2 151</td>
<td>Restless</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Outfly</td>
<td>ii. 3 124</td>
<td>Retract 12</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Outwell</td>
<td>iv. 5 9</td>
<td>Ribald</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Overbulk</td>
<td>i. 3 320</td>
<td>Revell'd</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Overhold</td>
<td>ii. 3 142</td>
<td>Roping</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fageants (verb)</td>
<td>i. 3 181</td>
<td>Rump</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Parallels</td>
<td>i. 3 168</td>
<td>Seal</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Parted 5</td>
<td>iii. 3 96</td>
<td>Scull'd 12</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pass (verb)</td>
<td>ii. 2 29</td>
<td>Scurl'd 14</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>*Past-proportion</td>
<td>ii. 2 29</td>
<td>Scull'd 14</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Persifrage</td>
<td>i. 3 21</td>
<td>Seam 14</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Perplexious</td>
<td>i. 3 224</td>
<td>Seeded 14</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Petition</td>
<td>iii. 3 139</td>
<td>Sell'd 14</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Plague</td>
<td>iii. 1 187</td>
<td>Sell'd 14</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Plaintage</td>
<td>iii. 2 154</td>
<td>Sell'd 14</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pleasantly</td>
<td>iv. 5 240</td>
<td>Sell'd 14</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Portable 1</td>
<td>ii. 1 144</td>
<td>Sell'd 14</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>*Precious-dear</td>
<td>v. 3 23</td>
<td>Sell'd 14</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Preventions</td>
<td>i. 3 121</td>
<td>Sell'd 14</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pricks 5</td>
<td>i. 3 843</td>
<td>Sell'd 14</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Primitive 6</td>
<td>v. 1 60</td>
<td>Sell'd 14</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Primogeny 6</td>
<td>i. 3 106</td>
<td>Sell'd 14</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Profoundly</td>
<td>iv. 2 83</td>
<td>Sell'd 14</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Propend 5</td>
<td>ii. 2 180</td>
<td>Sell'd 14</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Propension</td>
<td>ii. 2 133</td>
<td>Sell'd 14</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Propugnation</td>
<td>ii. 2 136</td>
<td>Sell'd 14</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Proractus</td>
<td>i. 3 90</td>
<td>Sell'd 14</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Publication</td>
<td>i. 3 325</td>
<td>Sell'd 14</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fun (verb)</td>
<td>ii. 1 42</td>
<td>Sell'd 14</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Purely 5</td>
<td>iv. 5 169</td>
<td>Sell'd 14</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Quails 7 (subj.)</td>
<td>v. 1 58</td>
<td>Sell'd 14</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ransacked 4</td>
<td>ii. 2 150</td>
<td>Sell'd 14</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Reader 5</td>
<td>iv. 5 61</td>
<td>Sell'd 14</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rea 3</td>
<td>iii. 3 102</td>
<td>Sell'd 14</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

1 = lines in the same direction; Sona. lx. 10. Used figuratively = equal, in other passages.
2 = gifted, endowed.
3 = what may be carried; what may be endured; Macbeth. iv. 3. 28; Lear. iii. 6. 115.
4 = precautions; used frequently = hinderance.
5 = small rolls; the word is used elsewhere in various other senses.
6 = So Q.; cf. have primitiveness. Used punningly = looses women = the bird of the same name, in Ant. and Cleo. ii. 3. 27.
7 = abducted by force; the verb is used in several passages = to pillage.
8 = Of an army = behind, in Hamlet. i. 2. 84; Winter's Tale, iv. 4. 399.
9 = = frequent flowing = access, in three other passages.
10 = of a moving reference.
11 = shanks of fish.
12 = green.
13 = Lucan. 893.
14 = Pass. Pilgrim. 178.
15 = scattering; the verb is used very frequently in the sense of "to pour out," &c.
16 = Verb intrans. = to flag; the transitive verb is used in several passages in a similar sense.
17 = a lot; this sub. is used very frequently by Shakespeare in various senses.
18 = nature; used in plural = articles of agreement, Love's Labour's Lost. ii. 1. 186; Tuning of Shew. ii. 1. 187.
19 = placed in a sphere.
20 = round.
21 = done in jest.
22 = a water-spout; used three times = a pipe.
23 = a bolt; a thread, occurs in Love's Labour's Lost. v. 1. 19.
24 = a web; a bandage, in Timon. iv. 2. 92.
25 = a sinner's probe.
26 = that which is stolen; theft, in Two Gent. iv. 1. 60; Timon. iv. 2. 92.
27 = to beat, to drub; in the sense of to smash corn, in Titus. ii. 3. 123.
28 = Lover's Complaint. 220.
29 = Total (sub.) = i. 2. 194.
30 = Transcend. = i. 3. 844.
31 = Transport. = iii. 2. 12.
32 = Turbulence = v. 3. 11.
33 = Unarmed (intr.) = l. 1. 1.
34 = Unbodily = i. 3. 16.
35 = Unbottle = iv. 3. 2.
36 = Uncomprehensive = iii. 3. 196.
37 = *Under-honest = ii. 3. 128.
38 = Underwrite = iii. 3. 137.
39 = Unfamed = ii. 2. 159.
40 = Ungained = l. 2. 315, 819.
41 = Unity = v. 2. 141.
42 = Unplausible = iii. 3. 43.
43 = Unread = i. 3. 24.
44 = Unsecret = iii. 2. 132.
45 = Unsecured = l. 3. 129.
46 = Untasted = iii. 2. 139.
47 = Untamed = l. 2. 178.
48 = Untimbered = i. 3. 43.
49 = Uustrad = iv. 5. 178.
50 = Unveil = iii. 3. 220.
51 = Vail (subj.) = v. 3. 7.
52 = Vainbrace = i. 3. 297.
53 = Vassalage = ii. 3. 490.
54 = Vauvit = Pro. 27.
55 = Vendicative = iv. 5. 107.
56 = Vineyard = i. 1. 15.
57 = Violent (verb) = iv. 4.
58 = Watry = ii. 3. 22.
59 = Wedged = i. 3. 35.
60 = Wedges = ii. 3. 316.
61 = Well-famed = iv. 5. 173.
62 = Well-ordered = ii. 2. 189.
63 = Wenching = v. 4. 35.
64 = Wheelering = v. 1. 23.
65 = Whereout = iv. 5. 246.
66 = Whoremasterly (ad.) = iv. 4. 8.
67 = Whorish = iv. 1. 68.
68 = Wield = ii. 2. 112.
69 = Wreath (subj.) = i. 3. 23.
70 = Wrinkles (verb) = ii. 7. 29.

20 = to undo a bolt; figuratively = reveal, in Timon. i. 1. 81.
21 = to subscribe to = to write underneath, Macbeth. v. 3. 38.
22 = the state of being one; agreement, used by Shakespeare in many passages.
23 = to bring out of a tent; insciss = inscrutable, in Lear. i. 4. 298.
24 = cf. the beginning a bone, in II. Henry VI. iii. 1. 30.
25 = desiring of.
26 = cleft as with a wedge.
27 = Used figuratively = mass (of gold), Rich. III. i. 4. 30.
MACBETH.

NOTES AND INTRODUCTION BY ARTHUR SYMONS.
DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

DUNCAN, King of Scotland.
MALCOLM, his son.
DONALBAIN, one of his sons.
MACBETH, generals of the King's army.
BANQUO, MACDUFF,
LENNOX, ROSS, MENTRETH,
ANGUS,
CAITHNESS,
noblemen of Scotland.

FLEANCE, son to Banquo.
SIWARD, Earl of Northumberland, general of the English forces.
YOUNG SIWARD, his son.
SETTON, an officer attending on Macbeth.
BOY, son to Macduff.
An English Doctor.
A Scotch Doctor.
A Sergeant.
A Porter.
An Old Man.

LADY MACBETH.
LADY MACDUFF.
Gentlewoman attending on Lady Macbeth.

Lords, Gentlemen, Officers, Soldiers, Murderers, Attendants, and Messengers.

HECATE.
Three Witches.
Apparitions.

SCENE—Scotland; England.

HISTORIC PERIOD: A.D. 1041–1057.

TIME OF ACTION.

The time of the play (according to Daniel) represents nine days, with intervals.

Day 3: Act II. Scenes 1–4.—Interval of a week or two.
Day 4: Act III. Scenes 1–5. (Act III. Scene 6 "an impossible time.")
Day 5: Act IV. Scene 1.
Day 6: Act IV. Scene 2.—Interval of a week or two.
Day 7: Act IV. Scene 3; Act V. Scene 1.—Interval of a few weeks.
Day 8: Act V. Scenes 2, 3.
MACBETH.

INTRODUCTION.

LITERARY HISTORY.

Macbeth was first printed in the Folio of 1623, and the printing seems to have been done with singular carelessness, or from a singularly imperfect MS., probably a hastily-made transcript. All that we know with certainty of the date when the play was written, is, that it was some time before 1610. In Collier's New Particulars regarding the Works of Shakespeare, 1836, there is an account of a MS. discovered in the Ashmolean Museum, containing the "Booke of Plaies and Notes thereof" of Dr. Simon Forman, the notorious astrologer, who died in 1611. The entry for April 20, 1610, is given by Collier as follows:

"In Macbeth, at the Globe, 1610, the 20th of April, Saturday, there was to be observed, first how Macbeth and Banquo, two noblemen of Scotland, riding through a wood, there stood before them three women Fairies, or Nymphs, and saluted Macbeth, saying three times unto him, Hail, King of Cador, for thou shalt be a King, but beget no Kings, &c. Then, said Banquo, What all to Macbeth and nothing to me? Yes, said the Nymphs; thou shalt beget Kings, yet be no King. And so they departed, and came to the Court of Scotland to Duncan King of Scots, and it was in the days of Edward the Confessor. And Duncan bad them both kindly welcome, and made Macbeth forthwith Prince of Northumberland; and sent him to his own castle, and appointed Macbeth to provide for him, for he would sup with him the next day at night, and did so.

"And Macbeth contrived to kill Duncan, and through the persuasion of his wife did that night murder the King, in his own castle, being his guest. And there were many prodigies seen that night and the day before. And when Macbeth had murdered the King, the blood on his hands could not be washed off by any means, nor from his wife's hands, which handled the bloody daggers in hiding them, by which means they became both much amazed and affronted.

"The murder being known, Duncan's two sons fled, the one to England, the other to Wales, to save themselves: they being fled, were supposed guilty of the murder of their father, which was nothing so.

"Then was Macbeth crowned King, and then he for fear of Banquo, his old companion, that he should beget kings but be no king himself, he contrived the death of Banquo, and caused him to be murdered on the way that he rode. The night, being at supper with his noblemen whom he had bid to a feast, (to the which also Banquo should have come,) he began to speak of noble Banquo, and to wish that he were there. And as he thus did, standing up to drink a carouse to him, the ghost of Banquo came and sat down in his chair behind him. And he, turning about to sit down again, saw the ghost of Banquo, which fronted him, so that he fell in a great passion of fear and fury, uttering many words about his murder, by which, when they heard that Banquo was murdered, they suspected Macbeth.

"Then Macduff fled to England to the King's son, and so they raised an army and came into Scotland, and at Dunston Anyse overthrew Macbeth. In the mean time, while Macduff was in England, Macbeth slew Macduff's wife and children, and after in the battle Macduff slew Macbeth.

"Observe, also, how Macbeth's Queen did rise in the night in her sleep, and walk, and talked and confessed all, and the Doctor noted her words."
MACBETH.

The minuteness of this analysis, as well as its mistakes of memory, shows that the play was new to Dr. Forman, but this does not prove that the play itself was new. The characteristics of the verification would be quite inconsistent with so late a date. Much more probable, on this ground, is the date of 1606 or thereabouts, assigned by Malone and others chiefly on account of some allusions to contemporary events, which do not, however, carry with them any great amount of certainty. While there is undoubtedly an allusion to the union of the two kingdoms under James I. in iv. 1. 120, 121:

some I see

That twofold balls and treble sceptres carry—it does not necessarily follow that the king's accession had but just taken place; nor is it certain that there is any allusion in the fifth and ninth lines of the Porter's soliloquy (the "farmer that hang'd himself on the expectation of plenty," and the equivocator "who committed treason enough for God's sake") to the remarkably low price of corn in the summer and autumn of 1606, and to the equivocation and perjury of Garnet the Jesuit on the occasion of his trial in March of the same year. But while these references, if references they be, are too slight and too uncertain to afford by themselves any definite ground of opinion, they may be taken, certainly, as in some sort confirmatory of the metrical indications of the earlier date. The first printed reference to the play occurs in Beaumont and Fletcher's Knight of the Burning Pestle, 1611, where a passage in the fifth act is undoubtedly meant as a good-natured burlesque of the ghost of Banquo.

Shakespeare found his materials for Macbeth, as for all his historical plays dealing with England and Scotland, in Holinshed's Chronicles. Holinshed took his narrative from the twelfth book of the Scotorum Historiae of Hector Boece, printed at Paris in 1526, and translated into the Scotch dialect by John Bellenden, archdeacon of Moray, in 1541. Boece's narrative follows Fordun. The legendary foundation on which Shakespeare worked has very little in common with the real facts of history. I take from the Clarendon Press edition (p. xliii) the following résumé of the points in which Shakespeare and Holinshed are at variance with history, condensed from Chalmers' Caledonia, bk. iii. ch. vii. "The rebellion of Macdonwald and the invasion of Sueno during the reign of Duncan are fables; Banquo and Fleance, the ancestors of the Stuarts, are the inventions of the chronicler. Lady Macbeth, whose name was Gruoch, was the grand-daughter of Kenneth IV., who was slain at the battle of Monivaird by Malcolm II. Her first husband, Gilcomgain, the maormor of Moray, was burnt in his castle with fifty of his friends. Her only brother was slain by Malcolm's orders. There were reasons therefore why she should cherish vengeance against Duncan, the grandson of Malcolm. She took as her second husband Macbeth, the maormor of Ross, who, during the minority of her son Lulach, became maormor of Moray. The rebellion of Torfin, Earl of Caithness, another grandson of Malcolm's, appears to have been the original of the revolt of Macdonwald, and Duncan was on his way to punish it when he fell a victim to treachery at Bothgowan, near Elgin, in the territory of Gruoch and Macbeth. Macbeth on his side had motives for revenge. His father Finlegh, or Finley, maormor of Ross, had been slain in a conflict with Malcolm II. in 1020. In Wyntown's Cronykil of Scotland an entirely different version is given. Duncan is there the uncle of Macbeth, who is thane of Cromarty; and Gruoch is Duncan's wife, who after the murder of her husband marries Macbeth. Malcolm is the illegitimate son of Duncan by a miller's daughter, and a supernatural parentage is invented for Macbeth himself. It is in Wyntown that we first meet with the weird sisters, who, however, only manifest themselves to Macbeth and spur his ambition in a dream. According to the same chronicler, the absence of Macduff from the feast was one of the causes which provoked Macbeth against him. It is worth observing that there is nothing of this kind in the narrative of Holinshed. The battle of Dunsinnan did not decide the fate of Macbeth. He was defeated there in the year 1054, but it was not till two years afterwards that he met with his death at Lumphanan by the hands of Macduff, December 5, 1058. I may add, from Scott's History of Scotland, vol. i. p. 18
(Lardner's Cabinet Cyclopaedia), a further detail in regard to the Macbeth of history:
"Macbeth broke no law of hospitality in his attempt on Duncan's life. He attacked and slew the king at a place called Bothgowan
[the name is variously spelt Bothgowan, Bothgownan, and Bothgowan] or the Smith's House, near Elgin, in 1039, and not, as has been supposed, in his own castle of Inverness. The act was bloody, as was the complexion of the times; but, in very truth, the claim of Macbeth to the throne, according to the rule of Scottish succession, was better than that of Duncan. As a king, the tyrant so much exclaimed against was, in reality, a firm, just, and equitable prince." 7

In the construction of his play Shakespeare follows Holinshed on the whole closely, but he transfers a number of the details in connection with the murder of Duncan from the account of the murder of King Duff (the great-great-grandfather of Lady Macbeth) by Donwald, "capteine of the castle" of Forres, "being the more kindled in wrath by the words of his wife."
Lady Macbeth's sleep-walking, her fate hinted at by Shakespeare, the appearance of Banquo's ghost, and some points in the character of Banquo, are the only noticeable additions or variations from the narrative of Holinshead.1

A few words must here be said on the debated question of the indebtedness of Macbeth to Middleton's Witch, or of The Witch to Macbeth. When, in 1778 or 1779, the MS. of the Witch was discovered, it was at once seen that there were certain resemblances, at least in the witchcraft scenes, between the two plays, and that the words of the songs referred to in the stage-directions to Macbeth, iii. 5. 33 and iv. 1. 43,—found, indeed, in Davenant's version, and consequently supposed to be his,—were taken from the play of Middleton. Steevens, with the pardonable enthusiasm of the discoverer, at once concluded that Shakespeare must have imitated Middleton. Others asserted that Middleton must have imitated Shakespeare. As the date of neither play is known with even an approach to certainty, it is impossible to de-decide the question by a simple appeal to precede
The probability, however, of Shakespeare, at the height of his tragic power, falling back on plagiarism or imitation of a writer so much inferior to himself as Middleton, does not seem very strong. That Middleton should have imitated Shakespeare would be nothing at all remarkable. But, as it has been seen by the really critical critics, from Lamb onward and downward, the difference between the witches of Shakespeare and of Middleton is one, not of degree, but of kind. The witches of Middleton are among the most really imaginative creations of a singularly fine but singularly unequal writer—creations full of a fantastic horror and a grotesque ghastliness.
But the witches of Shakespeare pass out of the region of the grotesque into that of sublimity. The witches of Middleton, as Lamb has said, can hurt the body; "these have power over the soul." Fragments torn out of the texture of Shakespeare's work would thus be almost as much out of place in the work of Middleton as fragments of Middleton in the work of Shakespeare. The possibility remains of interpolation—for of the hypothesis of collaboration between Shakespeare and Middleton one cannot well see so much as the possibility.
The Clarendon Press editors, after raising the question of collaboration in a hesitating manner, dismiss it in favour of the former supposition.
They say, in summing up: "On the whole we incline to think that the play was interpolated after Shakespeare's death, or, at least,
after he had withdrawn from all connection with the theatre. The interpolator was, not improbably, Thomas Middleton; who, to please the 'groundlings,' expanded the parts originally assigned by Shakespeare to the

---
1 I have given or referred to in the Notes all the passages in the Chronicles which are of interest as the originals of scenes and passages in the play. No separate notes on Dramatic Persons are, however, given, as so little is known historically of the characters. All needful information will be found in the preceding paragraph and in the various extracts from Holinshed in the Notes.

347
weird sisters, and also introduced a new character, Hecate." They assign, in addition, several other scenes, lines, or passages, to the interpolator, thus taking from Shakespeare the second scene of act i., the first 37 lines of the third scene, line 61 in act ii. sc. 1, the Porter's scene in act ii., the fifth scene of act iii., the lines from 39-47 and 125-132 inclusive in act iv. sc. 1, with lines 140-159 of the third scene; the second scene of act v. they regard as doubtful, and in the fifth scene of that act they would allot to the interpolator lines 47-50, with the words, before my body

I throw my warlike shield, in scene 8, and the last forty lines of the play.

The minuteness of this list is rather embarrassing. That the play of Macbeth as we have it contains some interpolations out of Middleton seems to me decidedly probable; indeed, the only possible solution, in the light of the information before us, of an otherwise insoluble problem. But that all the passages obelized by Messrs. Clark and Wright were interpolated by Middleton I very decidedly disbelieve; and I doubt whether Middleton himself was the interpolator. On the whole, I incline very much to the opinion expressed by Mr. Swinburne in his essay on Middleton—namely, that the interpolation of the "few superfluous and incongruous lines or fragments from the lyric portions of the lesser poet's work" was done by the editors of the first Folio, who have certainly left us a very corrupt text of the play as a whole.

STAGE HISTORY.

Macbeth seems from the first to have been a very popular play upon the stage, in spite of its gloomy character and the want of any comic relief, except in the scene with the porter (ii. 3). No doubt the remarkable popularity of this tragedy after the Restoration was in a great measure owing to the supplementary attraction of Lock's music; but before it had the advantage of any extraneous aid from one of the sister arts the strong dramatic interest of the play seems to have taken hold of the public, and although there were no surreptitious Quartos published this was probably not owing to any want of literary interest in the play, but rather to the fact that Shakespeare, by dint of experience gained in his long war against pirate publishers, was able to defeat their nefarious devices with regard to this and one or two others of his later plays. In The Puritan, or Widow of Watling Street, first published in 1607, a comedy which was acted by the children of Paul's, being one of the seven plays attributed to Shakespeare in F.3 and F.4, there is an apparent allusion to the ghost of Banquo: "instead of a Jester, we'll ha the ghost i' th' white sheet sit at upper end oth' Table" [Folio 1685, Act iv. (close to end)], and in Beaumont and Fletcher's Knight of the Burning Pestle, published in 1613, but written two years previously, there is a more palpable allusion to the same scene (v. 1):

When thou art at thy table with thy friends,
Merry in heart, and fill'd with swelling wine,
I'll come in midst of all thy pride and mirth,
Invisible to all men but thyself,
And whisper such a sad tale in thine ear,
Shall make thee let the cup fall from thy hand,
And stand as mute and pale as death itself.

This extract is interesting as probably pointing to a piece of stage business in the part of Macbeth in the Banqueting scene. What Simon Forman, that queer mixture of doctor and magician, had to say about Macbeth when he saw it at the Globe Theatre, April 20, 1610, has been already given above (p. 345). But it will be as well to repeat here what he says with regard to the management of Banquo's Ghost: "standing vp to drinkke a Carouse to him, the gosthete of Banco came and sate down in his cheier behind him;" the last two words seem to show that Macbeth, contrary to the traditional stage business, was standing in front of his chair when the Ghost first enters.

After the Restoration Macbeth was one of Shakespeare's plays which was revived with considerable success. Before that period it is most probable that Macbeth was represented with only the two songs that we find mentioned in F.1, and one or two dances for the witches introduced. On November 5, 1664, Pepys went to the Duke's house to see "Macbeth, a pretty good play but admirably acted" (vol. iii. p. 69). On December 28, 1666, Pepys saw this play again at the same theatre and calls it "a most excellent play for variety" (vol. iv. p. 195); and again, under date January 7, 1666-7, "To the Duke's house, and saw 'Macbeth,' which though I saw it lately, yet appears a most excellent play in all respects, but especially in divertissement, though it be a deep tragedy; which is a strange perfection in a tragedy, it being more proper here, and suitable" (vol. iv. 202). This more detailed account seems to imply that there certainly was music and singing, and most probably dancing, in the version of Macbeth which Pepys saw. On October 16, 1667, he writes, "I was vexed to see Young who is but a bad actor at best act Macbeth in the room of Betterton, who, poor man! is sick. But Lord! what a prejudice it wrought in me against the whole play, and every body else in disliking this fellow" (vol. v. p. 57). Betterton's absence did not prevent him seeing the play again on November 6 of the same year, "which we still like mightily, though mighty short of the content we used to have when Betterton acted, who is still sick" (vol. v. 86). Again, on August 12, 1668, he saw 'Macbeth' to our great content" (vol. v. p. 33), on December 21st of the same year, and on January 15th of the following one.
INTRODUCTION.

The question now arises, when was Davenant's version, as published in Quarto in 1673, and again reprinted in 1674 and 1687, first produced? On this point we have no decided evidence. Downes, on whose authority the alteration of Macbeth is attributed to Davenant, does not tell us. After the removal of the new company to Dorset Garden in November, 1671, he says: "The Tragedy of Macbeth, altered by Sir William Davenant; being drest in all its finery, as new cloaths, new scenes, machines, as flyings for the witches, with all the singing, and dancing in it: the first composed by Mr. Lock, the other by Mr. Channell and Mr. Joseph Priest;" it being all excellently performed, being in the nature of an Opera, it recompenced double the expence: it proves still a lasting play. Note, That this Tragedy, King Lear, and The Tempest, were acted in Lincoln's-Inn Fields" (pp. 42, 43). Now if this was the case, we may fairly conjecture that Davenant had introduced a considerable amount of what Pepys called "divertissement" into the tragedy before 1671. He had evidently obtained somehow or other the MS. of Middleton's Witch, the music for which had been written, by an unknown hand, some time before the Restoration. A portion of this music, the setting of the song "Come away, Hecket Hecket," was published from a MS. about 1812; and it appears from an examination of it, that Lock had partly adapted it in his setting of the same song. Whether Davenant had first ventured on mutilating and defiling, one may almost say, with additions of his own the text of the tragedy is doubtful; but, without any great degree of presumption, we may reasonably conclude that it was not the text of Shakespeare which was presented at the Duke's Theatre in 1664, but something like the version known as Davenant's, of which I will now give some account.

In act i. scene 3 the first change made is transforming the "bleeding captain" of the Folio into Seyton. The language is prosiified as much as possible, while still kept in the shape of verse. Seyton's speeches are but feeble versions of the "bleeding captain's." It is not Ross, but Macduff, who is made to bring the news of the defeat of the rebellious Crawdor; and, in the next scene, where Macbeth and Banquo meet the Witches, Macduff is again made to take the place both of Ross and Angus. In Macbeth's speech aside there is no allusion to his having had any idea of murder in his mind. The speech ends with the following four lines:

Fortune, methinks, which rains down honours on me,
Seems to rain blood here: Duncan does appear Clouded by my increasing glories, but
These are but dreams.

In the next scene (scene 4 in Shakespeare), in Macbeth's speech beginning "The Prince of 1 These two gentlemen were not musicians, but ballet-masters.

MACBETH.

Cumberland” the following alteration is made in the last four lines:

The strange idea of a bloody act
Does into doubt all my resolves distract.
My eye shall at my hand connive, the sun
Himself shall wink when such a deed is done.

These four lines are substituted for the last two lines of the original. Now comes an introduced scene which is full of strange beauties. Lady Macbeth enters, “having a letter in her hand,” with Lady Macduff, who is supposed to be stopping with her as a visitor. We cannot give the whole of this scene, the following specimen will suffice:

[Aside] I willingly would read this letter; but
Her presence hinders me; I must divert her.
[To Lady Macduff] If you are ill, repose may do
You good;
Y’ had best retire; and try if you can sleep.

This exquisite passage puts quite into the shade whatever of Shakespeare’s language is retained in this scene. Lady Macbeth, being alone, now reads the letter. Davenant has a delightful way of getting rid of any difficulty in the text, either by eliminating it altogether, or by converting it into the most commonplace language. For instance, the passage beginning “thou ’dst have, great Glamis,” becomes the very simple sentence:

Thou willingly, great Glamis, wouldst enjoy
The end without the means.

Another singular alteration is worth noticing. Instead of “The raven himself is hoarse,” &c., we have:

There would be music in a raven’s voice,
Which should but croak the entrance of the king
Under my battlements.

How Shakespeare’s language is deformed, we may judge from this sentence:

That no relapse into mercy may Shake my design, nor make it fall before
’Tis ripened to effect;

and how the rhythm is destroyed, we may judge from this line:

Where’er in your sightless substances you wait;

instead of

Wherever in your sightless substances
You wait, &c.

But it would be impossible to reproduce the countless outrages on Shakespeare’s poetry that meet one at every turn. We must, however, observe that the whole situation, as designed by Shakespeare, was changed by the presence of Lady Macduff and her husband in Macbeth’s castle at the time of Duncan’s murder. The second act, at first, follows Shakespeare very closely; but it is worth while seeing what the great Sir William made of the dagger soliloquy. It begins with the most wonderful emendation:

Go, bid your mistress, when she is undrest,
To strike the closet bell, and I’ll go to bed.

Some of Shakespeare’s magnificent lines are mercifully spared. We have one wonderful reading, a flash of genuine inspiration:

now murder is

All arm’d by his night’s sentinel, the wolf;

and the magnificently tragic couplet that concludes Shakespeare’s soliloquy is elegantly transformed into

O Duncan, hear it not! for ’tis a bell
That rings my coronation and thy knell.

The magnificent scene, after the murder, between Macbeth and Lady Macbeth, is not very much revised; but we have one or two gems in this, such as:

I am afraid to think what I have done.
What then with looking on it shall I do?

Again the passage, in which the line

The multitudinous seas incarnadine occurs, is swept away, and we have:

Can the sea afford
Water enough to wash away the stains?
No, they would sooner add a tincture to
The sea, and turn the green into a red.

Tincture has a delightful suggestion of cochineal. The Porter’s scene is bodily removed; and in its stead we have a short dialogue between Macduff and Lennox, introducing a beautiful speech of Macduff:

Rising this morning early, I went to look out of my Window, and I could scarce see farther than my breath;

The darkness of the night brought but few objects
To our eyes, but many to our ears.
INTRODUCTION.

At the end of this act there is a considerable amount introduced. Macduff declares that his wife and children have already gone to Fife, and that he will follow them. Then comes a scene, on The Heath, between Lady Macduff, Maid, and Servant (the latter of whom has been ordered "to attend his master with the chariot"! —). Macduff meets them; and there is a long concerted piece for the Witches, who are heard outside. Then three Witches appear and prophesy to Macduff and Lady Macduff. The third act goes on pretty straight till the end of the scene between Macbeth and the two Murderers; when there is introduced a scene between Macduff and Lady Macduff, in which they discuss together the question of Macduff assuming the sceptre for his country's good. The scene is written throughout in the heroic metre, but scarcely in a heroic strain; though we have some very beautiful lines, e.g. where Lady Macduff says:

But then reflect upon the danger, sir,
Which you by your aspiring would incur.

In the banquet scene there is very little change. As to the ghost of Banquo, we learn from the list of Dramatis Personae that this was not performed by the same actor, Smith, who played Banquo, but by another, Sandford. Genest says: "there is strong reason to believe that Smith was a fine figure, whereas Sandford was deformed" (vol. i. p. 140). The stage-direction, on the first entry of the Ghost is Enter Ghost of Banquo, and sits in Macbeth's place. After Lady Macbeth says:

What! quite unman'd in folly!

the Ghost descends; and when it reappears, just as Macbeth is drinking to Banquo, the direction is The Ghost of Banquo rises at his feet; and after the words, "Hence, horrible shadow," Exit Ghost. From these stage-directions it would appear that the Ghost walked on at its first entrance, then disappeared down a trap-door, by which it came up at its next entrance; it made its final exit walking off. After this scene there is introduced one between Macduff and Lady Macduff, where the news of Banquo's murder, being brought to Macduff, induces him to fly from Scotland.

In the third act, scenes 5 and 6 of Shakespeare are transposed, and the act ends with the scene between Hecate and the Three Witches; considerable liberties having been taken here with Shakespeare's text, and some rubbish out of Middleton's Witch is introduced, which was all set to music. It seems that Hecate appeared on a machine which descended with her. One alteration in her speech is amusing. Hecate, according to Shakespeare (iii. 5. 23—25), says:

Upon the corner of the moon
There hangs a vaporous drop profound;
I'll catch it ere it come to ground;

which the refined Davenant converts into:

For on a corner of the moon,
A drop my spectacles have found,
I'll catch it ere it come to ground.

From this we gather the interesting fact that Hecate's goings-on at night must have affected her eyesight. Singular to say, the name of the manufacturer of the spectacles is not given; if it had been there might have been some substantial reason for the alteration.

In act iv. scene 1 Lady Macduff and her son are omitted altogether, and the murder is supposed to be committed off the stage. Scene 3, between Malcolm and Macduff, takes place in Birnam Wood and not in England—an attempt, I suppose, to preserve the unities of place. Then comes an introduced scene which, I suppose, is intended, by the deformity of the play, to win some sympathy both for Macbeth and Lady Macbeth. First there is a short dialogue between Seyton and Macbeth, in which Macbeth hesitates to join his army because of his wife's illness; Lady Macbeth soon enters, and announces that she is haunted by the Ghost of Duncan. She urges her husband to resign the crown, reproaches him with obeying her counsels, and declares that she has "had too much of kings already." Then Duncan's Ghost appears, when Macbeth, in a burst of poetry, exclaims, "Now she relapses!" He then calls her women to lead Lady Macbeth out, and, when left alone, remarks:

She does from Duncan's death to sickness grieve,
And shall from Malcolm's death her health receive.
When by a viper bitten nothing's good
To cure the venom but a viper's blood.

351
MACBETH.

The act concludes with a scene in which Lennox (not Ross) announces to Macduff the murder of his wife and children. The fifth act begins with the sleep-walking scene, which is very much curtailed; and Seyton takes the place of the Doctor. Nearly all the poetry of Shakespeare in this act is eliminated. When Macbeth hears of his wife's death he remarks:

She should have died hereafter.
I brought her here to see my victims not to die.

In the last scene Macbeth kills Lennox, not young Siward, and is killed by Macduff. Before he expires he exclaims:

Farewell, vain world, and what's most vain in it, ambition.

This line probably gave the cue to Garrick for the dying speech which he introduced. (See below, p. 355.)

I have thought it worth while to give this detailed account of Davenant's version of Macbeth, in order that my readers may see what was the only form, in which Shakespeare's great tragedy was known to playgoers for something like a hundred years after the Restoration. The introduction of the songs and the music one can pardon; but how can one conceive that such detestable violence was done to the exquisite rhythm and poetry of Shakespeare's blank verse, and persisted in, without the strongest protest from every educated person who witnessed such a performance? In an age which produced such masters of elegant comedy as Congreve and Vanbrugh, dramatists as true to nature as Farquhar, or as pathetic as Otway; when such poets as Milton and Cowley were yet alive, and Dryden was in the full zenith of his power; when the voice of such a satirist as Samuel Butler was not yet hushed; in an age when, however much frivolity and pleasure might dominate society, there must have been no inconsiderable number of persons of rank and quality, who knew something of Shakespeare and the best literature of the past; how such wretched rubbish, as some of the lines which we have quoted, could be then tolerated by an audience; how actors like Betterton, Wilks, and Booth could speak such fustian stuff in lieu of the dramatic poetry of Shakespeare, which they must have had the opportunity of reading, is to me almost unintelligible. It is the fashion with certain lights of literature to sneer at the commentators of Shakespeare; but I think that we should remember that it is to such men as Rowe, Hanmer, and Theobald, and, after them, to Samuel Johnson, Malone, and Steevens, that we owe the rescue of Shakespeare's text from the depths of degradation into which it had sunk. The publication of his plays with the text freed, to a great extent, from printers' errors, and from the very unattractive appearance which they presented in the old Folios and Quartos, enabled a much wider circle of educated persons to read Shakespeare's plays, and as they read him, and the fact dawned upon them that the lines which they had heard spoken over and over again by the greatest of actors, were never written by Shakespeare, there arose a desire for the restoration on the stage of something, at any rate, more approaching the poet's text. Even the timid and fumbling liberties, which Garrick ventured to take with his stage versions, were resented; and, for the first time, audiences heard, spoken with the advantages of the finest elocution, not the jingling trash of Davenant and Tate, or the inflated bombast of Cibber, or even the resonant couplets of Dryden, but the true vigorous, manly and rhythmic verse of Shakespeare himself. Small marvel is it that, when Shakespeare's tragedy was known only through such a version as that of which I have given an account, the conception of Macbeth and Lady Macbeth should have become blurred and confused; that the finer points of Shakespeare's great creations should have been lost sight of alike by actors and audience. The result was that instead of the many-sided and contradictory character, with its varied emotions, its subtle and complex motives, its strange mixture of deep self-analysis, shallow superstition, and simple physical courage, Macbeth was treated as if he were a manly soldier reluctantly tempted to crime; or as if he were completely dominated by a woman with scarcely any womanly qualities, and with none of that strange fascination, that marvellous power of assuming to be that which she was not, which we find in Shakespeare’s Lady Macbeth, but not in Davenant’s. It is much to the credit of the actors and actresses who played these two parts that they could form any conception at all of the characters from the garbled and mutilated text which they had to speak.
INTRODUCTION.

It looks like a work of supererogation; but, after the publication of Davenant’s version of Shakespeare’s tragedy, a certain Thomas Duffett, a milliner in the New Exchange, attempted a travesty of Macbeth in 1674, confined almost, if not quite, to the scenes in which Hecate and the Witches figure. This he tackled on to a farce of his called the Empress of Morocco, in the shape of an Epilogue. It is excessively vulgar and devoid of humour even of the coarsest kind. The same individual is responsible for the travesty of The Tempest, which for dull filth and bestial vulgarity has scarcely ever been exceeded in the English language.

Macbeth had the singular fate of being turned into a puppet-show by one Harry Rowe, who was born at York, 1726, and died 1800, in great poverty. An edition of Macbeth was published in his name, but it is supposed to have been really the work of one Dr. A. Hunter. Later still, when Elliston was manager of the Royal Circus, in St. George’s Fields, he produced a version of Macbeth arranged as a Ballet d’Action by Mr. J. C. Cross. Elliston played Macbeth himself and spoke some of the text; the murder of Duncan was shown on the stage, and several new scenes introduced; the characters included Edward the Confessor, and of witches there was a goodly array. Full particulars of this singular attempt to play the legitimate drama, in defiance of the law, will be found in the preface to Davenant’s Macbeth, in vol. v. of his Works (edn. 1874).

The cast prefixed to the first edition of Davenant’s Macbeth gives Betterton as Macbeth, Lee¹ as Duncan, Harris as Macduff, Medbourne² as Lennox, and Mrs. Betterton as Lady Macbeth.

As to the performances of Macbeth that took place after 1673, they are far too numerous to record. While Davenant’s miserable version held the stage the great actors who succeeded Betterton in the part of Macbeth were Powell, the elder Mills³ and Quin. Wilks chose the part of Macduff, in which he was excellent, while Booth had to content himself with the comparatively inferior one of Banquo. Amongst the Lady Macbeths of this period may be mentioned Mrs. Barry, Mrs. Bullock, and Mrs. Horton. Quin frequently played Macbeth, his first appearance being at Drury Lane on May 9th, 1717. He was the last representative of Davenant’s Macbeth, and he never seems to have played Shakespeare’s tragedy; though on January 31st, 1738, at Drury Lane, according to the playbill, Macbeth, “written by Shakespeare,” was produced. But I think Genest was quite right in rejecting the truth of that statement, and that nothing approaching Shakespeare’s own play was produced till Garrick made his first appearance in the part, when Macbeth, “as written by Shakespeare,” was announced at Drury Lane January 7th, 1744, and Quin was so ignorant that he believed he had been playing Shakespeare’s Macbeth all the time. Garrick did not have the advantage of any great support. Mrs. Giffard was Lady Macbeth, and her husband Macduff. According to Genest, before the end of May that year Macbeth was played thirteen times. During the next season it was acted only three times. In Fitzgerald’s Life of Garrick (vol. ii. pp. 69-78) will be found a detailed account of his acting in this character. Downes praises his Macbeth very highly, but always in conjunction with the Lady Macbeth of Mrs. Pritchard, of whom it is not too much to say that to her a great part in the impression that the play produced was due. Garrick

¹ According to Downes this was Nat Lee, the dramatist, who failed totally in the part, and consequently gave up acting. This was in 1672; in the previous year Otway made a similar failure as the King in Mrs. Behn’s Jealous Bridegroom.

² Medbourne, who was a Roman Catholic, was committed to Newgate during the so-called Popish Plot, and died there.

³ He was very bad in the part. It is difficult to understand why he was put over the heads of such actors as Booth and Powell.
MACBETH.

may have been great in the part of Macbeth; but he must have been heavily handicapped by his ridiculous dress,—his red coat and silver lace and tie-wig—all which absurd inconsistencies he had not the good sense to alter. But, however powerful may have been his rendering of some portions of the tragedy, it is not uncharitable to suppose that he felt himself rather overshadowed by Mrs. Pritchard; for he only revived Macbeth, as a rule, once in the season, after he had the advantage of her co-operation; and some seasons he did not play the part at all.

I must pass over such actors as Barry, who was a magnificent failure in Macbeth, and Sheridan and Henderson, till we come to Macklin's appearance at Covent Garden, October 23rd, 1773, when all the characters were dressed in Scotch costumes, and the absurdity of Macbeth walking about as a modern captain in full uniform was discarded. Steevens pointed out that, when the piece was first produced, there seems to have been some attempt to dress the characters in an appropriate costume; for Malcolm discovers Ross by his dress when he is still some distance from him. Macklin repeated Macbeth once or twice, his appearance in which was the occasion for the display of a considerable amount of malice on the part of his enemies, some of whom, in the following year, 1774, he succeeded in convicting of conspiracy before the Court of King's Bench.

No one seems to have rivalled Mrs. Pritchard in Lady Macbeth, not even Mrs. Cibber, much less Mrs. Woffington, who attempted the part; and she seems to have had no worthy successor till Mrs. Siddons appeared, with the exception, perhaps, of Mrs. Yates. Though Mrs. Siddons had appeared in London for the first time in 1775, when she figured in the bill as "a young lady" (see Introduction to Merchant of Venice, vol. iii. p. 249), she does not seem to have again touched Shakespeare till she appeared as Isabella in Measure for Measure; and it was not till February 2nd, 1785, that she first acted Lady Macbeth at Drury Lane Theatre for her own benefit. The cast, on this occasion, included Smith as Macbeth, Brereton as Macduff, Bensley as Banquo, with Parsons, Moody, and Baddeley as the three witches. It must be confessed that this, on the whole, was not a particularly strong cast; but as to her own success there could not be a moment's doubt. Space will not permit of my giving any of the elaborate criticisms which have been written upon the Lady Macbeth of Mrs. Siddons; but I would earnestly protest against any such foolish idea getting possession of our minds, as the one that Mrs. Siddons played Lady Macbeth in the style of a stern and forbidding termagant. Her peculiar form of genius lent itself naturally to the vivid portraiture of the more terrible features of the character; but her conception of the part was full of subtle and delicate touches, of exquisite passages of tenderness, as well as of resonant notes of supernatural terror, and flashes of fire, almost infernal in their devilish splendour; thus much is perfectly clear from the descriptions left to us by those who were happy enough to see her in that wonderful impersonation. As a piece of dramatic inspiration, one would feel inclined to place Mrs. Siddons' Lady Macbeth side by side with the Othello of Edmund Kean. On March 31st in the same year, Kemble appeared for the first time as Macbeth; and in the course of the season the play was represented ten times. Though Kemble's performance of Macbeth was undoubtedly a very impressive one, he could not be said to outshine his sister in this play. The defective quality of his voice, against which his artistic career was one long struggle, placed him at a great disadvantage in comparison with Garrick; still he appears to have been, on the whole, the greatest Macbeth since Garrick till Edmund Kean appeared in the part, November 5th, 1814. Henderson's Macbeth was impressive—in fact this actor never seems to have done anything badly; Young was too sombre, Elliston too violent, and Cooke too rough and unimaginative; Kemble excelled in the banquet scene; but in the murder scene Kean was unapproachable; he owned himself, with that generosity which always distinguished him, that in the third act Kemble had completely the advantage over him. Kemble published his...
INTRODUCTION.

arrangement of Macbeth in 1803; but in a copy which now lies before me I find a MS. note to the effect that another edition without any date was sold at the Duke of Roxburghe's sale, said to be with alterations by Kemble. The cast printed in the edition, 1803, is a very strong one, and included Charles Kemble as Malcolm, Cooke as Macduff, Murray as Banquo, the great Incledon as Hecate, Blanchard and Emery as two of the Witches, besides, of course, Kemble and his sister in the two principal parts. The text seems very carefully edited. The additions made by Davenant from Middleton's Witch are retained, as of course they were obliged to be whenever Lock's music was performed in its completeness. The only point to which one can take exception is the insertion, at the end of the play, of the following six lines spoken by Macbeth as he is dying:

"Tis done! the scene of life will quickly close.
Ambition's vain delusive dreams are fled,
And now I wake to darkness, guilt, and horror.—
I cannot rise;—I dare not ask for mercy—
It is too late;—hell drags me down;—I sink,
I sink;—my soul is lost for ever! Oh!—Oh!

These were probably the same lines as added by Garrick, at least they appear in his acting-version; but, however that may be, these lines are eminently unsuitable to the character of Macbeth, and one is surprised at such a Shakespearean purist as John Kemble admitting them into the text.

Macready made his first appearance as Macbeth on June 9th, 1820, at Covent Garden. It was a favourite part of his; and in the banquet scene he introduced some very effective business. This performance nearly led to a duel between him and Abbott, whom he had replaced in the part of Macbeth by Terry; but though the affair proceeded so far that the seconds were selected by both parties, Lieutenant Twiss acting for Macready, the unpleasant dispute was ultimately settled by an apology from Abbott. Phelps, when at Sadler's Wells, produced Macbeth, divested of the Singing Witches, in his fourth season, on September 27th, 1847; the character of Lady Macduff restored, and the scene in which she and her children are murdered. He had previously played the part to Mrs. Warner's Lady Macbeth, on Whit Monday, 1844, with great success. His rendering of this character was considered one of his finest efforts by his admirers.

Macbeth was among the grand Shakespearean revivals produced by Charles Kean when manager of the Princess's Theatre. One of my own earliest theatrical reminiscences is of seeing him in this character. The tragedy was performed first before the Queen, at Windsor Castle, on Friday, 4th February, 1853, and was produced at the Princess's on the 14th of the same month; but Kean had previously played the part at the Haymarket during the season 1840-41. He retained the whole of Lock's music.

The recent revival of this play at the Lyceum has created a great deal of discussion as to the characters of Macbeth and Lady Macbeth. It is likely that all who are interested in this subject will have an opportunity of forming their own opinions, as the revival promises to be one of the most successful produced under Mr. Irving's management.—F. A. M.

CRITICAL REMARKS.

Of all Shakespeare's tragedies Macbeth is the simplest in outline, the swiftest in action. After the witches' prelude, the first scene brings us at once into the centre of stormy interest, and in Macbeth's first words an ambiguous note prepares us for strange things to come. Thence to the end there is no turning aside in the increasing speed of events. Thought jumps to action, action is overtaken by consequence, with a precipitate haste, as if it were all written breathlessly. And in the style (always the style of Shakespeare's maturity) there is a hurry, an impatient condensation, metaphor running into metaphor, thought on the heels of thought, which gives (apart from the undoubted corruption of the text as it comes to us) something abrupt, difficult, violent, to the language of even unimportant characters, messengers or soldiers. Thus the play has several of those memorable condensations of a great matter into a little compass, of which Macduff's "He has no children!” is perhaps the most famous in literature; together with less than usual of mere comment on life. If here and there a philosophical thought meets us, it is the outcry of sensation—as in the magnificent words which sum up the vanity of life in the remembrance of the dusty ending—rather than a reflection in any true sense of the word. Of pathos, even, there is on the whole not much. In that scene from which I have just quoted the crowning words, there is, I think, a note of pathos beyond which language cannot go; and in the scene which leads up to it—a scene full of the most delicate humour; the humour born of the unconscious nearness of things pitiful—there is something truly pathetic, a pathos which clings about all Shakespeare's portraits of children. But elsewhere, even in places where we might expect it, there is but little sign of a quality with which it was not in Shakespeare's plan to lighten the terror or soften the hardness of the impression one receives from this sombre play. Terror—that was the effect at which he seems to have aimed; terror standing out vividly against a background of obscure and yet more dreadful mystery. The “root of horror,” from which the whole thing grows, has been planted, one becomes aware, in hell:—do the supernatural solicitings merely foreshow or do they really instigate the deeds to which they bear witness? Omens blacken every page. An “Old Man” is brought into the play for no other purpose than to become the appropriate mouthpiece of the popular sense of the strange disturbance in the order of nature. Macbeth is the prey to superstition, and it seems really as if a hand other than his own forces him forward on the road to destruction. In no other play of Shakespeare's, not even in Hamlet, is the power of spiritual agencies so present with us; nowhere is Fate so visibly the handmaid or the mistress of Retribution. In such a play it is no wonder that pathos is swallowed up in terror, and that the only really frank abandonment to humour is in an interlude of ghastly pleasantry, the Shakespearean authorship of which has been doubted.
MACBETH.

In this brief and rapid play, where the action has so little that is superfluous, and all is ordered with so rigid a concentration, the interest is still further narrowed and intensified by being directed almost wholly upon two persons. Macbeth and Lady Macbeth fill the stage. In painting them Shakespeare has expended his full power. He has cared to do no more than sketch the other characters. As in the sketches of Michelangelo preserved at Oxford, the few lines of the drawing call up a face as truly lifelike as that which fronts us in the completed picture. But in the play these subordinate figures are forgotten in the absorbing interest of the two great primary ones. The real conflict, out of which the action grows, is the conflict between the worse and better natures of these two persons; the real tragedy is one of conscience, and the murder of Duncan, the assassination of Banquo, the slayings with which the play is studded, are but the outward signs, the bloody signatures, of the terrible drama which is going on within.

When Macbeth, returning victorious from the field of battle, is met by the witches' prediction—“All hail, Macbeth, that shalt be king hereafter!”—is it not curious that his thoughts should turn with such astonishing promptitude to the idea of murder? The tender, it is evident, is lying ready, and it needs but a spark to set the whole alight. We learn from his wife's analysis of his character that he is ambitious, discontented, willing to do wrong in order to attain to greatness, yet, like so many of the unsuccessful criminals, hampered always in the way of wrongdoing by an inconvenient afterthought of virtue. He has never enough of it to stay his hand from the deed, but he has just sufficient to sicken him of the crime when only half-way through it. He may plan and plot, but at the last he acts always on impulse, and he is never able to pursue a deliberate course coolly. He knows himself well enough to say, once:

No boasting like a fool,

This deed I'll do before this purpose cool.

Before this purpose cool!—that is always the danger to fear in a nature of this unstable sort. He can murder Duncan, but he cannot bring himself to return and face his work, though his own safety depends upon it. It is the woman who goes back into the fatal chamber, whereas he dares not return. No sooner has he done the deed than he wishes it undone. His conscience is awake now, awake and musing. With the dawn courage returns; he is able to play his part with calmness, a new impulse having taken the place of the last one. Remorse for the present is put aside. He plots Banquo's death deliberately, and is almost gay in hinting it to his wife. Now, his feeling seems to be, we shall be safe—no need for more crime! And then, perhaps, there will be no more of the "terrible dreams."
INTRODUCTION.

When Banquo's ghost appears Macbeth's acting breaks down. He is in the hold of a fresh sensation, and horror and astonishment overwhelm all. After having thought himself at last secure! It is always through the superstitious side of his nature that Macbeth is insensible. His agitation at the sight of the ghost of Banquo is not, I think, a trick of the imagination, but the horror of a man who sees the actual ghost of the man he has slain. Thus, he cannot reason it away, as, before the fancied dagger (a heated brain conjuring up images of its own intents) he can exclaim: "There's no such thing!" The horror fastens deeply upon him, and he goes sullenly onward in the path of blood, seeing now that there is no returning by a way so thronged with worse than memories.

Since his initiate step in this path Macbeth has never been free from the mockery of desire to overcome his fears, to be at peace in evil-doing, to "sleep in spite of thunder." But his mind becomes more and more divided against itself, and the degradation of his nature goes on apace. When we see him finally at bay in his fortress, he is broken down by agitation and the disturbance of all within and without into a state of savage distraction, in which the individual sense of guilt seems to be lost in a sullen growth of moody distrust and of somewhat aimless ferocity. He is in a state in which "the grasshopper is a burden" and every event presents itself as an unbearable irritation. His nerves are unstrung: he bursts out into precipitate and causeless anger at the mere sight of the messenger who enters to him. One sees his mental and bodily upset in the impossibility of controlling the least whim. He calls for his armour, has it put on, pulls it off, bids it be brought after him. He talks to the doctor about the affairs of war, and plays grimly on medical terms. He dares now to confess to himself how weary he is of everything beneath the sun, and seeks in vain for what may "minister to a mind diseas'd." When, on a cry of women from within, he learns that his wife is dead, he can say no word of regret. "She should have died hereafter"—that is all, and a moralization. He has "supp'd full with horrors," and the taste of them has begun to pall. There remains now only the release of death. As prophecy after prophecy comes to its fulfilment, and the last hope is lost, desperation takes the place of confidence. When, finally, he sees the man before him by whom he knows he is to die, his soldier's courage rises at a taunt, and he fights to the end.

Nothing in his life
Became him like the leaving it.

The "note," as it may be called, of Macbeth is the weakness of a bold and vigorous mind and frame; that of Lady Macbeth is the strength of a finely-strung but perfectly determined nature. She dominates her husband by the persistence of an irresistible will; she herself, her woman's weakness, is alike dominated by the same compelling force. Let the effect on her of the witches' prediction be contrasted with the effect on Macbeth. (In Macbeth there is a mental conflict, an attempt, however feeble, to make a stand against the temptation. But the prayer of his wife is not for power to resist, but for power to carry out, the deed. The same ambitions that were slumbering in him are in her stirred by the same spark into life. The flame runs through her and possesses her in an instant, and from the thought to its realization is but a step with her. Like all women, she is practical; swift from starting-point to goal, imperious in disregard of hindrances that may lie in the way. But she is resolute, also, with a determination which knows no limits; imaginative,
MACBETH.

In that terrible second scene of act ii.—perhaps the most awe-inspiring scene that Shakespeare ever wrote—the splendid qualities of Lady Macbeth are seen in their clearest light. She has taken wine to make her bold, but there is an exaltation in her brain beyond anything that wine could give. Her calmness is indeed unnatural, overstrained, by no means so composed as she would have her husband think. But having determined on her purpose, there is with her no returning, no thought of return. It is with a burst of real anger, of angry contempt, that she cries "Give me the daggers!" and her exaltation carries her through the fearful ordeal as she goes back and faces the dead man and the sleeping witnesses. She can even, as she returns, bear calmly the knocking that speaks so audibly to the heart of Macbeth; taking measures for their safety if anyone should enter. She can even look resolutely at her bloody hands, and I imagine she half believes her own cynical words when she says:

A little water clears us of this deed:
How easy is it then!

Her will, her high nature (perverted, but not subdued), her steeled sensitiveness, the intoxication of crime and of wine, sustain her in a forced calmness which she herself little suspects will ever fail her. How soon it does fail, or rather how soon the body takes revenge upon the soul, is seen next morning, when, after overacting her part in the famous words—"What, in our house?"—she falls in a swoon, by no means counterfeit, we may be sure, though Macbeth, by his disregard of it, seems to think so. After this, we see her but rarely. A touch of the deepest melancholy ("Naught's had, all's spent") marks the few words spoken to herself as she waits for Macbeth on the night which is, though unknown to her, to be fatal to Banquo. No sooner has Macbeth entered than she greets him in the old resolute spirit; and again on the night of the banquet she is, as ever, full of bitter scorn and contempt for the betraying weakness of her husband, prompt to cover his confusion with a plausible tale to the guests. She is still mistress of herself, and only the weariness of the few words she utters after the guests are gone, only the absence of the reproaches we are expecting, betray the change that is coming over her. One sees a trace of lassitude, that is all.
INTRODUCTION.

From this point Lady Macbeth drops out of the play, until, in the fifth act, we see her for the last time. Even now, it is the body rather than the soul that has given way. What haunts her is the smell and sight of the blood—the physical disgust of the thing. “All the perfumes of Arabia will not sweeten this little hand!” One hears the self-pitying note with which she says the words. Even now, even when unconscious, her scorn still bites at the feebleness of her husband. The will is yet indomitable in her shattered frame.

There is no repentance, no regret—only the intolerable vividness of accusing memory; the sight, the smell, ever present in imagination. It has been thought that the words “Hell is murky!”—the only sign, if sign it be, of fear at the thought of the life to come—are probably spoken in mocking echo of her husband. Even if not, they are a passing shudder. It is enough for her that her hands still keep the sensation of the blood upon them. The imagination which stands to her in the place of virtue has brought in its revenge, and for her too there is left only the release of death. She dies, not of remorse at her guilt, but because she has miscalculated her power of resistance to the scourge of an over-acute imagination.
ACT I.

As seemeth by his plight, of the revolt
The newest state.

Mac. This is the sergeant
Who like a good and hardy soldier fought
'Gainst my captivity. Hail, brave friend!
Say to the king the knowledge of the broil
As thou didst leave it.

Serg. Doubtful it stood;
As two spent swimmers, that do cling together
And choke their art. The merciless Macdonwald—
Worthy to be a rebel, for to that
The multiplying villanies of nature
Do swarm upon him—from the western isles
Of kerns and gallowglasses is supplied;
And fortune, on his damned quarrel smiling,
Show'd like a rebel's whore: but all's too weak:
For brave Macbeth,—well he deserves that name,— Disdaining fortune, with his brandish'd steel,
Which snok'd with bloody execution,

1 Graymalkin, a gray cat.
2 Paddock, tad.
Like valour’s minion, carv’d out his passage
Till he fac’d the slave;
And ne’er shook hands, nor bade farewell to him,
Till he unseam’d him from the nave\(^1\) to the chaps,
And fix’d his head upon our battlements.

Dun. O valiant cousin! worthy gentleman!
Serg. [As whence the sun ’gins his reflection
Shipwrecking storms and direful thunders break,
So from that spring whence comfort seem’d to come Discomfort swells. Mark, king of Scotland, mark:
]
No sooner justice had, with valour arm’d,
Compell’d these skipping kerns to trust their heels,
But the Norwegian lord, surveying\(^2\) vantage,
With furbish’d arms and new supplies of men,
Begain a fresh assault.

Dun. Dismay’d not this
Our captains, Macbeth and Banquo?
Serg. Yes;
As sparrows eagles, or the hare the lion.
[ If I say sooth,\(^3\) I must report they were
As cannons overcharg’d with double cracks;
So they doubly redoubled strokes upon the foe:
Except they meant to bathe in reeking wounds,
Or memorize\(^4\) another Golgotha,
I cannot tell—]
But I am faint; my gashes cry for help.

Dun. So well thy words become thee as thy wounds;
They smack of honour both. Go get him surgeons. [Exit Sergeant, attended.
[ Who comes here?]

Enter Ross.

Mal. The worthy thane of Ross.
Len. What haste looks through his eyes!
So should he look
That seems to speak things strange.]
Ross. God save the king!
Dun. Whence cam’st thou, worthy thane?
Ross. From Fife, great king;
Where the Norwegian banners flout the sky

And fan our people cold. Norway himself,
With terrible numbers,
Assisted by that most disloyal traitor
The thane of Cawdor, ’gan a dismal conflict;
Till that Bellona’s bridegroom, lapp’d in proof,
Confronted him with self-comparisons,
Point against point rebellious, arm ’gainst arm,
Curbing his lavish\(^5\) spirit: and, to conclude
The victory fell on us.

Dun. Great happiness!
Ross. That\(^6\) now
Sweno, the Norway’s king, craves composition;
Nor would we deign him burial of his men
Till he disbursed, at Saint Colme’s-inch,\(^8\)
Ten thousand dollars to our general use.

Dun. No more that thane of Cawdor shall deceive
Our bosom interest: go pronounce his present\(^9\) death,
And with his former title greet Macbeth.
Ross. I’ll see it done.
Dun. What he hath lost noble Macbeth hath won. [Exeunt.

SCENE III. A heath.

Distant thunder. Enter the three Witches.

First Witch. Where hast thou been, sister?
Third Witch. Sister, where thou?
First Witch. A sailor’s wife had chestnuts in her lap,
And munch’d, and munch’d, and munch’d:—
“Give me,” quoth I:
“Aroint thee, witch!” the rump-fed ron-yon\(^11\) cries.
Her husband’s to Aleppo gone, master o’ the Tiger:
But in a sieve I’ll thither sail,
And, like a rat without a tail,
I’ll do, I’ll do, and I’ll do.\(^10\)

Sec. Witch. I’ll give thee a wind.
First Witch. Thou’rt kind.

---

\(^1\) Nave, navel.
\(^2\) Surveying, perceiving.
\(^3\) Sooth, truth.
\(^4\) Memorize, make memorable.
\(^5\) Lavish, unrestrained.
\(^6\) That, i.e. so that.
\(^7\) Composition, terms of peace.
\(^8\) Saint Colme’s-inch, Inchcolm, the island of St. Columba; pronounced Saint Columb’s.
\(^9\) Present, instant.
\(^10\) Aroint thee, begone.
\(^11\) Ronyon, mangy creature (O. Fr. rognon).
MACBETH.

Act I. Scene 3. line 46

First Witch. All hail, Macbeth! hail to thee, thane of Cawdor.
ACT I. Scene 3.

Third Witch. And I another. 15
First Witch. I myself have all the other;
And the very ports they blow,
All the quarters that they know
I' the shipman's card.]
I will drain him dry as hay:
Sleep shall neither night nor day
Hang upon his pent-house lid;
He shall live a man forbid;
Weary se'nnights nine times nine
Shall he dwindle, peak, and pine:
Though his bark cannot be lost,
Yet it shall be tempest-tost.—
Look what I have.
Sec. Witch. Show me, show me.
First Witch. Here I have a pilot's thumb,
Wreck'd as homeward he did come.

[Drum within.

Third Witch. A drum, a drum! 30
Macbeth doth come.
All. The weird sisters, hand in hand,
Posters of the sea and land,
Thou do go about:
Thrice to thine, and thrice to mine,
And thrice again, to make up nine.
Peace! the charm's wound up.

Enter Macbeth and Banquo.

Macb. So foul and fair a day I have not seen. 40
Ban. How is't call'd to Forres? What are these
So wither'd, and so wild in their attire,
That look not like the inhabitants o' the earth,
And yet are on't? Live you? or are you aught
That man may question? You seem to understand me,
By each at once her choppy finger laying
Upon her skinny lips: you should be women,
And yet your beards forbid me to interpret
That you are so.

Macb. Speak, if you can: what are you?
First Witch. All hail, Macbeth! hail to thee,
thane of Glamis!
Sec. Witch. All hail, Macbeth! hail to thee,
thane of Cawdor!

Third Witch. All hail, Macbeth, that shall be king hereafter! 50
Ban. Good sir, why do you start; and seem to fear Things that do sound so fair? I' the name of truth,
Are ye fantastical, or that indeed
Which outwardly ye show? My noble partner
You greet with present grace and great prediction
Of noble having and of royal hope,
That he seems rapt withal: to me you speak not:
If you can look into the seeds of time,
And say which grain will grow and which will not, 59
Speak then to me, who neither beg nor fear
Your favours nor your hate.

First Witch. Hail!
Sec. Witch. Hail!
Third Witch. Hail!
First Witch. Lesser than Macbeth, and greater.
Sec. Witch. Not so happy, yet much happier.
Third Witch. Thou shalt get kings, though thou be none:
So, all hail, Macbeth and Banquo!

First Witch. Banquo and Macbeth, all hail!
Macb. Stay, you imperfect speakers, tell me more:
By Sinel's death I know I am thane of Glamis;
But how of Cawdor? the thane of Cawdor lives,
A prosperous gentleman; and to be king
Stands not within the prospect of belief,
No more than to be Cawdor. Say from whence You owe this strange intelligence? or why
Upon this blasted heath you stop our way
With such prophetic greeting?—Speak, I charge you.

[Witches vanish.

Ban. The earth hath bubbles as the water has,
And these are of them: whither are they vanish'd?

Macb. Into the air; and what seem'd corporal melted
As breath into the wind.—Would they had stay'd!

1 The shipman's card, i.e. the card contained in the compass, on which the points are marked.
2 Forbidden, i.e. under a curse.
3 Peak, grow thin.
4 Posters, quick travellers.
5 Fantastical, imaginary.
6 Own, own, possess.
ACT 1. Scene 3.

Ban. Were such things here as we do speak about?
Or have we eaten on the insane root
That takes the reason prisoner?
M Nab. Your children shall be kings.
Ban. You shall be king.
M Nab. And thane of Cawdor too—went it not so?
Ban. To the selfsame tune and words.
—Who’s here?

Enter Ross and Angus.

Ross. The king hath happily receiv’d, Macbeth,
The news of thy success; and when he reads
Thy personal venture in the rebels’ fight,
His wonders and his praises do contend
Which should be thine or his: silenc’d with that,
In viewing o’er the rest o’ the selfsame day,
He finds thee in the stout Norweyan ranks,
Nothing afeard of what thyself didst make,
Strange images of death. As thick as hail
Came post with post; and every one did bear
Thy praises in his kingdom’s great defect,
And pour’d them down before him.
We are sent
To give thee from our royal master thanks;
Only to herald thee into his sight,
Not pay thee.

Ross. And, for an earnest of a greater honour,
He bade me, from him, call thee thane of Cawdor:
In which addition, hail, most worthy thane!
For it is thine.

M Nab. [Aside], What, can the devil speak true?
M Nab. The thane of Cawdor lives: why do you dress me
In borrowed robes?
Ang. Who was the thane lives yet;
But under heavy judgment bears that life
Which he deserves to lose. Whether he was combin’d
With those of Norway, or did line the rebel
With hidden help and vantage, or that with both
He laboured in his country’s wreck, I know not;

But treasons capital, confess’d and prov’d,
Have overthrown him.
M Nab. [Aside] Glamis, and thane of Cawdor!
The greatest is behind. [To Ross and Angus]
Thanks for your pains.
[Aside to Banquo] Do you not hope your children shall be kings,
When those that gave the thane of Cawdor to me
Promis’d no less to them?
Ban. [Aside to Macbeth] That, trusted home,
Might yet enkindle you unto the crown,
Besides the thane of Cawdor. But ’tis strange:
And oftentimes, to win us to our harm,
The instruments of darkness tell us truths;
Win us with honest trifles, to betray’s
In deepest consequence.—

[Turns to Ross and Angus.
Cousins, a word, I pray you.

M Nab. [Aside] Two truths are told,
As happy prologues to the swelling act
Of the imperial theme.—[To Ross and Angus]
I thank you, gentlemen.

[Aside] This supernatural soliciting
Cannot be ill; cannot be good: if ill,
Why hath it given me earnest of success,
Commencing in a truth? I am thane of Cawdor:
If good, why do I yield to that suggestion
Whose horrid image doth unfix my hair,
And make my seated heart knock at my ribs,
Against the use of nature? Present fears
Are less than horrible imaginings:
My thought, whose murder yet is but fantastical,
Shakes so my single state of man that function
Is smother’d in surmise, and nothing is

But what is not.

M Nab. [To Ross and Angus] Look, how our partner’s rapt.

M Nab. [Aside] If chance will have me king,
why, chance may crown me,
Without my stir.

Ban. New honours come upon him,
Like our strange garments, cleave not to their • mould
But with the aid of use.

M Nab. [Aside] Come what come may,

1 Line, support.

364
Time and the hour runs through the roughest day.

_Ban_ [Advancing] Worthy Macbeth, we stay upon your leisure.

_Macb._ Give me your favour: my dull brain was wrought.

With things forgotten. Kind gentlemen, your pains

Are register'd where every-day I turn
The leaf to read them.—Let us toward the king.

[Aside to Banquo] Think upon what has chanc'd; and at more time,
The interim having weigh'd it, let us speak
Our free hearts each to other.

_Macb._ [Aside to Banquo] Till then, enough.
—Come, friends. [Exeunt.

SENE IV. Forest. A room in the palace.

_Flourish._ Enter DUNCAN, MALCOLM, DONALBAIN, LENNOX, and Attendants.

_Dun._ Is execution done on Cawdor? Are not those in commission yet return'd?

_Mal._ My liege, they are not yet come back. But I have spoke
With one that saw him die, who did report
That very frankly he confess'd his treasons, implor'd your Highness' pardon, and set forth
A deep repentance: nothing in his life
Became him like the leaving it; he died
As one that had been studied in his death
To throw away the dearest thing he ow'd:
As't were a careless trifle.

_Dun._ There's no art
To find the mind's construction in the face:
He was a gentleman on whom I built
An absolute trust.—

_Enter MABETH, BANQUO, ROSS, and ANGUS.

O worthiest cousin!

The sin of my ingratitude even now
Was heavy on me: thou art so far before,
That swiftest wing of recompense is slow.
To overtake thee. Would thou hast'd less

1 Stay upon, await.
2 Give me your favour, excuse me.
3 Wrought, agitated.
4 Ow'd, owned, possessed.
5 The proportion, i.e. the due proportion.
And in his commendations I am fed;
It is a banquet to me. Let's after him,
Whose care is gone before to bid us welcome:
It is a peerless kinsman. [Flourish. Exeunt.

SCENE V. Inverness. A room in Macbeth's castle.

LADY MACBETH, reading a letter.

Lady M. "They met me in the day of success;
and I have learn'd by the perfect'st report,¹ they have more in them than mortal knowledge. When I burn'd in desire to question them further, they made themselves air, into which they vanish'd.

While I stood rapt in the wonder of it, came missives² from the king, who all-hail'd me 'Thane of Cawdor;' by which title, before, these weird sisters saluted me, and refer'd me to the coming on of time, with 'Hail, king that shalt be!' This have I thought good to deliver thee, my dearest partner greatness, that thou might'st not lose the dues of rejoicing, by being ignorant of what greatness is promis'd thee. Lay it to thy heart, and farewell."

---

¹ The perfect'st report, i.e. the best intelligence.
² Missives, messengers.
³ Deliver, report.

The illness⁴ should attend it: what thou wouldst highly,
That wouldst thou holily; wouldst not play
false,
And yet wouldst wrongly win: thou'dst have,
great Glamis,
That which cries "Thus thou must do, if thou have it;"

⁴ Illness, evil.
And that which rather thou dost fear to do
Than wishest should be undone. Hie thee hither,
That I may pour my spirits in thine ear,
And chastise with the valour of my tongue
All that impedes thee from the golden round,
Which fate and metaphysical aid doth seem.
To have thee crown’d withal.

Enter an Attendant.

What is your tidings?

Attendent. The king comes here to-night.

Lady M. Thou’rt mad to say it:—
Is not thy master with him? who, were’t so,
Would have inform’d for preparation.

Attendent. So please you, it is true: our thane is coming:
One of my fellows had the speed of him,
Who, almost dead for breath, had scarcely more
Then would make up his message.

Lady M. Give him tending;
He brings great news. [Exit Attendent.

The raven himself is hoarse
That croaks the fatal entrance 2 of Duncan 40
Under my battlements. Come, you spirits
That tend on mortal thoughts, unsex me here,
And fill me, from the crown to the toe, top-full
Of direst cruelty! make thick my blood,
Stop up the access and passage to remorse,
That no compunctious visits of nature
Shake my fell purpose, nor keep peace between
The effect and it! Come to my woman’s breasts,
And take my milk for gall, you murdering ministers,
Wherever in your sightless substances
You wait on nature’s mischief! Come, thick
night,
And pall thee in the dunnest smoke of hell,
That my keen knife see not the wound it makes,
Nor heaven peep through the blanket of the dark,

To cry “Hold, hold!”

Enter Macbeth.

Great Glamis! worthy Cawdor! Greater than both, by the all-hail hereafter!

Thy letters have transported me beyond
This ignorant present, and I feel now
The future in the instant.

Macb. My dearest love,
Duncan comes here to-night.

Lady M. And when goes hence?

Macb. To-morrow, as he purposes.

Lady M. O, never
Shall sun that morrow see!
Your face, my thane, is as a book where men
May read strange matters;—to beguile the
time,
Look like the time; bear welcome in your eye,
Your hand, your tongue: look like the innocent flower,
But be the serpent under’t. He that’s coming
Must be provided for: and you shall put
This night’s great business into my dispatch;
Which shall to all our nights and days to come
Give solely sovereign sway and masterdom.

Macb. We will speak further.

Lady M. Only look up clear;
To alter favour 6 ever is to fear:
Leave all the rest to me. [Exit.

Scene VI. The same. Before Macbeth’s castle.

Hautboys. Servants of Macbeth attending, with torches. Enter DUNCAN, MALCOLM,
DONALBAIN, BANQUO, LENNOX, MACDUFF,
ROSS, ANGUS, and Attendants.

Dun. This castle hath a pleasant seat; the air
Nimbly and sweetly recommends itself
Unto our gentle senses.

Ban. This guest of summer,
The temple-haunting martlet, does approve?
By his lov’d mansionry that the heavens’ breath
Smells wooingly here: no jotty, 8 frieze,
Butress, nor coign of vantage, 9 but this bird
Hath made his pendent bed and procreant

Where they most breed and haunt, I have

The air is delicate.

1 Metaphysical, supernatural.
2 Entrance, pronounced here as a tripause.
3 Mortal, deadly.
4 Remorse, pity.
5 Sightless substances, invisible forms.

6 To alter favour, i.e. to change countenance.
7 Approve, prove.
8 Joty, i.e. jety, a projection in buildings.
9 Coign of vantage, convenient corner.
Enter Lady Macbeth.

Dun. See, see, our honour'd hostess!
The love that follows us sometime is our trouble,
Which still we thank as love. [Herein I teach you
How you shall bid God 'ild us for your pains,
And thank us for your trouble.]

Lady M. All our service
In every point twice done, and then done double,
Were poor and single business to contend
Against those honours deep and broad where-with
Your majesty loads our house: for those of old,
And the late dignities heap'd up to them,²
We rest your hermits.³

Dun. Where's the thane of Cawdor?
We court'd him at the heels, and had a purpose
To be his púrvyorer: but he rides well, ²²
And his great love, sharp as his spur, hath holp him
To his home before us. Fair and noble hostess,
We are your guest to-night.

Lady M. Your servants ever
Have theirs, themselves, and what is theirs, in compt,⁴
To make their audit at your highness' pleasure,
Still to return your own.

Dun. Give me your hand;
Conduct me to mine host: we love him highly,
And shall continue our graces towards him.
By your leave, hostess. [Exeunt.

Scene VII. The same. A lobby in Macbeth's castle.

Hautboys and torches. Enter and pass over, a Saver, and divers Servants with dishes and service. Then enter Macbeth.

Macb. If it were done when 't is done,
't were well.
It were done quickly if th' assassination
Could trammel up the consequence, and catch,
ACT II. Scene 1.

Ban. Hold, take my sword. There's husbandry in heaven,
Their candles are all out. Take thee that too.
A heavy summons lies like lead upon me,
And yet I would not sleep. Merciful powers,
Restrain in me the cursed thoughts that nature
Gives way to in repose!

Macb. If we should fail?
Lady M. We fail.

But screw your courage to the sticking-place,
And we'll not fail. When Duncan is asleep,—
Where to the rather shall his day's hard journey
Soundly invite him,—his two chamberlains
Will I with wine and wassail so convince,
That memory, the warden of the brain,
Shall be a fume, and the receipt of reason
A limbeck only: when in swinish sleep
Their drenched natures lie as in a death,
What cannot you and I perform upon
The unguarded Duncan? what not put upon
His spongy officers, who shall bear the guilt
Of our great quell?

Macb. Bring forth men-children only!
For thy undaunted mettle should compose
Nothing but males. Will it not be receiv'd,
When we have mark'd with blood those sleepy two
Of his own chamber, and us'd their very daggers,
That they have done't?
Lady M. Who dares receive it other,
As we shall make our griefs and clamour roar
Upon his death?

Macb. I am settled, and bend up
Each corporal agent to this terrible feat. Away,
I mock the time with fairest show:
False face must hide what the false heart doth know.

[Exeunt.

ACT II.

Scene I. Inverness. Court of Macbeth's castle.

Enter Banquo, preceded by Fleance with a torch.

Banq. How goes the night, boy?
Fle. The moon is down; I have not heard the clock.

Ban. And she goes down at twelve.

Fle. I take 't, 'tis later, sir.

Wassail, carousing.
Convince, overpower.
Receipt, receptacle.
Quell, murder.
Husbandry, economy.
ACT II. Scene 1.

Enter Macbeth, and a Servant with a torch.

Give me my sword.

Who's there?

Macb. A friend.

Ban. What, sir, not yet at rest? The king's a-bed:

He hath been in unusual pleasure, and

Sent forth great largess to your offices:

This diamond he greets your wife withal,

By the name of most kind hostess; and shut up

In measureless content.

Macb. Being unprepar’d,

Our will became the servant to defect,

Which else should free have wrought.

Ban. All's well.

I dreamt last night of the three weird sisters:

To you they have show'd some truth.

Macb. I think not of them:

Yet, when we can entertain an hour to serve,

Would spend it in some words upon that business,

If you would grant the time.

Ban. At your kind'st leisure.

Macb. If you shall cleave to my consent, when 'tis,

It shall make honour for you.

Ban. So I lose none

In seeking to augment it, but still keep

My bosom franchis'd and allegiance clear,

I shall be counsell'd.

Macb. Good repose the while!

Ban. Thanks, sir: the like to you!

[Exeunt Banquo and Fleance.

Macb. Go bid thy mistress, when my drink is ready,

She strike upon the bell. Get thee to bed.

[Exit Servant.

Is this a dagger which I see before me,

The handle toward my hand? Come, let me clutch thee:

I have thee not, and yet I see thee still.

Art thou not, fatal vision, sensible

To feeling as to sight? or art thou but

A dagger of the mind, a false creation,

Proceeding from the heat-oppressed brain?

I see thee yet, in form as palpable

As this which now I draw.

Thou marshall'st me the way that I was going;

And such an instrument I was to use.—

MACBETH.

Mine eyes are made the fools o' the other senses,

Or else worth all the rest: I see thee still;

And on thy blade and dudgeon1 gouts2 of blood,

Which was not so before.—There's no such thing:—

It is the bloody business which informs

Thus to mine eyes. Now o'er the one half-world

Nature seems dead, and wicked dreams abuse

The curtain'd sleep; witchcraft celebrates

Pale Hecate's offers; and wither'd murder,

A'larum'd by his sentinel, the wolf,

Whose howl's his watch, thus with his stealthy pace,

With Tarquin's ravishing strides, towards his design

Moves like a ghost.—Thou sure and firm-set earth,

Hear not my steps, which way they walk, for fear

Thy very stones prate of my whereabout,

And take the present horror from the time,

Which now suits with it. While I threat, he lives:

Words to the heat of deeds too cold breath gives.—

[ A bell rings.

I go, and it is done; the bell invites me.

Hear it not, Duncan; for it is a knell

That summons thee to heaven or to hell.

[Exit.

SCENE II. The same.

Enter Lady Macbeth.

Lady M. That which hath made them drunk

Hath made me bold;

What hath quench'd them hath given me fire.—

Hark!—Peace!

It was the owl that shriek'd, the fatal bellman,

Which gives the stern'st good-night.—He is about it:

The doors are open; and the surfeited grooms3

Do mock their charge with snores: I have

Drugg'd their possetst,4 that they live or die.

1 Dudgeon, handle.  2 Gouts, drops (Fr. gouttes).
3 Grooms, servants.  4 That, i.e. so that.
MACBETH

ACT II. Scene 2.

Enter Macbeth.

My husband!

Macb. I have done the deed.—Didst thou not hear a noise?

Lady M. I heard the owl scream and the crickets cry.

Did not you speak?

Macb. When?

---

Lady M. There are two lodg'd together.

Macb. One cried "God bless us!" and "Amen!" the other;

As they had seen me, with these hangman's hands,

Listening their fear: I could not say "Amen!"

When they did say "God bless us!"

Lady M. Consider it not so deeply.

Macb. But wherefore could not I pronounce "Amen?"

I had most need of blessing, and "Amen"

Stuck in my throat.

Lady M. These deeds must not be thought

After these ways; so, it will make us mad.

Macb. Methought I heard a voice cry "Sleep no more!"
Macbeth does murder sleep,—the innocent sleep,
Sleep that knits up the ravell'd slate of care,
The death of each day's life, sore labour's bath,
Balm of hurt minds, great nature's second course,
Chief nourisher in life's feast,—
Lady M. What do you mean?
Macb. Still it cried "Sleep no more!" to all the house:
"Glamis hath murder'd sleep, and therefore Cawdor
Shall sleep no more,—Macbeth shall sleep no more!"
Lady M. Who was it that thus cried?
Why, worthy thane,
You do unbend your noble strength, to think
So brainsickly of things.—Go get some water,
And wash this filthy witness from your hand.—
Why did you bring these daggers from the place?
They must lie there: go carry them, and smear
The sleepy grooms with blood.
Macb. I'll go no more:
I am afraid to think what I have done;
Look on't again I dare not.
Lady M. Infirm of purpose!
Give me the daggers: the sleeping and the dead
Are but as pictures: 't is the eye of childhood
That fears a painted devil. If he do bleed,
I'll gild the faces of the grooms withal;
For it must seem their guilt.
[Exit. Knocking within.
Macb. Whence is that knocking?—
How is't with me, when every noise appals
me?
What hands are here? ha! they pluck out
mine eyes!
Will all great Neptune's ocean wash this blood Clean from my hand? No; this my hand will rather
The multitudinous seas incarnadine,
Making the green-one red.

Re-enter Lady Macbeth.
Lady M. My hands are of your colour, but
I shame
To wear a heart so white. [Knocking within.]
I hear a knocking

At the south entry—retire we to our chamber;
A little water clear us of this deed:
How easy is it then! Your constancy
Hath left you unattended.—[Knocking within.]
Hark! more knocking:
Get on your nightgown,² lest occasion call us,
And show us to be watchers:—be not lost.
So poorly in your thoughts.
Macb. To know my deed, 't were best not know myself. [Knocking within.
Wake Duncan with thy knocking! I would thou couldst! [Exit. Knocking continues.

SCENE III. The same.

Enter a Porter. Knocking within.

Porter. Here's a knocking indeed! If a man were porter of hell-gate, he should have old turning² the key. [Knocking within.] Knock, knock, knock! Who's there, i' the name of Beelzebub? Here's a farmer that hang'd himself on the expectation of plenty:
come in time; have napkins enow about you;
here you'll sweat for't. [Knocking within.]
Knock, knock! Who's there, in the other devil's name? Faith, here's an equivocator that could swear in both the scales against either scale; who committed treason enough for God's sake, yet could not equivocate to heaven: O, come in, equivocator. [Knocking within.] Knock, knock, knock! Who's there?
[Faith! here's an English tailor come hither;
for stealing out of a French hose: come in, tailor; here you may roast your goose.] [Knocking within.] Knock, knock; never at quiet!
What are you? But this place is too cold for hell. I'll devil-porter it no further: [I had thought to have let in some of all professions, that go the primrose way to the everlasting bonfire.] [Knocking within.] Anon, anon! I pray you, remember the porter.
[Opens the gate.

Enter Macduff and Lennox.

Macd. Was it so late, friend, ere you went to bed,
That you do lie so late?

¹ Nightgown, i.e. dressing-gown.
² Old turning, plenty of turning.
ACT II. Scene 3.

MACBETH.

Port. Faith, sir, we were carousing till the second cock:
and drink, sir, is a great provoker of three things.
Macb. What three things does drink especially provoke?
Port. Marry, sir, nose-painting, sleep, and urine. Lechery, sir, it provokes and unprovokes; it provokes the desire, but it takes away the performance: therefore, much drink may be said to be an equivocator with lechery: it makes him and it mars him; it sets him on,
and it takes him off; it persuades him and disheartens him; makes him stand to and not stand to; in conclusion, equivocates him in a sleep, and, giving him the lie, leaves him.
Macb. I believe drink gave thee the lie last night.
Port. That it did, sir, 'tis the very throat on me: but I requited him for his lie; and, I think, being too strong for him, though he took up my legs sometime, yet I made a shift to cast him.]
Macb. Is thy master stirring?

Enter Macbeth.

Our knocking has awak'd him; here he comes.
Len. Good morrow, noble sir.
Macb. Good morrow, both.
Macb. Is the king stirring, worthy thane?
Macb. Not yet.
Macb. He did command me to call timely on him:

I have almost slipp'd the hour.
Macb. I'll bring you to him.
Macb. I know this is a joyful trouble to you;
But yet 'tis one.
Macb. The labour we delight in physics pain.
This is the door.
Macb. I'll make so bold to call,
For 'tis my limited service. [Exit.
Len. Goes the king hence to-day?
Macb. He does; he did appoint so.
Len. The night has been unruly: where we lay,
Our chimneys were blown down, and, as they say,
Lamentings heard 't the air, strange screams of death,

And prophesying, with accents terrible,
Of dire combustion and confus'd events
New hatch'd to the woful time: the obscure Clandour'd the livelong night: some say, the
Was feverous and did shake.
Macb. 'T was a rough night.
Len. My young remembrance cannot parallel
A fellow to it.
Macb. [Without] O horror, horror, horror!
Tongue nor heart
Cannot conceive nor name thee!

Re-enter Macduff.

Macb. Len. What's the matter?
Macb. Confusion now hath made his masterpiece!

Most sacrilegious murder hath broke ope
The Lord's anointed temple, and stole thence
The life o' the building!
Macb. What is't you say? the life?
Len. Mean you his majesty?
Macb. Approach the chamber, and destroy your sight
With a new Gorgon. Do not bid me speak;
See, and then speak yourselves.

[Exeunt Macbeth and Lennox.

Awake, awake!
Ring the alarum-bell.—Murder and treason!
Banquo and Donalbain! Malcolm! awake!
Shake off this downy sleep, death's counterfeit,
And look on death itself!—up, up, and see
The great doom's image!—Malcolm! Banquo!
As from your graves rise up, and walk like sprites,
To countenance this horror! Ring the bell.

[Bell rings.

Enter Lady Macbeth.

Lady M. What's the business, That such a hideous trumpet calls to parley The sleepers of the house? speak, speak!

Macb. O gentle lady, 'tis not for you to hear what I can speak:
The repetition, in a woman's ear, Would murder as it fell.
ACT II. Scene 2.

Enter Banquo.

O Banquo, Banquo,
Our royal master's murder'd!
Lady M. Woe, alas!
What, in our house?
Ban. Too cruel anywhere.
[Dear Duff, I prithee, contradict thyself,
And say it is not so.]

Re-enter Macbeth and Lennox.

Macb. Had I but died an hour before this chance,
I had liv'd a blessed time; for from this instant
There's nothing serious in mortality:
All is but toys: renown and grace is dead;
The wine of life is drawn, and the mere lees
Is left this vault to brag of.

Enter Malcolm and Donalbain.

Don. What is amiss?
Macb. You are,1 and do not know't: The spring, the head, the fountain of your blood
Is stopp'd,—the very source of it is stopp'd.
Mal. Your royal father's murder'd.
Len. Those of his chamber, as it seem'd, had done 't:
Their hands and faces were all badg'd with blood;
So were their daggers, which unwip'd we found
Upon their pillows:
They star'd, and were distracted; no man's life
Was to be trusted with them.

Macb. O, yet I do repent me of my fury;
That I did kill them.

Mal. Wherefore did you so?

Macb. Who can be wise, amaz'd, temperate and furious,
Loyal and neutral, in a moment? No man:
The expedition2 of my violent love
Outrun the pauser, reason.—Here lay Duncan;—
His silver skin lac'd with his golden blood;
And his gash'd stabs look'd like a breach in nature
For ruin's wasteful entrance: there, the murderers,

Steep'd in the colours of their trade, their daggers
Unmannerly breech'd with gore: who could refrain,
That had a heart to love, and in that heart
Courage to make's love known?
Lady M. Help me hence, ho!
Macb. Look to the lady.
Mal. [Aside to Donalbain] Why do we hold our tongues,
That most may claim this argument for ours?
Don. [Aside to Malcolm] [What should be spoken here, where our fate,
Hid in an auger-hole, may rush, and seize us?]
Let's away;
Our tears are not yet brew'd.
Mal. [Aside to Donalbain] Nor our strong sorrow

101

Upon the foot of motion.
Ban. Look to the lady:—

Lady Macbeth is carried out.

[And when we have our naked frailties hid,
That suffer in exposure, let us meet,
And question this most bloody piece of work,
To know it further.] Fears and scruples shake us:
In the great hand of God I stand, and thence Against the undivulg'd pretence3 I fight
Of treasonous malice.

Macb. And so do I.
All. So all.
Mal. Let's briefly put on manly readiness,4
And meet i'the hall together.
All. Well contented.

[Exeunt all but Malcolm and Donalbain.
Mal. What will you do? Let's not consort with them:
111

To show an unfelt sorrow is an office
Which the false man does easy. I'll to England.

Don. To Ireland I; our separated fortune
Shall keep us both the safer: where we are,
There's daggers in men's smiles: the near in blood,
The nearer bloody.
Mal. This murderous shaft that's shot
Hath not yet lighted; and our safest way

8 Pretence, design.
9 Manly readiness, i.e. complete armour.

374
Is to avoid the aim. Therefore, to horse;
And let us not be dainty of leave-taking, 150
But shift away: there's warrant in that Theft
Which steals itself, when there's no mercy left.]  [Exit.

ACT II. Scene 4.

[Scene IV. The same. Without Macbeth's castle.
Enter Ross and an Old Man.

Old M. Threescore and ten I can remember
well:

Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls, flung out,
Contending 'gainst obedience, as they would make
War with mankind.—(Act II. 4. 14-15.)

Within the volume of which time I have seen Hours dreadful and things strange, but this sore night
Hath trifled former knowings.

Ross. Ah, good father,
Thou seest, the heavens, as troubled with man's act,
Threaten his bloody stage: by the clock 'tis
day,
And yet dark night strangles the travelling lamp:
Is't night's predominance, or the day's shame,
That darkness does the face of earth entomb,
When living light should kiss it?

Old M. 'Tis unnatural,
Even like the deed that's done. On Tuesday last,
A falcon, towering in her pride of place,
Was by a mousing owl hawk'd at and kill'd.

Ross. And Duncan's horses—a thing most strange and certain—
Beauteous and swift, the minions of their race,
Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls, flung out,
Contending 'gainst obedience, as they would make
War with mankind.

Old M. 'Tis said they eat each other.

375
ACT III. Scene 1.

MACBETH.

Thine own life’s means! Then ’tis most like
The sovereignty will fall upon Macbeth. 30
Macb. He is already nam’d, and gone to Scone
To be invested.
Ross. Where is Duncan’s body?
Macb. Carried to Colme-kill,
The sacred storehouse of his predecessors,
And guardian of their bones.
Ross. Will you to Scone?
Macb. No, cousin, I’ll to Fife.
Ross. Well, I will thither.
Macb. Well, may you see things well done
there: adieu!
Lest our old robes sit easier than our new!
Ross. Farewell, father.
Old M. God’s benison go with you, and with those 40
That would make good of bad and friends of foes!

[Exeunt.]

ACT III.

Scene I. Forez. Hall in the palace.
Ross, Lennox, and Lords discovered.
Enter Banquo.

Ban. Thou hast it now: king, Cawdor,
Glamis, all,
As the weird women promis’d; and, I fear,
Thou play’st most foully for ’t: yet it was said
It should not stand in thy posterity,
But that myself should be the root and father
Of many kings. If there come truth from them,—
As upon thee, Macbeth, their speeches shine,—
Why, by the verities on thee made good,
May they not be my oracles as well, 9
And set me up in hope? But, hush; no more.

Sennet sounded. Enter Macbeth, as king;
Lady Macbeth, as queen; Lords, Ladies, and Attendants.

Macb. Here’s our chief guest.
Lady M. If he had been forgotten,

1 Pretend, propose, intend.
376

It had been as a gap in our great feast,
And all-thing unbecoming.
Macb. To-night we hold a solemn supper,
sir,
And I’ll request your presence.
Ban. Let your highness
Command upon me; to the which my duties
Are with a most indissoluble tie
For ever knit.
Macb. Ride you this afternoon?
Ban. Ay, my good lord.
Macb. We should have else desir’d your good advice, 2
Which still hath been both grave and prosperous,
In this day’s council; but we’ll take to-morrow:
Is’t far you ride?
Ban. As far, my lord, as will fill up the time Twixt this and supper: go not my horse the
better,
I must become a borrower of the night
For a dark hour or twain.
Macb. Fail not our feast.

2 All-thing, every way.
3 Grave, weighty.
Ban. My lord, I will not.
Macb. We hear, our bloody cousins are bestow'd
In England and in Ireland, not confessing
Their cruel parricide, filling their hearers
With strange invention: but of that to-morrow;
When therewithal we shall have cause of state
Craving us jointly. Hie you to horse: adieu,
Till you return at night. Goes Fleance with you?
Ban. Ay, my good lord: our time does call Upon 'a.
Macb. I wish your horses swift and sure of foot;
And so I do commend you to their backs.
Farewell. [Exit Banquo.
Let every man be master of his time
Till seven at night; to make society
The sweeter welcome, we will keep ourself
Till supper-time alone: while then, God be
with you!
[Exeunt all but Macbeth and an Attendant.
Sirrah, a word with you: attend those men
Our pleasure!
Attent. They are, my lord, without the [Exit Attendant.
[Exit Attendant.
To be thus is nothing,
But to be safely thus.—Our fears in Banquo
Stick deep; and in his royalty of nature
Reigns that which would be fear'd: 'tis much he dares;
And, to that dauntless temper of his mind,
He hath a wisdom that doth guide his valour
To act in safety. There is none but he Whose being I do fear: and under him
My Genius is rebuk'd, as, it is said, Mark Antony's was by Caesar. He chid the sisters,
When first they put the name of king upon me,
And bade them speak to him; then, prophet-like,
They hail'd him father to a line of kings:
Upon my head they plac'd a fruitless crown,
And put a barren sceptre in my grip
Thence to be wrench'd with an unlieal hand,
No son of mine succeeding. If 't be so,
For Banquo's issue have I fill'd my mind;
For them the gracious Duncan have I murder'd;
Put rancours in the vessel of my peace
Only for them; and mine eternal jewel
Given to the common enemy of man,
To make them kings, the seed of Banquo kings!
Rather than so, come, fate, into the list,
And champion me to th' utterance!—Who's there?
Re-enter Attendant, with two Murderers.
Now go to the door, and stay there till we call. [Exit Attendant.
Was it not yesterday we spoke together?
First Mur. It was, so please your highness.
Macb. Well then, now
Have you consider'd of my speeches? [Know
That it was he in the times past which held you
So under fortune, which you thought had been
Our innocent self: this I made good to you
In our last conference, pass'd in probation with
you,
How you were borne in hand, how cross'd, the instruments,
Who wrought with them, and all things else that might
To half a soul and to a notion crazed
Say "Thus did Banquo."
First Mur. You made it known to us.
Macb. I did so; and went further, which is now
Our point of second meeting. Do you find
Your patience so predominant in your nature,
That you can let this go? Are you so gospel'd,
To pray for this good man and for his issue,
Whose heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave,
And beggar'd yours for ever?
First Mur. We are men, my liege.
Macb. Ay, in the catalogue ye go for men;
As hounds, and greyhounds, mongrels, spaniels,
curs,
Shoughs, water-rugs, and demi-wolves are clipt

---

1 Cause, a subject of debate.
2 While, till.
3 To, in addition to.
4 Fill'd, defiled.
5 Champion me to th' utterance, fight with me a outrance.
6 Pass'd in probation with you, proved to you in detail.
7 Born in hand, deluded with false hopes.
8 Notion, mind.
9 Shoughs, shocks, shaggy dogs.
10 Water-rugs, rough water-dogs.
11 Demi-wolves, a cross between a dog and a wolf.

377
All by the name of dogs: the valued file
Distinguishes the swift, the slow, the subtle,
The housekeeper, the hunter, every one
According to the gift which bounteous nature
Hath in him close'd; whereby he does receive Particular addition, from the bill
That writes them all alike: and so of men.

Now, if you have a station in the file,
Not i' the worst rank of manhood, say 't,
And I will put that business in your bosoms
Whose execution takes your enemy off,
Grapples you to the heart and love of us,
Who wear our health but sickly in his life,
Which in his death were perfect.

Macb. Both of you
Know Banquo was your enemy.—(Act III. 1. 114, 115.)

Sec. Mur. I am one, my liege,
Whom the vile blows and buffets of the world
Have so incensed that I am reckless what
I do to spite the world.

First Mur. And I another,
So weary with disasters, tugg'd with fortune,
That I would set my life on any chance,
To mend it or be rid on 't.

Macb. Both of you
Know Banquo was your enemy.

Both Mur. True, my lord.

Macb. So is he mine, and in such bloody distance,
That every minute of his being thrusts
Against my near'st of life: and though I could With barefaced power sweep him from my sight,
And bid my will avouch it, yet I must not,
For certain friends that are both his and mine,
Whose loves I may not drop, [but wail his fall,
Who I myself struck down:] and thence it is,
That I to your assistance do make love;
Masking the business from the common eye
For sundry weighty reasons.

We shall, my lord,
Perform what you command us.

1 Housekeeper, watch-dog.
2 Distance, alienation, antagonism.

378
She'll close and be herself, whilst our poor malice
Remains in danger of her former tooth.
But let the frame of things disjoint, both the worlds suffer,
Ere we will eat our meal in fear, and sleep
In the affliction of these terrible dreams
That shake us nightly: better be with the dead,
Whom we, to gain our peace, have sent to peace,
Than on the torture of the mind to lie
In restless ecstasy. Duncan is in his grave;
After life's fitful fever he sleeps well;
Treason has done his worst: nor steel nor poison,
Malice domestic, foreign levy, nothing,
Can touch him further.

Lady M. Come on;
Gentle my lord, sleek? o'er your rugged looks;
Be bright and jovial 'mong your guests to-night.

[Macb. So shall I, love; and so I pray you;
Let your remembrance apply to Banquo,
Present him eminence, both with eye and tongue:
Unsafe the while that we must lave
Our honours in these flattering streams,
And make our faces viasters to our hearts,
Disguising what they are.

Lady M. You must leave this.]

Macb. O, full of scorpions is my mind, dear wife!
Thou know'st that Banquo, and his Fleance, lives.

Lady M. But in them nature's copy's not eterne.

Macb. There's comfort yet; they are assailable;
Then be thou jocund: ere the bat hath flown
His cloister'd flight; ere, to black Hecate's summons
The shard-borne beetle with his drowsy hums Hath rung night's yawning peel, there shall be done
A deed of dreadfully not.

Lady M. What's to be done?

Macb. Be innocent of the knowledge, dearest chuck,

---

1 From, i.e. away from.  2 Rubs, hinderances.  3 Resolve yourselves, make up your minds.  4 Without, beyond.  5 Scotch'd, slightly cut.  6 Ecstasy, excitement.  7 Sleek, smooth.  8 Remembrance, pronounced as if spelt remembrance, in four syllables.  9 Note, notoriety.
Till thou applaud the deed.—Come, seeing
night,
Scarf up the tender eye of pitiful day,
And with thy bloody and invisible hand
Cancel and tear to pieces that great bond Which keeps me pale! Light thickens, and the crow
50
Makes wing to the rocky wood:
Good things of day begin to droop and drowse,
Whiles night's black agents to their preys do rouse.—
Thou marvell'st at my words: but hold thee still;
Things bad begun make strong themselves by ill:
So, prithee, go with me. [Exeunt.

[Scene III. The same. A park, with a gate leading to the palace.

Enter three Murderers.

First Mun. But who did bid thee join with us?
Third Mun. [Macbeth.
Sec. Mun. He needs not our mistrust; since he delivers
Our offices, and what we have to do,
To the direction just.
First Mun. Then stand with us.
The west yet glimmers with some streaks of
day:
Now spurs the lated traveller apace
To gain the timely inn, and near approaches
The subject of our watch.
Third Mun. Hark! I hear horses.
Ban. [Within] Give us a light there, ho!
Sec. Mun. Then 'tis he: the rest
That are within the note of expectation
Already are i' the court.
First Mun. His horses go about.
Third Mun. Almost a mile: but he does usually,
So all men do, from hence to the palace-gate
Make it their walk.

Enter Banquo, and Fleance with a torch.

Sec. Mun. A light, a light!
Third Mun. 'Tis he.
First Mun. Stand to 't.

Ban. It will be rain to-night.
First Mun. Let it come down.
[They set upon Banquo.
Ban. O, treachery! Fly, good Fleance, fly, fly, fly!
Thou mayst revenge. O slave!

[Dies. Fleance escapes.

Third Mun. Who did strike out the light?
First Mun. Wasn't not the way?
Third Mun. There's but one down; the son is fled.
Sec. Mun. We have lost 20
Best half of our affair.
First Mun. Well, let's away, and say how much is done. [Exeunt.]

Scene IV. The same. Hall in the palace.
A banquet prepared. Ross, Lennox,
Lords, and Ladies discovered.

Enter Macbeth, Lady Macbeth, and Attendants.

Macb. You know your own degrees; sit down: at first
And last the hearty welcome.
Lords. Thanks to your majesty.
Macb. Ourself will mingle with society,
And play the humble host.
Our hostess keeps her state; but, in best time,
We will require her welcome.
Lady M. Pronounce it for me, sir, to all our friends;
For my heart speaks they are welcome.
Macb. See, they encounter thee with their hearts' thanks.
9
Both sides are even: here I'll sit i' the midst:

Enter First Murderer to the door.

Be large in mirth; anon we'll drink a measure
The table round.—[Approaching the door]
There's blood upon thy face.
Mun. 'Tis Banquo's, then.
Macb. 'Tis better thee without than he within.
Is he dispatch'd?
Mun. My lord, his throat is cut; that I did for him.
Macb. Thou art the best o' the cut-throats:
yet he's good

[Require, ask for.
MACBETH

ACT III. Scene 4.

That did the like for Fleance: if thou didst it,
Thou art the nonpareil.

Mur. Most royal sir,
Fleance is 'scap'd.

Macb. [Aside] Then comes my fit again: I had else been perfect;
Whole as the marble, founded as the rock,
As broad and general as the casing air:
But now I am cabin'd, cribb'd, confin'd, bound in
To saucy doubts and fears—But Banquo's safe?

Mur. Ay, my good lord: safe in a ditch he bides,
With twenty trenched gashes on his head;
The least a death to nature.

Macb. [Aside] There the grown serpent lies; the worm that's fled
Hath nature that in time will venom breed,
No teeth for the present—Get thee gone: to-

We'll hear ourselves again. [Exit Murderer.

Lady M. My royal lord,
You do not give the cheer: the feast is sold
That is not often vouch'd, while 't is a-making, 'Tis given with welcome: to feed were best at home;
From thence the sauce to meat is ceremony;

Meeting were bare without it.

Macb. Sweet remembrancer!—
Now, good digestion wait on appetite,
And health on both!

Len. May 't please your highness sit.

[The Ghost of Banquo appears in Macbeth's place.

Macb. Here had we now our country's honour roof'd,
Were the grac'd person of our Banquo pre-

1 Grac'd, gracious.

381
ACT III. Scene 4.

MACBETH.

Who may I rather challenge for unkindness
Than pity for mischance!
Ross. His absence, sir,
Lays blame upon his promise. Please’t your highness
To grace us with your royal company.
Macb. The table’s full.
Len. Here is a place reserv’d, sir.
Macb. Where?
Len. Here, my good lord. What is’t that moves your highness?
Macb. Which of you have done this?
Lords. What, my good lord?
Macb. Thou canst not say I did it: never shake
Thy gory locks at me.
Ross. Gentlemen, rise; his highness is not well.
Lady M. Sit, worthy friends—my lord is often thus,
And hath been from his youth: pray you, keep seat;
The fit is momentary; upon a thought
He will again be well: if much you note him,
You shall offend him, and extend his passion:—
Feed, and regard him not.—Are you a man?
Macb. Ay, and a bold one, that dare look on that
Which might appal the devil.
Lady M. O proper stuff!
This is the very painting of your fear: this is the air-drawn dagger which, you said,
Led you to Duncan. O, these flaws and starts,
Impostors to true fear, would well become
A woman’s story at a winter’s fire,
Authoriz’d by her grandam. Shame itself!
Why do you make such faces? When all’s done,
You look but on a stool.
Macb. Prithée, see there! behold! look! lo!
how say you?
Why, what care I? If thou canst nod, speak too.
If charnel-houses and our graves must send
Those that we bury back, our monuments
Shall be the maws of kites. [Ghost vanishes.
Lady M. What, quite unmann’d in folly?
Macb. If I stand here, I saw him.

Lady M. Fie, for shame!
Macb. Blood hath been shed ere now, i’ the olden time,
Ere human statute purged the gentle weal;
Ay, and since too, murders have been perform’d
Too terrible for the ear: the time has been,
That, when the brains were out, the man would die,
And there an end; but now they rise again,
With twenty mortal murders on their crowns,
And push us from our stools: this is more strange
Than such a murder is.
Lady M. My worthy lord,
Your noble friends do lack you.
Macb. I do forget.—Do not muse at me, my most worthy friends;
I have a strange infirmity, which is nothing
To those that know me. Come, love and health to all;
Then I’ll sit down.—Give me some wine:—fill full.
I drink to the general joy o’ the whole table,
And to our dear friend Banquo, whom we miss; Would he were here! to all, and him, we thirst,
And all to all. Our duties, and the please.

Re-enter Ghost.

Macb. Avaunt! and quit my sight! let the earth hide thee!
Thy bones are marrowless, thy blood is cold;
Thou hast no speculation in those eyes
Which thou dost glare with!
Lady M. Think of this, good peers,
But as a thing of custom: ’tis no other;
Only it spoils the pleasure of the time.
Macb. What man dare, I dare:
Approach thou like the rugged Russian bear,
The arm’d rhinoceros, or the Hyrcan tiger;
Take any shape but that, and my firm nerves
Shall never tremble: or be alive again,
And dare me to the desert with thy sword;
If trembling I inhabit, then protest me
The baby of a girl. Hence, horrible shadow! Unreal mockery, hence! [Ghost vanishes.

Lady M. Why, so—being gone,
I am a man again. Pray you, sit still.
ACT III. Scene 4.

Lady M. You have displac'd the mirth, broke the good meeting, With most admir'd disorder.¹

Macb. Can such things be, And overcome us like a summer's cloud, Without our special wonder? You make me strange.

Even to the disposition that I owe,² When now I think you can behold such sights, And keep the natural ruby of your cheeks, When mine is blanch'd with fear.

Ross. What sights, my lord?

Lady M. I pray you, speak not; he grows worse and worse; Question enranges him: at once, good night—Stand not upon the order of your going, ¹¹⁹ But go at once.

Len. Good night; and better health Attend his majesty!

Lady M. A kind good night to all! [Execunt all but Macbeth and Lady Macbeth.

Macb. It will have blood; they say blood will have blood:

Stones have been known to move, and trees to speak;
Augurs³ and understood relations have
By magot-pies⁴ and choughs and rooks brought forth
The secret'st man of blood. What is the night?

Lady M. Almost at odds with morning, which is which.

Macb. How say'st thou, that Macduff denies his person
At our great bidding?

Lady M. Did you send to him, sir?

Macb. I hear it by the way; but I will send:

There's not a one of them but in his house I keep a servant fee'd. I will to-morrow—And betimes I will—to the weird sisters: More shall they speak, for now I am bent to know,

By the worst means, the worst. For mine own good
All causes shall give way: I am in blood Stepp'd in so far, that, should I wade no more, Returning were as tedious as go o'er:

---

¹ Admir'd disorder, disorder to be wondered at.
² Owe, own, possess.
³ Augurs, i.e. auguries.
⁴ Magot-pies, magpies.

---

ACT III. Scene 5.

Strange things I have in head that will to hand,
Which must be acted ere they may be scannd.⁵

Lady M. You lack the season of all natures, sleep.

Macb. Come, we'll to sleep. My strange and self-abuse
Is the initiate fear that wants hard use:
We are yet but young in deed. [Execunt.

---

SCENE V. A heath.

Thunder. Enter the three Witches, meeting

HECATE.

First Witches. Why, how now, Hecate! you look angrily.

Aec. Have I not reason, beldams as you are, Saucy and overbold? How did you dare To trade and traffic with Macbeth In riddles and affairs of death; And I, the mistress of your charms, The close contriver of all harms, Was never call'd to bear my part, Or show the glory of our art?

And, which is worse, all you have done Hath been but for a wayward son, Spitful and wrathful; who, as others do, Loves for his own ends, not for you. But make amends now: get you gone, And at the pit of Acheron Meet me i' the morning: thither he Will come to know his destiny: Your vessels and your spells provide, Your charms and every thing beside. I am for the air; this night I'll spend Unto a dismal and a fatal end:

Great business must be wrought ere noon; Upon the corner of the moon There hangs a vaporous drop profound; I'll catch it ere it come to ground:

And that distill'd by magic sleights Shall raise such artificial sprites As by the strength of their illusion Shall draw him on to his confusion: He shall spurn fate, scorn death, and bear His hopes 'bove wisdom, grace, and fear: And you all know security Is mortals' chiefest enemy.

⁵ Scannd., examined.

383
ACT III. Scene 5.

[Music and song within, "Come away, come away," &c.
Hark! I am call'd; my little spirit, see,
Sits in a foggy cloud, and stays for me. [Exit.

First Witch. Come, let's make haste; she'll soon be back again. [Exit.

Scene VI. Forres. A room in the palace.

Enter Lennox and another Lord.

Len. My former speeches have but hit your thoughts,
Which can interpret farther: only, I say, Things have been strangely borne. The gracious Duncan
Was pitied of Macbeth: marry, he was dead:
And the right-valetant Banquo walk'd too late;
Whom, you may say, if 't please you, Fleance
kill'd,
For Fleance fled: men must not walk too late.
Who cannot want the thought, how monstrous
It was for Malcolm and for Donalbain
To kill their gracious father? damned fact!
How it did grieve Macbeth! did he not straight,
In pious rage, the two delinquents tear,
That were the slaves of drink and thralls of sleep?
Was not that nobly done? Ay, and wisely too;
For 't would have anger'd any heart alive
To hear the men deny 't. So that I say,
He has borne all things well: and I do think
That, had he Duncan's sons under his key,— As, an't please heaven, he shall not,—they should find
What 't were to kill a father; so should Fleance.
But, peace! for from broad words, and 'cause
he fail'd 21

MACBETH.

His presence at the tyrant's feast, I hear,
Macduff lives in disgrace: sir, can you tell
Where he bestows himself?

Lord. The son of Duncan,
From whom this tyrant holds the due of birth,
Lives in the English court, and is receiv'd
Of the most pious Edward with such grace
That the malevolence of fortune nothing
Takes from his high respect. Thither Macduff
Is gone to pray the holy king, upon his aid
To wake Northumberland and warlike Siward:
That by the help of these, with Him above
To ratify the work, we may again
Give to our tables meat, sleep to our nights,
Free from our feasts and banquets bloody knives,
Do faithful homage, and receive free honours:
All which we pine for now: and this report
Hath so exasperate the king that he Prepares for some attempt of war.

Len. Sent he to Macduff?

Lord. He did: and with an absolute "Sir, not I,"

The cloudy messenger turns me his back,
And hums, as who should say, "You'll rue the time
That clogs me with this answer."

Len. And that well might

Advise him to a caution, to hold what distance
His wisdom can provide. Some holy angel
Fly to the court of England and unfold
His message ere he come, that a swift blessing
May soon return to this our suffering country
Under a hand accur'd!

Lord. I'll send my prayers with him.

[Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

Scene I. A cavern. In the middle, a caldron boiling.

Thunder. The three Witches.

First Witch. Thrice the brinded cat hath mew'd.

1 Who cannot want the thought, i.e. who cannot but think?
2 Monstrous, pronounced as a triply liable.
3 Fact, deed.
4 Broad, plain-spoken.
5 Cloudy, sullen.
6 Brinded, brindled, streaked.

Sec. Witch. Thrice and once the hedge-pig whin'd.

Third Witch. Harpier cries,—'t is time, 't is time.

First Witch. Round about the caldron go;
In the poison'd entrails throw.
Toad, that under cold stone

7 Hedge-pig, hedgehog.
Days and nights has thirty-one
Swelter'd venom sleep ing got,
Boil thou first i' the charmed pot.
   All. Double, double toil and trouble; 10
Fire burn and caldron bubble.
   Sec. Witch. Fillet of a fenny snake,
In the caldron boil and bake;
Eye of newt and toe of frog,
Wool of bat and tongue of dog,
Adder's fork and blind-worm's sting,
Lizard's leg and howlet's wing,
For a charm of powerful trouble,
Like a hell-broth boil and bubble.
   All. Double, double toil and trouble; 20
Fire burn and caldron bubble.
   Third Witch. Scale of dragon, tooth of wolf,

Witches' mummy, maw and gulf
Of the ravin'd salt-sea shark,
Root of hemlock digg'd i' the dark,
Liver of blaspheming Jew,
Gall of goat and slips of yew
Sliver'd in the moon's eclipse,
Nose of Turk and Tartar's lips,
Finger of birth-strangled babe
Ditch-deliver'd by a drab,
Make the gruel thick and slab:
Add thereto a tiger's chauldron,
For the ingredients of our caldron.

All. Double, double toil and trouble;
Fire burn and caldron bubble.
   Sec. Witch. Cool it with a baboon's blood,
Then the charm is firm and good.

Enter Hecate.

Hec. O, well done! I commend your pains;
And every one shall share i' the gains:
And now about the caldron sing,
Like elves and fairies in a ring,
Enchanting all that you put in.

[Exit Hecate.

1 Gulp, throat. 2 Ravin'd, gorged with prey.
3 Sliver'd, stript off. 4 Slab, slimy. 5 Chauldron, entrails.
Sec. Witch. By the prickings of my thumbs,
Something wicked this way comes.

Open, locks,

Whoever knocks!

Enter Macbeth.

Macb. How now, you secret, black, and midnight hags!
What is’t you do?

All. A deed without a name.

Macb. I conjure you, by that which you profess,

Howe’er you come to know it, answer me:

Though you untie the winds, and let them fight

Against the churches; though the yesty waves

Confound and swallow navigation up;

[Though bladed corn be lodg’d, and trees blown down;

Though castles topple on their warders’ heads;]

Though palaces and pyramids do slope

Their heads to their foundations; [though the treasure

Of nature’s germens tumble all together,

Even till destruction sicken;] answer me

So what I ask you.

First Witch. Speak.

Sec. Witch. Demand.

Third Witch. We’ll answer.

First Witch. Say, if thou’dst rather hear it from our mouths,

Or from our masters?

Macb. Call ’em, let me see ’em.

First Witch. Pour in sow’s blood, that hath eaten

Her nine farrow; grease that’s sweated

From the murderer’s gibbet throw

Into the flame.

All. Come, high or low;

Thyself and office deftly show!

Thunder. First Apparition: an armed Head.

Macb. Tell me, thou unknown power,—

First Witch. He knows thy thought:

Hear his speech, but say thou naught.

First App. Macbeth! Macbeth! Macbeth!
beware Macduff;

Beware the thane of Fife. Dismiss me:

enough.

Macb. Whate’er thou art, for thy good caution, thanks;

Thou hast harp’d my fear aright: but one word more,—

First Witch. He will not be commanded:

here’s another,

More potent than the first:

Sec. App. Macbeth! Macbeth! Macbeth!

Macb. Had I three ears, I’d hear thee.

Sec. App. Be bloody, bold, and resolute;

laugh to scorn

The power of man, for none of woman born
Shall harm Macbeth.

[Descends.

Macb. Then live, Macduff: what need I fear of thee?

But yet I’ll make assurance double sure,

And take a bond of fate: thou shalt not live;

That I may tell pale-hearted fear it lies,

And sleep in spite of thunder.

Thunder. Third Apparition: a Child crowned, with a tree in his hand.

What is this,

That rises like the issue of a king,

And wears upon his baby-brow the round

And top of sovereignty?

All. Listen, but speak not to’t.

Third App. Be lion-mettled, proud, and take no care

Who chafes, who frets, or where conspirers are:

Macbeth shall never vanquish’d be until

Great Birnam wood to high Dunsinane hill
Shall come against him.

[Descends.

Macb. That will never be:

Who can impress the forest, bid the tree

Unfix his earth-bound root? Sweet bodements! good!

Rebellion’s head rise never, till the wood

Of Birnam rise, and our high- plac’d Macbeth!

Shall live the lease of nature, pay his breath

To time and mortal custom. Yet my heart

Throngs to know one thing: tell me—if your art

Can tell so much—shall Banquo’s issue ever

Reign in this kingdom?

All. Seek to know no more.

Macb. I will be satisfied: deny me this,

And an eternal curse fall on you! Let me know:—

[The caldron sinks into the earth.
ACT IV. Scene 1.

Why sinks that caldron? and what noise is this? [Music.

First Witch. Show!
Sec. Witch. Show!
Third Witch. Show!

All. Show his eyes, and grieve his heart; Come like shadows, so depart!

A show of eight kings, the last with a mirror in his hand; Banquo's Ghost following.

Macb. Thou art too like the spirit of Banquo; down!

Thy crown does sear mine eyeballs:—and thy hair,
Thou other gold-bound brow, is like the first:— A third is like the former.—Filthy bags! Why do you show me this?—A fourth! Start, eyes!

What, will the line stretch out to the crack of doom?— Another yet!—A seventh!—I'll see no more: And yet the eighth appears, who bears a glass Which shows me many more; [and some I see That twofold balls and treble sceptres carry:] Horrible sight!—Ay, now I see 'tis true; 122 For the blood-bolter'd Banquo smiles upon me,

And points at them for his. [Apparitions vanish.] What, is this so?

First Witch. Ay, sir, all this is so: but why Stands Macbeth thus amazedly? Come, sisters, cheer we up his sprites, And show the best of our delights: I'll charm the air to give a sound, While you perform your antic round; That this great king may kindly say Our duties did his welcome pay.

[Music. The Witches dance, and then vanish, with Hecate.

Macb. Where are they? Gone?—Let this pernicious hour Stand aye accursed in the calendar!— Come in, without there!

Enter Lennox.

Len. What's your grace's will?
Macb. Saw you the weird sisters?
Len. No, my lord.
Macb. Came they not by you?

1 Blood-bolter'd, blood-besmeared.

ACT IV. Scene 2.

Len. No, indeed, my lord.

Macb. Infected be the air whereon they ride, And damn'd all those that trust them!—I did hear The galloping of horse: who was't came by?

Len. Tis two or three, my lord, that bring you word

Macduff is fled to England.

Macb. Fled to England!

Len. Ay, my good lord.

Macb. [Aside] Timé, thou anticipat'st my dread exploits:
The flighty purpose never is o'ertook Unless the deed go with it: from this moment The very firstlings of my heart shall be The firstlings of my hand. And even now, To crown my thoughts with acts, be it thought and done:
The castle of Macduff I will surprised 150 Seize upon Fife; give to the edge o' the sword His wife, his babes, and all unfortunate souls That trace him in his line. No boasting like a fool; This deed I'll do before this purpose cool: But no more sights!—[To Lennox] Where are these gentlemen?

Come, bring me where they are. [Exeunt.

[Scene II. Fife. A room in Macduff's castle.

Enter Lady Macduff, her Son, and Ross.

L. Macd. What had he done, to make him fly the land?
Ross. You must have patience, madam.
L. Macd. He had none:
His flight was madness: when our actions do not,
Our fears do make us traitors.

Ross. You know not

Whether it was his wisdom or his fear.
L. Macd. Wisdom! to leave his wife, to leave his babes,
His mansion, and his titles, in a place
From whence himself does fly? He loves us not;

He wants the natural touch: 3 for the poor wren.

3 Trace, follow.
4 The natural touch, i.e. natural feeling.

387
The most diminutive of birds, will fight, 10
Her young ones in her nest, against the owl.
All is the fear, and nothing is the love;
As little is the wisdom, where the flight
So turns against all reason.

Ross. My dearest coz,

I pray you, school yourself: but, for your husband,
He is noble, wise, judicious, and best knows
The fits o' the season. I dare not speak much further:
But cruel are the times, when we are traitors,
And do not know ourselves; when we hold rumour
From what we fear, yet know not we fear,
But float upon a wild and violent sea.
Each way and move. I take my leave of you:
Shall not be long but I'll be here again:
Things at the worst will cease, or else climb upward
To what they were before. My pretty cousin,
Blessing upon you!

L. Macd. Father'd he is, and yet he's fatherless.

Ross. I am so much a fool, should I stay longer,
It would be my disgrace and your discomfort:
I take my leave at once. 23
[Exit.

L. Macd. Sirrah, your father's dead:
And what will you do now? How will you live?
Son. As birds do, mother.
L. Macd. What, with worms and flies?
Son. With what I get, I mean; and so do they.
L. Macd. Poor bird! thou'dst never fear the net nor lime,
The pitfall nor the gin.
Son. Why should I, mother? Poor birds
they are not set for.
My father is not dead, for all your saying.
L. Macd. Yes, he is dead: how wilt thou do for a father?
Son. Nay, how will you do for a husband?
L. Macd. Why, I can buy me twenty at any market.
Son. Then you'll buy 'em to sell again.
L. Macd. Thou speak'st with all thy wit, and yet, i' faith,
With wit enough for thee.
Son. Was my father a traitor, mother?

L. Macd. Ay, that he was.
Son. What is a traitor?
L. Macd. Why, one that swears and lies.
Son. And be all traitors that do so?
L. Macd. Every one that does so is a traitor, and must be hang'd.
Son. And must they all be hang'd that swear and lie?
L. Macd. Every one.
Son. Who must hang them?
L. Macd. Why, the honest men.
Son. Then the liars and swearers are fools;
for there are liars and swearers enow to bet
the honest men, and hang up them.
L. Macd. Now God help thee, poor monkey;
But how wilt thou do for a father?
Son. If he were dead, you'd weep for him:
if you would not, it were a good sign that I should quickly have a new father.
L. Macd. Poor prattler, how thou talk'st!

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Bless you, fair dame! I am not to you known,
Though in your state of honour I am perfect.1
I doubt some danger does approach you nearly:
If you will take a homely man's advice,
Be not found here; hence, with your little ones.
To fright you thus, methinks, I am too savage;
To do worse to you were fell cruelty,
Which is too nigh your person. Heaven preserve you!
I dare abide no longer. 30
[Exit.

L. Macd. Whither should I fly?
I have done no harm. But I remember now
I am in this earthly world, where to do harm
Is often laudable, to do good sometime
Accounted dangerous folly: why then, alas.
Do I put up that womanly defence,
To say I have done no harm?

Enter Murderers.

What are these faces?

First Mur. Where is your husband? 40
L. Macd. I hope, in no place so unсанctified
Where such as thou mayst find him.
First Mur. He's a traitor.
Son. Thou liest, thou shag-hair'd villain!

1 Perfect, i.e. well acquainted.
Young fry of treachery!
Son. He has kill'd me, mother:
Run away, I pray you! [Dies.
[Exit Lady Macduff, crying "Murder!" and pursued by the Murderers.]

Enter Malcolm and Macduff.

Mal. Let us seek out some desolate shade, and there
Weep our sad bosoms empty.

L. Macd. What are these faces?
First Mur. Where is your husband?—(Act iv. 3. 79, 80.)

Macd. Let us rather Hold fast the mortal sword, and like good
men
Brestride our down-fall'n birthdom: each new morn
New widows howl, new orphans cry, new sorrows
Strike heaven on the face, that it resounds
As if it felt with Scotland and yell'd out
Like syllable of doleur.

Mal. [What I believe, I'll wail;
What know, believe; and what I can redress,
As I shall find the time to friend, I will.] 10

What you have spoke, it may be so perchance.
[This tyrant, whose sole name blisters our tongues, 12
Was once thought honest: you have lov'd him
well;
He hath not touch'd you yet. I am young;
but something
You may deserve of him through me; and wisdom
To offer up a weak poor innocent lamb
To appease an angry god.

Macd. I am not treacherous.

289
ACT IV. Scene 3.

MACBETH.

Mal. But Macbeth is a good and virtuous nature may recoil
In an imperial charge. But I shall crave your pardon;
That which you are, my thoughts cannot transpose:
Angels are bright still, though the brightest fell:
Though all things foul would wear the brows of grace,
Yet grace must still look so.

Mac. I have lost my hopes.

Mal. Perchance even there where I did find my doubts.
Why in that rawness² left you wife and child,
Those precious motives, those strong knots of love,
Without leave-taking? I pray you,
Let not my jealousies be your dishonours,
But mine own safeties. You may be rightly just,
Whatever I shall think.

Mac. Bleed, bleed, poor country!
Great tyranny, lay thou thy basis sure,
For goodness dare not check thee! wear thou thy wrongs,
The title is after'd!³ Fare thee well, lord:
I would not be the villain that thou think'st
For the whole space that's in the tyrant's grasp,
And the rich East to boot.

Mal. Be not offended:
I speak not as in absolute fear of you.
I think our country sinks beneath the yoke;
It weeps, it bleeds, and each new day a gash
Is added to her wounds: I think withal
There would be hands uplifted in my right;
And here from gracious England have I offer
Of goodly thousands: but, for all this,
When I shall tread upon the tyrant's head,
Or wear it on my sword, yet my poor country
Shall have more vices than it had before,
More suffer and more sundry ways than ever,
By him that shall succeed.

Mac. What should he be?

Mal. It is myself I mean: in whom I know
All the particulars of vice so grafted
That, when they shall be open'd, black Macbeth
Will seem as pure as snow, and the poor state
Esteem him as a lamb, being compar'd
With my confineless harms.

Mac. Not in the legions
Of horrid hell can come a devil more damn'd
In evils to top Macbeth.

Mal. I grant him bloody,
Luxurious,⁴ avaricious, false, deceitful,
Sudden,⁵ malicious, smacking of every sin
That has a name: but there's no bottom, none,
In my voluptuousness: your wives, your daughters,
Your matrons, and your maids, could not fill up
The cistern of my lust, and my desire
All continent⁶ impediments would o'erbear
That did oppose my will: [better Macbeth
Than such an one to reign.

Mac. Boundless intemperance
In nature is a tyranny; it hath been
The untimely emptying of the happy throne,
And fall of many kings. But fear not yet
To take upon you what is yours: you may Convey your pleasures in a spacious plenty,
And yet seem cold, the time you may so hoo-wink.
We have willing dames enough; there cannot be
That vulture in you, to devour so many
As will to greatness dedicate themselves,
Finding it so inclin'd.

Mal.] With this there grows
In my most ill-composed affection such
A stanchless avarice that, were I king,
I should cut off the nobles for their lands,
Desire his jewels, and this other's house:
And my more-having would be as a sauce
To make me hunger more, [that I should forge
Quarrels unjust against the good and loyal,
Destroying them for wealth.

Mac. This avarice
Sticks deeper, grows with more pernicious root
Than summer-seeming lust; and it hath been
The sword of our slain kings: yet do not fear;
Scotland hath foisons⁸ to fill up your will
Of your mere own: all these are portable,
With other graces weigh'd.

Mal. But I have none: the king-becoming;

---

1. Recoil, give way.
2. Rawness, haste.
3. After'd, confirmed.
4. Luxurious, licentious.
5. Sudden, violent.
6. Continent, restraining.
7. Convey, conduct.
8. Foisons, plenty.
ACT IV. Scene 3.

MACBETH.

[Wither indeed, before thy here-approach,
Old Siward, with ten thousand warlike men,
Already at a point, was setting forth:
Now we'll together; and the chance of goodness
Be like our warranted quarrel!] Why are you silent?

Macc. Such welcome and unwelcome things at once
'Tis hard to reconcile.

[Enter a Doctor.

Mal. Well; more anon.—Comes the king forth, I pray you?

Doctor. Ay, sir; there are a crew of wretched souls
That stay his cure: their malady convinces
The great assay of art; but at his touch,
Such sanctity hath heaven given his hand,
They presently amend.

Mal. I thank you, doctor.

[Exit Doctor.

Macc. What's the disease he means?

Mal. 'T is call'd the evil:
A most miraculous work in this good king;
Which often, since my here-remain in England,
I have seen him do. How he solicits heaven,
Himself best knows: but strangely-visited people,
All swoln and ulcerous, pitiful to the eye,
The mere despair of surgery, he curea,
Hanging a golden stamp about their necks,
Put on with holy prayers: and 't is spoken,
To the succeeding royalty he leaves
The healing benediction. With this strange virtue
He hath a heavenly gift of prophecy,
And sundry blessings hang about his throne
That speak him full of grace.

Macc.] See, who comes here?

Mal. My countryman; but yet I know him not.

[Enter Ross.

Macc. My ever-gentle cousin, welcome hither.

Mal. I know him now: good God, betimes remove
The means that makes us strangers!

Ross. Sir, amen.

1 Trains, devices.
Ross. Would I could answer
This comfort with the like! But I have words
That would be howl'd out in the desert air,
Where hearing should not latch4 them.
Macc. What concern they?
The general cause? or is it a fee-grief?
Due to some single breast?
Ross. No mind that's honest
But in it shares some woe, though the main part
Pertains to you alone.
Macc. If it be mine,
Keep it not from me, quickly let me have it.
Ross. Let not your ears despise my tongue for ever,
Which shall possess them with the heaviest sound
That ever yet they heard.
Macc. Hum! I guess at it.
Ross. Your castle is surpris'd; your wife and babes
Savagely slaughter'd: to relate the manner,
Were, on the quarry6 of these murder'd deer,
To add the death of you.
Mal. Merciful heaven!
What, man! ne'er pull your hat upon your brows;
Give sorrow words: the grief that does not speak
Whispers the o'er-fraught heart, and bids it break.
Macc. My children too?
Ross. Wife, children, servants, all
That could be found.
Macc. And I must be from thence!—
My wife kill'd too?
Ross. I have said.
Mal. Be comforted:
Let's make us medicines of our great revenge,
To cure this deadly grief.
Macc. He has no children.—All my pretty ones?
Did you say all?—O hell kite!—All?
What, all my pretty chickens and their dam
At one fell swoop?
Mal. Dispute it like a man.
Macc. I shall do so;

---

1 Rent, an alternative form of "rend."
2 A modern ecstasy, an ordinary trouble of mind.
3 Nice, elaborately detailed.
4 Children, pronounced as a trisyllable.
5 Out, i.e. in insurrection.
6 Latch, i.e. catch.
7 A fee-grief, a grief peculiar to one.
8 Quarry, the slaughtered game.
ACT IV. Scene 3.

MACBETH.

But I must also feel it as a man:
I cannot but remember such things were,
That were most precious to me.—Did heaven
look on,
And would not take their part? Sinful Macduff,
They were all struck forthee! naught that I am,
Not for their own demerits, but for mine,
Fell slaughter on their souls. Heaven rest
them now!

Mal. Be this the whetstone of your sword:
let grief
Convert to anger; blunt not the heart, enrage it.

Macb. O, I could play the woman with mine eyes,

ACT V.

SCENE I. Dunsinane. A room in the castle.

Enter a Doctor of Physic and a Waiting-Gentlewoman.

Doct. I have two nights watch'd with you, but can perceive no truth in your report.
When was it she last walk'd?

Gent. Since his majesty went into the field,
I have seen her rise from her bed, throw her nightgown upon her, unlock her closet, take forth paper, fold it, write upon't, read it, afterwards seal it, and again return to bed;
yet all this while in a most fast sleep.

Doct. [A great perturbation in nature, to receive at once the benefit of sleep and do the effects of watching! In this slumberous agitation, besides her walking and other actual performances,] what, at any time, have you heard her say?

Gent. That, sir, which I will not report after her.

Doct. You may to me, and 't is most meet you should.

Gent. Neither to you nor any one; having no witness to confirm my speech. Lo you, here she comes!

Enter LADY MACBETH, with a taper.
This is her very guise; and, upon my life, fast asleep. Observe her; stand close.

1 Put on, incite. 2 Nightgown, dressing-gown.

Doct. How came she by that light?

Gent. Why, it stood by her: she has light by her continually; 't is her command.

Doct. You see, her eyes are open.

Gent. Ay, but their sense are shut.

Doct. What is it she does now? Look, how she rubs her hands.

Gent. It is an accustomed action with her, to seem thus washing her hands: I have known her continue in this a quarter of an hour.

Lady M. Yet here's a spot.

Doct. Hark! she speaks: I will set down what comes from her, to satisfy my remembrance the more strongly.

Lady M. Out, damned spot! out, I say!—
One, two; why, then 't is time to do 't.—Hell is murky.—Fie, my lord, fie! a soldier, and afeard? What need we fear who knows it, when none can call our power to account?—
Yet who would have thought the old man to have had so much blood in him?

Doct. Do you mark that?

Lady M. The thane of Fife had a wife;
where is she now?—What, will these hands ne'er be clean?—No more o' that, my lord, no more o' that: you mar all with this starting.

Doct. Go to, go to; you have known what you should not.

Gent. She has spoke what she should not, I am sure of that: heaven knows what she has known.
ACT V. Scene 1.

MACBETH.

Lady M. Here's the smell of the blood still: all the perfumes of Arabia will not sweeten this little hand. Oh, oh, oh!

Doct. What a sight is there! The heart is sorely charged.

Gent. I would not have such a heart in my bosom for the dignity of the whole body.

Doct. Well, well, well,—

Gent. Pray God it be, sir.

Doct. This disease is beyond my practice: yet I have known those which have walked in their sleep who have died holy in their beds.

Lady M. Wash your hands, put on your nightgown; look not so pale: I tell you yet again, Banquo's buried; he cannot come out on's grave.

Doct. Even so?

Lady M. To bed, to bed; there's knocking at the gate: come, come, come, come, give me your hand: what's done cannot be undone: to bed, to bed, to bed! [Exit.

Doct. Will she go now to bed?

Gent. Directly.

Doct. Foul whisperings are abroad: unnatural deeds do breed unnatural troubles: infected minds to their deaf pillows will discharge their secrets: more needs she the divine than the physician.

Doct. God, God forgive us all! Look after her; remove from her the means of all annoyance, and still keep eyes upon her. So, good night: my mind she has mated, and amaz'd my sight: I think, but dare not speak.

Gent. [Exit. Good night, good doctor.]

ACT V. Scene 2.

SCENE II. The country near Dunsinane.

Enter, with drum and colours, Menteith, Caithness, Angus, Lennox, and Soldiers.

Ment. The English power is near, led on by Malcolm,

1 Annoyance, harm, injury.  2 Mated, confounded.
ACT V. Scene 2.

MACBETH.

His uncle Siward, and the good Macduff:
[Revenge burn in them; for their dear causes
Would to the bleeding and the grim alarm
Excite the mortified man.]

Ang. Near Birnam wood shall we well meet them; [that way are they coming.
Caitl. Who knows if Donalbain be with his brother?
Len. For certain, sir; he is not: I have a file
Of all the gentry: there is Siward’s son, 9
And many unrough youths, that even now
Protest their first of manhood.]

Ment. What does the tyrant?
Caitl. Great Dunsinane he strongly fortifies:
Some say he’s mad; others, that lesser hate him,
Do call it valiant fury: but, for certain,
He cannot buckle his distemper’d cause
Within the belt of rule.

Ang. Now does he feel
His secret murders sticking on his hands;
Now minutely revolts, he braid his faith-breach;
Those he commands move only in command,
Nothing in love: now does he feel his title
Hang loose about him, like a giant’s robe
Upon a dwarfish thief.

Ment. Who then shall blame
His pester’d senses to recoil and start,
When all that is within him does condemn
Itself for being there?
Caitl. Well, march we on,
To give obedience where ‘tis truly ow’d:
Meet we the medicine of the sickly weal,
And with him pour we in our country’s purge
Each drop of us.

Len. Or so much as it needs,
To dew the sovereign flower and drown the weeds.

Make we our march towards Birnam.

[Exeunt, marching.

SCENE III. Dunsinane. A room in the castle.

Enter Macbeth, Doctor, and Attendants.

Macb. Bring me no more reports; let them fly all:

Till Birnam wood remove to Dunsinane
I cannot taint with fear. What’s the boy Malcolm?
Was he not born of woman? The spirits that know
All mortal consequences have pronounce’d me thus,
“Fear not, Macbeth; no man that’s born of woman Shall e’er have power upon thee.” Then fly, false thanes,
And mingle with the English epicures:
The mind I sway by and the heart I bear
Shall never sag with doubt, nor shake with fear.

Enter an Officer.

The devil damn thee black, thou cream-faced loon!

Where gott’st thou that goose look?

Off. There is ten thousand—

Macb. Geese, villain?

Off. Soldiers, sir.

Macb. Go prick thy face and over-red thy fear,
Thou lily-liver’d boy. What soldiers, patch? 5
Death of thy soul! those linen cheeks of thine
Are counsellors to fear. What soldiers, whey-face?

Off. The English force, so please you.

Macb. Take thy face hence. [Exit Officer.

Seyton!—I am sick at heart,
When I behold—Seyton, I say!—this push 6
Will cheer me ever, or dis-ease me now. 21
I have liv’d long enough: my way of life
Is fall’n into the sear, the yellow leaf,
And that which should accompany old age,
As honour, love, obedience, troops of friends,
I must not look to have; but, in their stead,
Curses, not loud but deep, mouth-honour, breath,
Which the poor heart would fain deny, and dare not.

Seyton!  Enter Seyton.

Sey. What’s your gracious pleasure?

Macb. What news more?

1 Their dear causes, the causes which touch them nearly.
2 Unrough, unbearded.
Sey. All is confirm'd, my lord, which was reported.

Macb. I'll fight, till from my bones my flesh be hack'd.

Give me my armour.

Sey. 'Tis not needed yet.

Macb. I'll put it on.—Send out more horses, skirt the country round; Hang those that talk of fear.—Give me mine armour. [Exit Seyton.]

How does your patient, doctor?

Doc. Not so sick, my lord, As she is troubled with thick-coming fancies, That keep her from her rest.

Macb. Cure her of that. Canst thou not minister to a mind diseas'd, Pluck from the memory a rooted sorrow, Raze out the written troubles of the brain, And with some sweet oblivion antidote Cleanse the stuff'd bosom of that perilous stuff Which weighs upon the heart?

Doc. Therein the patient Must minister to himself.

Macb. Throw physic to the dogs, I'll none of it.

Re-enter Seyton, with an Officer.

Come, put mine armour on; give me my staff.—Seyton, send out. — Doctor, the thanes fly from me.—

Come, sir, dispatch.—If thou couldst, doctor, cast The water of my land, find her disease, And purge it to a sound and pristine health, I would applaud thee to the very echo, That should applaud again.—[trying to throw off his coat of mail] Pull it off, I say.—

What rhubarb, senna, or what purgative drug, Would scour these English hence? Hear'st thou of them?

Doc. Ay, my good lord; your royal preparation Makes us hear something.

Macb. [To Seyton and Officer] Bring it² after me.—

I will not be afraid of death and bane Till Birnam forest come to Dunsinane. [Exit.]

396

Doc. Were I from Dunsinane away and clear, Profit again should hardly draw me here. [Exit.]

Scene IV. The Wood of Birnam.

Enter, with drum and colours, Malcolm, old Siward and young Siward, Macduff, Menteith, Caithness, Angus, Lennox, Ross, and Soldiers, marching.

Mal. Cousins, I hope the days are near at hand

That chambers will be safe.

Ment. We doubt it nothing.

Siv. What wood is this before us?

Ment. The wood of Birnam.

Mal. Let every soldier hew him down a bough, And bear't before him: thereby shall we shadow

The numbers of our host, and make discovery Err in report of us.

Soldiers. It shall be done.

Siv. We learn no other but the confident tyrant

Keeps still in Dunsinane, and will endure Our setting down before 't.³

Mal. 'Tis his main hope:

For where there is advantage⁴ to be given, Both more⁵ and less have given him the revolt;⁶ And none serve with him but constrained things, Whose hearts are absent too.

Mact. Let our just censures

Attend the true event, and put we on Industrious soldiership.

[ Sc. The time approaches That will with due decision make us know What we shall say we have and what we owe. Thoughts speculative their unsure hopes relate,

But certain issue strokes must arbitrate: ²⁰ Towards which advance the war.] [Exit, marching.

¹ Skirt, scour. ² If, i.e. the armour which he has thrown down.

³ Endure our setting down before 't, stand a siege

⁴ Advantage, favourable opportunity.

⁵ More, greater.

⁶ Given him the revolt, i.e. revolted or deserted from him.
Scene V. Dunsmain. Within the castle.

Enter, with drum and colours, Macbeth, Seyton, and Soldiers.

Macb. Hang out our banners on the outward walls;
The cry is still, "They come:" our castle's strength
Will laugh a siege to scorn: here let them lie
Till famine and the ague eat them up:
Were they not forc'd with those that should be ours,
We might have met them dreadful, beard to beard,
And beat them backward home.

[A cry of women within.

What is that noise?

Sey. It is the cry of women, my good lord.

[Exit.

Macb. I have almost forgot the taste of fears:
The time has been, my sense would have cool'd
To hear a night-shriek, and my fell of hair
Would at a dismal treatise rouse and stir
As life were in't: I have supp'd full with horrors;
Direness, familiar to my slaughterous thoughts, Cannot once start me.—

Re-enter Seyton.

Wherefore was that cry?

Sey. The queen, my lord, is dead.

Macb. She should have died hereafter;
There would have been a time for such a word.—

To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow,
Creeps in this petty pace from day to day
To the last syllable of recorded time;
And all our yesterdays have lighted fools
The way to dusty death.—Out, out, brief candle!
Life's but a walking shadow, a poor player,
That struts and frets his hour upon the stage
And then is heard no more: it is a tale
Told by an idiot, full of sound and fury,
Signifying nothing.

Enter a Messenger.

Thou com'st to use thy tongue; thy story quickly.

Mess. Gracious, my lord,
I should report that which I say I saw,
But know not how to do it.
MACBETH.

ACT V. Scene 5.

Macb. Well, say, sir. Mess. As I did stand my watch upon the hill, I look'd toward Birnam, and anon, methought, The wood began to move.

Macb. Liar and slave! Mess. Let me endure your wrath, if 't be not so:
Within this three mile may you see it coming; I say, a moving grove.

Macb. If thou speak'st false, Upon the next tree shalt thou hang alive, Till famine cling thee: if thy speech be sooth, I care not if thou dost for me as much.—41 I pull in resolution; and begin To doubt the equivocation of the fiend That lies like truth: "Fear not, till Birnam wood Do come to Dunsinane;"—and now a wood Comes toward Dunsinane.—Arm, arm, and out! If this which he avouches does appear, There is nor flying hence nor tarrying here. I 'gin to be a-weary of the sun, And wish the estate of the world were now undone. 50

Ring the alarum-bell!—Blow, wind! come, wrack!
At least we'll die with harness on our back.

[Exeunt.

SCENE VI. The same. A plain before the castle.

Enter, with drum and colours, Malcolm, old Siward, Macduff, &c., and their Army with boughs.

Mac. Now near enough; your leavy screens throw down, And show like those you are.—You, worthy uncle, Shall, with my cousin, your right-noble son, Lead our first battle: worthy Macduff and we Shall take upon's what else remains to do, According to our order.

Siw. Fare you well.—Do we but find the tyrant's power to-night, Let us be beaten, if we cannot fight.

Macb. Make all our trumpets speak; give them all breath,

Those clamorous harbingers of blood and death. [Exeunt.

SCENE VII. The same. Another part of the plain.

Alarums. Enter Macbeth.

Macb. They have tied me to a stake; I cannot fly, But, bear-like, I must fight the course. What's he That was not born of woman? Such a one Am I to fear, or none.

[Enter young Siward.

Y. Siw. What is thy name?

Macb. Thou 'lt be afraid to hear it.

Y. Siw. No; though thou call'st thyself a hotter name Than any is in hell.

Macb. My name's Macbeth.

Y. Siw. The devil himself could not pronounce a title
More hateful to mine ear.

Macb. No, nor more fearful.

Y. Siw. Thou liest, abhorred tyrant; with my sword I'll prove the lie thou speak'st.

[They fight, and young Siward is slain.

Macb. Thou wast born of woman. But swords I smile at, weapons laugh to scorn, Brandish'd by man that's of a woman born.

[Exit.

Alarums. Enter Macduff.

Macb. That way the noise is. Tyrant, show thy face!

If thou be'st slain and with no stroke of mine, My wife and children's ghosts will haunt me still. I cannot strike at wretched kerns, whose arms Are hir'd to bear their staves: either thou, Macbeth, Or else my sword, with an unbetter'd edge, I sheathe again unshed. 4—[There thou shouldst be; By this great clatter, one of greatest note Seems bruited.] Let me find him, fortune! And more I beg not. [Exit. Alarums.

1 Cling, shrink, shrivel. 2 Estate, state, order. 3 Either, pronounced as a monosyllable. 4 Undeeded, i.e. having done nothing.
ACT V. Scene 7.

Enter Malcolm and old Siward.

Siw. This way, my lord; the castle’s gently render’d:
The tyrant’s people on both sides do fight;
The noble thanes do bravely in the war;

MACBETH.

The day almost itself professes yours,
And little is to do.

Mal. We have met with foes
That strike beside us.

Siw. Enter, sir, the castle.

[Exeunt. Alarums.

MACB. Turn, hell-hound, turn!—(Act v. 5. 3.)

[Scene VIII. The same. Another part of the plain.]

Re-enter Macbeth.

Macb. Why should I play the Roman fool, and die
On mine own sword? whiles I see lives, the gashes
Do better upon them.

Enter Macduff.

Macd. Turn, hell-hound, turn!
Macb. Of all men else I have avoided thee:
But get thee back; my soul is too much charg’d
With blood of thine already.

Macd. I have no words;

My voice is in my sword; thou bloodier villain
Than terms can give thee out! [They fight.

Macb. Thou lossest labour:
As easy mayst thou the intrenchant air
With thy keen sword impress, as make me bleed:
Let fall thy blade on vulnerable crests;
I bear a charmed life, which must not yield
To one of woman born.

Macd. Despair thy charm;
And let the angel whom thou still hast serv’d
Tell thee, Macduff was from his mother’s womb
Untimely ripp’d.

Macb. Accursed be that tongue that tells me so,
For it hath cow’d my better part of man!
And be these juggling fiends no more believ’d,

399
ACT V. SCENE 3.

MACBETH.

That palter with us in a double sense; 20
That keep the word of promise to our ear,
And break it to our hope!—I will not fight with thee.

Macb. Then yield thee, coward,
And live to be the show and gaze o’ the time:
We ’ll have thee, as our rarer monsters are,
Painted upon a pole, and underwrit
“Here may you see the tyrant.”

Macb. I will not yield,
To kiss the ground before young Malcolm’s feet,
And to be baited with the rabble’s curse. 29
Though Birnam wood be come to Dunsinane,

All. Hail, King of Scotland!—(Act v. 3. 30.)

And thou oppos’d, being of no woman born,
Yet I will try the last:—before my body
I throw my warlike shield:—lay on, Macduff;
And damnd be him that first cries “Hold,

[They fight. Macbeth is slain. [Macduff drags his body off.]

[Retreat. Flourish.] Enter, with drum and colours, Malcolm, old Siward, Ross, Lennox, Angus, Caithness, Menteith, and Soldiers.

[Mal. I would the friends we miss were safe
arriv’d.

Siwa. Some must go off: and yet, by these
I see,
So great a day as this is cheaply bought.

Mal. Macduff is missing, and your noble son.

Ross. Your son, my lord, has paid a soldier’s debt:
He only liv’d but till he was a man; 40
The which no sooner had his prowess confirm’d
In the unshrinking station where he fought,
But like a man he died.

Siwa. Then he is dead?

Ross. Ay, and brought off the field: your cause of sorrow
Must not be measur’d by his worth, for then
It hath no end.

Siwa. Had he his hurts before?

Ross. Ay, on the front.

Siwa. Why then, God’s soldier be he!
MACBETH

[Mac. We shall not spend a large expense of time
Before we reckon with your several loves,
And make us even with you. My thanes and kinsmen,
Henceforth be ears, the first that ever Scotland
In such an honour nam'd. What's more to do,
Which would be planted newly with the time,
As calling home our exil'd friends abroad
That fled the snares of watchful tyranny,
Producing forth the cruel ministers
Of this dead butcher and his fiend-like queen,
Who, as 'tis thought, by self and violent hands
Tol'd off her life; this, and what needful else
That calls upon us, by the grace of Grace,
We will perform in measure, time, and place:
So, thanks to all at once and to each one,
Whom we invite to see us crown'd at Scone.

[Flourish. Exeunt.]

Vol. V.  401  138
NOTES TO MACBETH.

ACT I. SCENE 1.

1. Line 1: When shall we three meet again.—Ft. have a note of interrogation after again. The punctuation in the text is due to Hanmer, who rightly saw that the question has regard to the time, not to the season, of the witches' next meeting.

2. Line 8: hurrlyburly.—Cotgrave has "Grabuge: f. A great coyle, stirre, garboyle, turnoyle, hurlyburly." Henderson (Var. Ed. vol. xi. p. 11) quotes Peacham's Garden of Eloquence, 1577: "Onomatopelia, when we invent, devise,ayne, and make a name intimating the sound of that it signifieth, as hurlyburly for an uprove and tumultuous stirre." Shakespeare uses the word as an adjective in I. Henry IV. v. i. 78. Compare Marlowe and Nash, Dido Queen of Carthage (ed. Dyce, p. 265):
I think it was the Devil's revelling night,
There was such hurly burly in the heavens.

3. Lines 8, 9:
First Witch. I come, Graymalkin!
Sec. Witch. Paddock calls.
Compare Hamlet, iii. 4. 190: "a paddock, a bat, a gh." Herrick has the word in "Another Grace for a Child" in Noble Numbers:
Heaving up my either hand,
Cold as paddocks though they be.
The Clarendon Press edd. say that in Cumberland toad-stools are still called paddock-stools. The word is the diminutive of pad, the Anglo-Saxon for a toad. Cats and toads are among the principal attendants on witches; for, as Scot says in the Discoverie of Witchcraft (p. 3):
"Some say they can keep devils and spirits in the likeness of todes and cats;" and again (p. 163): "But among the innumerable number of the portentious beasts, fowls, serpents, and other creatures, the tode is the most excellent object, whose ougle deformitie signifieth sweete and amiable fortune: in respect whereof some superstitions witches preserve todes for their familiars. And some one of good credit (whom I could name) having converted the witches themselves, hath starved diverse of their divels, which they kept in boxes in the likeness of todes."

The cats, it seems on the indisputable authority of Bodin, are witches in disguise, though "While witches are turned into cats," observes Scot, "he alledged no reason, and therefore (to help him forth with that paraphrase) I saie, that witches are curst queanes, and manie times scratch one another, or their neighbours by the faces; and therefore perchance are turned into cats. But I have put twentie of these witchmongers to silence with this one question; to wit, Whether a witch that can turne a woman into a cat, &c: can also turne a cat into a woman?" (Reprint, Nicholson, 1886, pp. 75, 74).

The arrangement of lines in the text is that of Hunter's conjecture. Fl. read: "A. F. Paddock calls anon: faire is foule, &c."

ACT I. SCENE 2.

4. Line 6: the broil.—Broil is not unfrequently used by Shakespeare as almost a synonym for war or battle. Compare Othello, i. 2. 86, 87:

And little of this great world can I speak,
More than pertains to feats of broil and battle.

5. Line 9: And choose their art.—The Clarendon Press ed. paraphrase, "drown each other by rendering their skill in swimming useless;" and compare Mark v. 18, where choke is used of suffocation by water: "The herd ran violently down a steep place into the sea . . . and were choked in the sea."—Macdonwald, the reading of F. 1, is in the later Fl. Macdonnel. Hollinshed spells it Macdonwald.

7. Line 14: And fortune, on his damned quarrel smiling.—Fl. print damned quarry, which has been taken to mean "doomed prey," i.e. Macdonald's army. But the word quarrel, which certainly gives a better sense, is used by Hollinshed in the very passage of which Shakespeare is here making use: "for out of the Western Isles there came unto him a great multitude of people, offering themselves to assist him in that rebellious quarrel, and out of Ireland in hope of the spoil came no small number of Kerns and Gallowglasses."

8. Lines 20-23:

Till he fac'd the slave;
And ne'er shook hands, nor bade farewell to him,
Till he unseam'd him from the nave to the chaps,
And for his head upon our battlemene.

The first two lines are printed and punctuated thus in F.1:

*Till he fac'd the Slave:
Which ne'er shook hands, nor bad farewell to him.*

The simple emendation adopted in our text is that of Capell. Most commentators have suspected that this passage is corrupt, or that something is omitted. The difficulty is not as to making the word which refer to a person, for that is common enough in Shakespeare; but, as the Clarendon edd. rightly observe, "As the text stands, the meaning is, Macdonwald did not take leave of, nor bid farewell to, his antagonist till Macbeth had slain him."

Certainly, if we follow the reading of Fl., which must refer to the slave, that is to the rebel Macdonwald; but it is quite clear that it should refer to Macbeth, for it would be very awkward were we to suppose line 21 to refer to Macdonwald, as the he in the next line, 22, must undoubtedly refer to Macbeth. The three first Folios all agree in the punctuation of the passage and in the text; but F. 4 reads never for ne'er and bid for bad, neither of which variations can be said to be improvements. It will be observed that (in Fl.) line 21 commences with Which, as does line 18 above; also that the imperfect line 22 and the perfect line 22 both begin with Till as. It is therefore quite possible that the copyist's eye might have caught the which in line 18; and that some portion of line 20 may be missing, as we should have expected "Till he fac'd the slave," instead of "Till he fac'd the slave;" but this may be an instance of the omission of the first syllable at the beginning of a line. (See Measure for Measure, note 77.) On the other hand, there is this to be said for the reading of Fl., that the "blooding Captaine," as he is called—rightly changed to Sergeant by most modern editors (see line 3 above)—having been severely wounded, would be naturally short of breath; and the imperfect line 20 having, as it has, a colon at the end, may have been meant by the author to signify that the speaker paused from exhaustion, and then resuming his story, but forgetting how he had begun his last sentence, commenced the next one with which, intending to refer to Macbeth and not to the slave or rebel Macdonwald.—F. A. M.

9. Line 22: Till he unseam'd him from the nave to the chaps.—Nave for "navel" has not been met with except in this passage. The curious character of the stroke has exercised the minds of the commentators. Steevens, however, quotes a closely parallel passage from Marlowe's Dido Queen of Carthage, ii. 1:

Then from the nave to the throat at once He ript old Priam.

—Works, p. 258.

10. Line 26: Shipwrecking storms and direful thunders break.—The word break is added from F. 2. In F. 1 the line ends at thunders.

11. Line 34: captains.—This should probably be pronounced capitains, as in III. Henry VI. iv. 7. 50. (See note 274 to that play.) The arrangement in the text is Pope's. Fl. print the lines as prose.

12. Line 38: So they doubly redoubled strokes upon the foe.—This is the reading of Fl., and it is preferable, I think, to any of the changes which have been made or suggested—as putting So they in a separate line, or coupling them with the line before. Doubly redoubled occurs also in Richard II. i. 3. 80-82:

And let thy blows, doubly redoubled,
Fall like amazing thunder on the casque
Of thy adverse pernicious enemy.

403
NOTES TO MACBETH.

ACT I. Scene 3.

   from her Will fail some blessing to this land, which shall
   In it be memorized.

14. Line 45: thame. — The Anglo-Saxon title of thame denoted a rank midway between earl andeldorman. The word is used by Shakespeare only in this play, where it seems to be equivalent to earl. The stage-direction of the Ff. is Enter Ross and Angus; but as Angus neither speaks nor is spoken to in the scene, his name was omitted by Capell and most succeeding editors.

15. Lines 49, 50:
   Where the Norwegian banners sbout the sky
   And fame our people cold.

Compare John, v. 1. 72:
   Mocking the air with colours idly spread.

The meaning here is evidently that the Norwegian bannerns insult the sky in their pride, and chill the Scottish host with fear. The lines are only conjunctively arranged, and here, as elsewhere, the text is probably corrupted.

16. Line 54: Bellona's bridegroom, lapp'd in proof; i.e. clad in armour of proof. Compare Richard II. i. 3. 78:
   Add proof unto mine armour with thy prayers;
   and see below note 66. Bellona's bridegroom is not, as Steevens seems to think, Mars but Macbeth.

17. Line 56: Point against point rebellious, arm'gainst arm. — This punctuation is Theobald's, and is generally adopted in preference to that of the Ff., which read:
   Point against Point, rebellious Arme against Arme.

Ross would not be likely to speak of the arms of Macbeth's soldiers, who were fighting for the king, as rebellious.

18. Line 57: Curbing his Lathe spirit. — Compare II. Henry IV. iv. 4. 62-64:
   For when his headstrong riot hath no curb,
   When rage and hot blood are his counsellors,
   When means and swatch manners meet together.

19. Line 59: Sweno. — "There is near Forres a remarkable monument with Eunic inscriptions, popularly called 'Sweno's Stone,' and supposed to commemorate the defeat of the Norwegians." (Clarendon Press edd.).

ACT I. Scene 3.

Holinshed's narrative of the meeting of Macbeth and Banquo with the witches is as follows: "Shortly after happened a strange and vnocturn wonder, which afterward was the cause of muche trouble in the realme of Scotlantse as ye shall after hear. It furnished as Makbeth & Banquho journed toward Forres, where the king as then lay, they went sporting by the way togethuer without other companys, save onely themselues, passing through the woodes and fieldes, when sodenly in the middes of a launde, there met them .ill. women in strange & ferily apparel, resembling creatures of an elder worlde, whom when they attentufully beholde, wondering much at the sight, The first of them spake & sayde: All hayle Mak-

1 Lawn. 2 Wonderfu.
ACT I. Scene 3.

NOTES TO

MACBETH.

ACT I. Scene 3.

23. Line 9: And, like a rat without a tail.—Steevens says "that though a witch could assume the form of any animal she pleased, the tail would still be wanting" (Var. Ed. vol. xi. p. 32). He then goes on to state "the reasons given by some of the old writers. I cannot find anything on this subject in Reginald Scot's Discoverie of Witchcraft, though he has a great deal to say about the transformations of witches (book v.). In Theselion Dyer's Folk Lore of Shakespeare (p. 80) the author says: "In German legends and traditions, we find frequent notice of witches, assuming the form of a cat, and displaying their fiendish character in certain diabolical acts. It was, however, the absence of the tail that only too often was the cause of the witch being detected in her disguised form." That horrible creature of superstition, the were-wolf, or human being changed into a wolf, was distinguished by having no tail. The most usual form for a witch to take was that of a cat, or wolf, or mouse, or goat, sometimes of a hare, not very often of a rat; though rats have always been looked upon as uncanny creatures and connected, more or less, with the devil. The only historical demon-rat that I remember is that one in Dickens's amusing article Nurses' Stories, in The Uncommercial Traveller. How that diabolical animal persecuted the unfortunate Chips will be remembered by readers of that amusing work. Capell suggests another explanation of without a tail, that, as tails are the rudders of such animals as the water-rat, the witch means she could do without a rudder as well as sail in a sieve.—P. A. M.

24. Line 15: And the very ports they blow; i.e. blow upon. Compare Love's Labour's Lost, iv. 3. 109:

Air, quoth he, thy cheeks may blow.

Pope changes ports into points.

25. Line 20: PENT-HOUSE I'd.—Malone compares Dekker, The Gull's Hornbook, ch. iii.: "The two eyes are the glasse windows at which light disperses itself into every roome, having goodly penitouses of hair to overthrowdow them" (Reprint, 1612, pp. 76, 77).

26. Lines 22, 23:

Weary se'nnights nine times nine
Shall he dwindle, peak, and pine.

Few of the enchantments of witchcraft are more popularly known than that which consisted in placing a waxen image before a fire; as the wax melted, the body of the victim wasted away. See Two Gentlemen, note 52; Much Ado, note 107. Compare Webster, Duchess of Malfy, iv. 1, vol. i. pp. 269, 262. The immediate suggestion for these lines was probably the passage in Hollinshed telling of the bewitching of King Duff.

27. Line 32: The WERK sisters.—The F. have weyard, which Theobald changed to weir'd. Hollinshed, in telling the story of Macbeth's encounter, gives some account of "these women," which we have quoted in the note at the beginning of this scene. The word weir'd comes from the Anglo-Saxon weyr'd, fate.
NOTES TO MACBETH.

23. Line 30: Forese.—Fl. have Soria. Holinshed tells us that Macbeth and Banquo were journeying "toward Forese, where the King then lay."

29. Line 66: your BEARDS.—Beards, it seems, were supposed to belong to witches. Stanunton compares Beaumont and Fletcher, Honest Man's Fortune, ii. 1:
And the women that
Come to us, for disguises must wear beards;
And that's, they say, a token of a witch.

Compare Dekker, Honest Whore,1 Part I. iv. 1: "Some women have beards; marry, they are half-witches" (Works, vol. ii. p. 69).

30. Lines 48-50: This triple prophecy is taken almost word for word from Holinshed. See extract at the beginning of this scene.

31. Line 55: Of noble HAVING.—Compare Twelfth
Night, iii. 4. 379: "my assaying is not much;" and Merry Wives, ii. 2. 75: "The gentleman is of no having."

32. Line 71: By Sineil's death I know I am shane of Glamis.—Holinshed gives the name of Macbeth's father as Sinel. It is otherwise given as Finieg, or Finlay, and Sinane; and in Fordun's Scotichronicon, bk. iv. c. 44 (quoted by the Clarendon Press ed.) Macbeth is called "Machabeus filius Finene."

33. Line 81: corporeal.—Shakespeare uses corporeal in several places, never "corporeal." "Incorporeal" occurs in Hamlet, iii. 4. 118; see note on that passage.

34. Lines 84, 85:

Or have we eaten on the SNAKE ROOT
That takes the reason prisoner?

The SNAKE root, or root producing insanity, may mean hemlock, henbane, or some other herb. Steevens quotes Green's Never Too Late, 1618: "You have eaten of the roots of hemlock, that makes men's eyes consort strange objects;" and Douce cites a lines from Barbon's De Proprietatibus Rerum, lib. xvii. ch. 87: Henbane . . . is called SNAKE, mad, for the use thereof is perilous; for if be eat or dranke, it breedeth madness, or slow lykenesse of slopee. Therefore this heare is called commonly Mirilidium, for it taketh away wit and reason.

35. Line 96: Nothing AFEARD.—Afeard, now a vulgar ism of constant occurrence among the lower classes, was formerly as legitimate a word as afraid. See I. 7. 30, and
v. i. 42, below. Coles, in his Latin Dictionary, renders afeard by "passidus, timbidus."

36. Lines 97, 98:

As thick as HAIL

Fl. have

Came post with post.

As thick as Tile

Can post with post.

The reading in the text, now generally accepted, is Rowe's emendation. As thick as tile has not been without its

1 This play, on the authority of Henulow, was the joint work of Dekker and Middleton, and will be found in Dyce's Middleton's Works, vol. iii., where it is divided into acts and scenes. In the edition of Dekker's works it is not so divided.

406 defenders, who consider thick to mean fast, and tale to be used in the sense of "the tale of bricks," Exodus v. 18.
and the expression thus to mean that the men arrived as fast as they could be told. The expression seems very awkward, and is most unlikely to have been used.

37. Line 106: In which ADDITION, hail.—Addition is a technical term for title. See Tullius and Cresiada, note 22.

38. Line 118: mine.—Compare I. Henry IV. ii. 3. 98: "To mine his enterprise;" and Henry V. ii. 4. 7:
To mine and new repair our town of war.

2. 322: "That confirms it home;" Measure for Measure,
iv. 3. 148; All's Well, v. 3. 4; Tempest, v. 1. 71.

40. Line 125: Whose horrid image doth unfix my hair.
—Compare II. Henry VI. iii. 2. 318:
Mine hair be for's end, as one distract;
and Hamlet, iii. 4. 121, 122:
Your bedded hair, like life in excrementa,
Starts up and stands on end.

41. Line 130: my SKATED heart.—Compare Milton,
Paradise Lost, vi. 644:
From their foundations loosening to and fro
They pluck'd the seated hills.

42. Line 137: Present Fears; i.e. objects of fear, as in Midsummer Night's Dream, v. 1. 31, 22:
Or in the night, imagining some fear,
How easy is a bush suppos'd a bear!

43. Line 140: my SINGLE state of man.—"Macbeth means his simple condition of human nature" (Singer).
"Single" here bears the sense of weak; my feeble government (or body politic) of man (Stuunton). "Man is compared to a kingdom or state, which may be described as single, when all faculties are at one, or act in union, undisturbed by conflicting emotions" (Clarendon Press ed.). Compare Julius Cesar, i. 1. 83-86.—Function, later in this line, means "the active faculties." Compare Othello, ii. 3. 854.

44. Line 147: Time and the hour runs through the rouest day.—Time and the hour seems to be a proverbial expression, meaning Time and opportunity. Dyce quotes Michelangelo, Sonnet xii:
Fermat in un momento il tempo è fero.

45. Line 148: Worthy Macbeth, we stay upon your leisure.
—Compare All's Well, iii. 5. 48:
I thank you, and will stay upon your leisure.

46. Line 149: Give me my favour.—Compare Tempest,
iv. 1. 285:
Good my lord, give me thy favour still.

ACT I. SCENE 4.

47. Line 1: Are.—This is the reading of F. 2. F. 1 has Or.

48. Lines 26, 27:

Which do but what they should by doing every thing
Safe toward your loss and honour.
Safe, as the Clarendon Press ed. note, is still used provincially for "sure, certain." Compare such a phrase as.
"He's safe to do that." Schmidt queries: "Everything that is sure to show you love and honour! Or everything consistent with the love and honour we bear you? An expression undoubtedly strangled and obscure on purpose."

40. Lines 37-39:

We will establish our estate upon Our eldest, Malcolm; whom we name hereafter The Prince of Cumberland.

This enactment of Duncan, which of course destroyed Macbeth's chance of succession, is given in Hollinshed, who also notes its effect upon the mind and plans of Macbeth. "But shortly after it chanced that King Duncan having two sons by his wife which was the daughter of Syward Earl of Northumberland, he made the elder of them clepe'd 1 Malcolm prince of Cumberland, as it were thereby to appoint him his successor in the kingdom, immediately after his decease."

"Macbeth sore troubled herewith, for that he saw by this means his hope sore hindered, (where by the old lawes of the realme, the ordinance was, that if he that should succeede were not of able age to take the charge upon himselfe, he that was nexte of blood vnto him, should be admitted) he begane to take counsel how he might usurpe the kingdom by force, hauing a tuste quarrell so to do (as he looks the mater,) for that Duncan did what in him lay to deprive him of all maner of title and clayne, whiche he mighte in tyme to come, pretendte vnto the crowne." (Reprint, vol. v. p. 290).

50. Line 45: I'll be myselfe the harbingers.—Harbingers is used here in the technical sense, not merely with the general meaning of forerunner. The Harbingers, say the Clarendon Press edd., was "an officer of the royal household, whose duty it was to ride in advance of the king and procure lodgings for him and his attendants on their arrival at any place."

ACT I. SCENE 5.

51. Line 6: missions; i.e. messengers.—The word is used again by Shakespeare in Antony and Cleopatra, ii. 2. 72-74:

you
Did pocket up my letters, and with taunts
Did give my missions out of audience.

All-hail'd. Florio translates salutare, "to salute, to greet, to hail."

52. Lines 23-26:

thou'st have, great Glamis,
That which cries "Thus thou must do, if thou have it;"
And that which rather thou dost fear to do
Than wishest should be undone.

In L. 1 this passage is printed thus:

Though'st have, great Glamys, that which cries,
Thus thou must doe, if thou have it;
And that which rather thou dost fear to doe,
Then wishest should be undone.

Modern editors print the passage after cries in inverted commas, or in italics, partly or wholly; some putting the second quotation mark after have it, and some at the end of the sentence after undone. It is very difficult to decide which is the better arrangement of these two. The first That which must refer to the crown, which is supposed to say to Macbeth: "Thus thou must do, if thou wouldst have it." Johnson, who is followed by some editors, altered it to us. If the whole passage is included in inverted commas, then the second That which must be governed by the do in the line above.

As to the phrase if thou have it, we should doubtless rather expect "if you would have it," but Shakespeare might well seek to avoid too many woulds and shoulds in the sentence; and, taking if thou have it to equal "if thou doest have it," the omission of the auxiliary verb adds to the force of the passage; the use of the present tense makes more real the fact of possession, anticipating, as it were, the steps that are to lead to it. If we are to suppose lines 25, 26 to be Lady Macbeth's own comment, and not part of the supposed cry of the half-personified crown, then the meaning of them will be clear, namely, "What thou must do to attain thy end is That which rather thou dost fear to do," &c., and perhaps the simplest emendation which has been proposed is "And that's what" instead of And that which. It seems better, on the whole, not to include lines 25, 26 between inverted commas. Indeed the Folio is perhaps right in printing the passage without any at all, and with no italics; as the personification of the crown is so imperfectly carried out. Very probably there may have been some corruption in the text through the occurrence of the two words That which close together. By a very slight alteration we might make the passage perfectly clear, if we read:

Thus thou must do if thou have it

An act which rather thou dost fear to do, &c. — F. A. M.

53. Lines 26, 27:

His thee hither,
That I may pour my spirits in thine ear.

Compare Hollinshed: "The woordes of the three weird sisters also, (of whom before ye have heard) greatly encouraged him hereunto, but specially his wife lay sore upon him to attempt the thing, as she that was very ambitious brenning in unquenchable desire to bear the name of a Queene" (vol. v. p. 290).

54. Line 30: fates and metaphysical aid.—The word metaphysical, used by Shakespeare only here, means supernatural. Minshew has "Metaphysica, things supernaturall, the metaphysics." S. Walker quotes Ford, The Broken Heart, i. iii. (ed. Dyce, vol. i. 923):

The metaphysica are but speculations
Of the celestial bodies.

55. Line 34: Would have inform'd.—Inform'd is here used absolutely; or perhaps we should rather say elliptically, me being understood. In L. 1. 48 below inform'd is used absolutely, but in a somewhat different sense, in Macbeth's soliloquy, where it means "takes form." The Clarendon Press edd. seem to think that the sense of the word in the two passages is the same. The word inform is used without object of the person in Richard II. i. 1. 242, and Coriolanus, i. 6. 42.

56. Line 43: top-full.—Top-full, full to the brim, is used by Shakespeare again in King John, iii. 4. 180:

Now that their souls are topfull of offence.
NOTES TO MACBETH.

57. Line 45: Stop up the access and passage to REMORSE.
   —Remorse here means compunction, pity, but the "ayenbitle of inykt." The meaning is very frequent in Shakespeare. Compare Measure for Measure, v. 1. 100:
   "My sisterly remorse confutes mine honour.

58. Line 45: The effect and it. —So F. 3; F. 1, F. 2 have hit.

59. Line 50: Sightless substances. —Compare Measure for Measure, iii. 1. 154:
   "To be imprison'd in the viciou's winds;
   i.e. the invisible winds, as here is meant the invisible forms.

60. Line 54: Nor heaven peep through the BLANKET of the dark. —Steevens quotes Drayton, Mortimerados, 1598:
   "The sullen night in mistie sugge is wrappe'd;
which appears in the later version in the Barons' Wars,
   bk. iii. l. 129:
   "The sullen night had her black curtains spread.

61. Line 55: This ignorant present, and I feel now. — Perhaps a word has dropped out. Pope read "present time," and Hunter suggested "en now.

62. Lines 64, 65:
   *to beguile the time,
   Look like the time.*
   The Clarendon Press edd. quote Richard III. v. 3. 91, 92:
   "I, as I may,—that which I would I cannot,—
   With best advantage will decease the time;

i.e.
   i.e. delude observers. Steevens quotes Daniel, Civil Wars, bk. viii. l. 709:
   "He draws a Transeer twixt his greuces:
Lacks like the time, his eye made not report
Of what he felt within.

ACT I. SCENE 6.

63. Line 4: The temple-haunting MANTLET. —This is Rowe's emendation of the Barret of Fl. Compare Merchant of Venice, ii. 9. 23, 29:
   *like the mantle,
Builds in the weather on the outward wall.

Hunter quotes Braithwaite's Survey of History, 1638: "As the marle will not build but In fair houses, so this man will not live but in the ruins of honour." See Merchant of Venice, note 190.

64. Line 5: mansioery. —Fl. have mansioery, which Theobald changed to mansioery, a word which is not found elsewhere.

65. Line 9: Where they most breed and haunt. —Most is Rowe's correction of the missp of Fl.:

66. Line 13: God 'ld.—God 'ld, a common contraction of God yield (i.e. reward), is used by Shakespeare in
   As You Like It, iii. 2, 76: "God 'ld you for your last company," again in v. 4. 56: "God 'ld you, sir," and in Hamlet, iv. 5. 41. In Antony and Cleopatra, iv. 2. 33, it is used in its uncontracted form: "the gods yield you for a".
   Steevens quotes a similar use of the expression in the metrical romance of Guy of Warwick. It was often spelt God 'ld, as in Sir John Oldcastle, passim. See quotations in Nares, sub voc.

67. Line 16: poor and SINGLE business. —Compare Tem-post, i. 2. 482: "A single thing, as I am."

68. Line 22: To be his FÜLVERtor.—The Clarendon Press
   edd. quote Cotgrave: "Fülyervor: m. a provider, a peruyor," and add: "He was sent before to provide food for the king and suite as the harbinger provided lodging."

70. Line 25: in compt.—This is the usual reading for the passage in Timon of Athens, ii. 1. 35, which the Fl.
   obviously distort. Compt is used in All"s Well, v. 3. 57,
   and Othello, v. 2. 273.

ACT I. SCENE 7.

71. Stage-direction: Enter . . . a Sewer.—Boyer, in his French Dictionary, has "Sewer. A Gentleman Sewer (or Carver), Un Euyger tranchant." The name was generally applied to the head steward who directed the placing of the dishes on the table. The office at court (perhaps equivalent to cup-bearer) was anything but a menial.
   Thomas Carew is described on the title-page of his poems as Sewer to Charles I. The word is variously derived from essuyer and escuyer.

72. Lines 1-3:
   *If it were done when 't is done, then 't were well.
'T were done quickly if 't assassination
Could trammel up the consequence.*
   In F. 1 the passage is punctuated thus:
   If it were done, when its done, then 't were well,
   It were done quickly: If th' Assassination
Could trammel vp the Consequence.

This passage has caused much discussion. We may reject at once the unnecessarily commonplace interpretation of the first part of the speech "If it should be done at all when do it, it would be well to do it quickly." There can be no doubt that the first done here has the sense which it often has in Shakespeare of "finished," "ended once for all." We here follow Grant White and an anonymous writer in the Boston Review, quoted by Furness(Appendix to vol. on Macbeth, pp. 441-443), in putting a full stop after well and joining It were done quickly to the next sentence. Kembel (ed. 1805) read the passage thus; and so does Mr. Irving. The only point on which I am doubtful is whether It were done quickly should form part of the same sentence as the rest of line 3 and the following one (line 4).
Let us look at the passage in F. 1 and see whether the punctuation there will help us. It certainly seems to me that it is difficult to get over the fact of the colon after quickly, and of If being printed with a capital letter.
Both these facts seem to leave no doubt that the author's intention was that there should be a decided pause after quickly; and I would venture to suggest that the passage should be read thus:
   If it were done when 't is done, then 't were well:
   It were done quickly: if the assassination

408
the speaker pausing slightly after the first done (I take it that the comma in F. 1 is meant to indicate this); the next sentence It were done quickly stands by itself, and is equivalent to "In that case I should do it quickly, without hesitation." This arrangement seems to me, while not disregarding the punctuation of the Folio, at the same time to preserve what I may call the meditative aspect of the speech, which is somewhat lessened by running the words It were done quickly into either the sentence before or the sentence after it. — F. A. M.

73. Lines 6, 7:
But here, upon this bank and SHOAL of time,
We'd JUMP the life to come.
Shoal is Theobald's emendation; F. read school. Jump means hazard, as in Cymbeline, v. 4. 188: "jump the after inquiry on your own peril." See also Coriolanus, ill. 1. 154. Jump is sometimes used (like skip) for pass over without notice: so here: "We would pass over (and so risk) the thought of the future life."

74. Line 11: ingredients.—"The Folio, both here and lv. 1. 84, have ingredients, and it is not unlikely that Shakespeare so wrote the word, using it in the sense of 'compound,' 'mixture'" (Clarendon Press edd.).

75. Lines 22, 23:
heaven's CHERUBIN here'd
Upon the SIGHTLESS couriers of the air.
Malone quotes the Prayer-Book Version of Psalm xviii. 10: "He rode upon the cherubins and did fly; he came flying upon the wings of the wind." Many editors follow Jennens in reading cherubim. Sightless, as in i. 5. 50, means invisible.

76. Line 23: That tears shall drown the wind.—Compare Troilus and Cressida, lv. 4. 55:
Where are my tears? rain, to lay this wind.

77. Lines 27, 28:
Vaulting ambition, which o'erreaps itself,
And falls on the other.
In Furness' New Variorum Ed. may be read two or three pages (pp. 73-76) of contradictory comment on this passage. Hamner's addition of side makes decidedly easier sense and metre alike in the most perplexing part of the puzzle. But I am inclined to think that Steevens is right in holding that Shakespeare, having used the word sides two lines above, would not have written side here. I think, too, that side was meant to be understood, and that Macbeth is supposed to connect the word he has just used with the word he now has in his mind. The break in the metre comes very naturally at the entrance of Lady Macbeth.

78. Lines 35, 36:
Was the hope drunk
Wherein you dress'd yourself? hath it slept since?
Compare King John, lv. 2. 118, 117:
O, where hath our intelligence been drunk!
Where hath it slept?

79. Line 45: Like the poor cat i' th' adage.—"Catus amat piscas, sed non vult tingere plantas;" or, as Heywood gives it (Proverbs, 1563): "The cat would eate fysh, and would not wet her feete."

80. Lines 46, 47:
I dare do all that may become a man;
Who dares do more is none.
F. read "no more;" the emendation, as sure a one as was ever made, is due to Rowe. Compare Measure for Measure, ii. 4. 184, 185:
Be that you are,
That is a woman; if you be more, you're none.

81. Line 47: What beast was't, then, &c.—The Collier MS.'s emendation, beast, for the admirably appropriate beast of the F., is surely one of the unhappiest efforts of the respected Corrector. Macbeth has just said that one who would do more than becomes a man is none. "What beast was't, then," retorts his wife, "that broke the enterprise to me?"

82. Line 59:
Macb. If we should fall—
Lady M. We fail.
These two words of Lady Macbeth We fail are capable, as Mrs. Siddons showed, of three separate and distinct interpretations. In F. 1 there is a note of interrogation after We fail, in which case the actress can only speak the words as if scornfully asking the question; or, putting a note of exclamation after the words, she may then treat them as a contemptuous interjection; or with simply a full stop after fail—which is, perhaps, the preferable reading,—the words will mean "We fail, and there's an end of it." Some commentators object to Lady Macbeth admitting even the possibility of failure in the then unsettled state of her husband's resolution. But the admission is instantly qualified:
But screw your courage to the sticking-place,
And we'll not fall;
his meaning being, "You are not alone in this business; you and I are to carry it out. I am not afraid of doing my part; it is for you to screw your courage up to the same point of resolution as mine, and failure is impossible." Admitting this interpretation, Lady Macbeth should emphasize your. She might, if she prefers to speak the words We fail as a contemptuous exclamation, also emphasize We; giving thereby to the words the meaning "You forget I am with you; alone you might fail, but together we cannot fail." — F. A. M.

83. Line 60: But screw your courage to the sticking-place.—A metaphor perhaps taken from "from the screwing-up the chords of string-instruments to their proper degree of tension, when the peg remains fast in its sticking-place, i.e. in the place from which it is not to move" (Steevens). Compare Twelfth Night, lv. 1. 125, 126:
And that I partly know the instrument
That screws me from my true place in your favour;
and see also Coriolanus, i. 8. 11, and Troilus and Cressida, ill. 3. 22-25.

84. Line 64: wassail.—Wassail comes from the Anglo-Saxon wæs hael, "be of health." Singer quotes Bullokcr's Exposition, 1618: "Wassail, a term usual heretofore for quaffing and carousing."

85. Line 64: concurs; i.e. the Latin concursus, to over-power, as in lv. 3. 142 below.
39. Line 67: limbeck.—This is a corrupt form of the word alembic, a still. The Clarendon Press ed. quote Fairfax, Tasso, bk. iv. st. 75:

This streaming nectar fall,
Still through the limbeck of her diamond eyes.

37. Line 72: quaff.—This word, meaning murder, is not met with elsewhere, though man-quaff refers to me in II. Henry IV. ii. 1. 58. Quaff and kill are both from the same root, the Anglo-Saxon cewill. Nares quotes two examples of quaff as a verb, in which form it was more common.

38. Lines 80, 81:

I am settled, and bend up
Each corporal agent to this terrible feat.

The metaphor in bend up is from the stringing of a bow. The same figure is used in Henry V. iii. 1. 16, 17:

Hold hard the breath and bend up every spirit
To his full height.

ACT II. SCENE 1.

39. Line 5: Their candles are all out.—So in Romeo and Juliet, iii. 5. 9: "Night's candles are burnt out." Shakespeare also compares the stars to candles in the Merchant of Venice, v. 1. 220:

For, by these blessed candles of the night;
And Sonnet xxi. 12:

As those gold candles fix'd in heaven's air.

40. Line 14: Sent forth great largess to your OFFICES.—Rowe took offices to be a misprint for olloros, and he has been followed by many editors. Steevens, however, seems to have been right in saying that "Offices are the rooms appropriated to servants and culinary purposes." Compare Richard II. i. 2. 68, and see note 36 of that play.

41. Lines 15-17:

This diamond he gives thee a wife within,
By the name of most kind hostess; and SHUT UP
In measureless content.

In Fr. the passage is printed thus:

This Diamond he gives thee a wife within,
By the name of most kind Hostess,
And shut up in measureless content.

Macbeth's first words in the following speech, Being unprepar'd, form a broken line by themselves. I much prefer the arrangement of the Folio, and do not know what induced commentators at first to meddle with it at all. The difficulty here is as to the exact meaning of and shut up. Some hold that it means "and concluded," i.e. the message; examples of the use of the word in this sense are plentiful, e.g. in Spenser's Fairy Queen, bk. iv. c. ix. st. 15: "shut up all in friendly love." Others take it to mean that the king, as Boswell expresses it, was "enclosed in content;" and he quotes a passage from Barrow's Sermons, 1688 (vol. ii. p. 231): "Hence is a man shut up in an irksome bondage of spirit." Line 17, as it stands in F. 1, wants a syllable, which F. 2 supplied by printing "And shut up;" explained thus by Hunter: "Undoubtedly... shut up "the jewel in its case." This is practical, but scarcely poetical. If the missing syllable is to be supplied at all—and it is really needless to instance omissions by Shakespeare of the auxiliary verb—I would propose "And is shut up," taking Boswell's explanation of the words. We must remember that Duncan has retired to rest, and the sentence is really equivalent to "has retired to rest immeasurably contented with his reception."

And shut up in measureless content.

35. Lines 25: If you shall please to my consent.—Schmidt takes consent here to mean "vote, voice, counsel;" Steevens takes it (more reasonably, as I think) in the force of the Latin consentus, or agreement together in a party, quoting II. Henry IV. v. 1. 78: "they flock together in consent (i.e. in a party), like so many wild geese." Taking consent in this sense, the meaning of the passage would be: "If you adhere to my party, your doing so shall make honour for you when the result is attained." See Furness, New Variorum, pp. 67, 68, for enough conjectures and contradictory explanations.

36. Line 46: And on thy blade and DUDGEMON GOUTS of blood.—The dudgemon means the handle of a dagger. The word was used of handles made of box. Garrick, Herball, 1597, p. 1225, says: "Turners and cutters, if I mistake not the matter, do call this woode (the root of the box-tree) dudgemon, whence they make dudgemon hafted daggers." The Clarendon Press ed. quote Cotgrave: "Dague à roilles. A Scottish dagger; or Dugemon haft dagger." (Gout, the anglicized form of Fr. goutte, is only used by Shakespeare in this passage in its original sense: but gout, the disease, which occurs four or five times in Shakespeare, is supposed to be the same word (see Skene ed Gout)."

38. Line 58: ALARUM'd by his sentinel, the wolf.—"Alarum is again used as a verb in Lear, i. 1. 55: "'Alarum' is formed from the French alarmer, Italian alarmero, a new syllable being introduced between the two liquids. The original word was doubtless Italian, "farmane" (Clarendon Press ed.)

39. Line 55: With Tarquin's ravishing STRIDES—PI read sides. The very happy emendation in the text, followed by most editors, is Pope's. It has been baselessly objected that neither a ravisher nor a ghost would advance with strides, which, says Knight, "does not convey the notion of stealthy and silent movement." But the word is used in just this sense in Richard II. i. 3. 208; and in The Rape of Lucrece, line 365, Shakespeare had already described Tarquin as stalking into the chamber. Grant White well says, "Pope's emendation will seem very happy to every cautious person who has stepped through a sick chamber, or any apartment in which there were sleepers whom he did not wish to awaken, and who remembers how he did it."

40. Line 58: Thou sure and firm-set earth.—Sure was first introduced into the text by Capell, upon the conjecture of Pope. F. 1 has secure. Sure might very likely, as Collier observes, have been written in the MS. which offers itself easily to a misprint.

41. Line 57: Hear not my steps, which WAY THEY WALK.—This reading is Rowe's; PI have "which they may walk."
NOTES TO MACBETH.

ACT II. Scene 2.

98. Line 58: The very stonesgrave.—An allusion, probably, to Luke xix. 40: "the stones would immediately cry out." [The whole of this magnificent soliloquy is a capital instance of the way in which Shakespeare expresses his stage-directions in the words of his text. The actor here needs no marginal notes; he finds every movement set down in the words which he speaks. One sees the murderer abruptly arrested on his way to the chamber, where his victim lies asleep, by the phantom dagger; one sees him following it with his eyes, which are riveted on it with a questioning but horror-stricken stare; then he endeavours to shut out the vision with his hands, and it vanishes; then he begins again to move amidst the appropriate howls of the wolves heard from the not far distant forest. His legs almost refuse to carry him; with noiseless footfall, with stealthy half-reluctant strides, he creeps to the door of the fatal chamber, whence he is to return a blood-stained murderer.—F. A. M.]

ACT II. Scene 2.

The narrative of Duncan's murder in Holinshed is very brief, as follows: "At length therefore communicating his purposed intent with his trusty friends whom Banquo was the chiefest, vpon confidence of theyr promised ayde, he slew the king at Ennernes, (or as some say at Bogouane, in the v. yeares of his reign)" (vol. v. p. 250): Some of the details of the murder, however, are taken from Holinshed's account, a little previously, of the murder of King Duffe by Donwald. This Donwald was captain of the castle of Forres, where the king "was accustomed to lie most commonly" when he was "in that country." Some relations of his having been implicated in a rebellion, Donwald "made earnest labour and suyte to the king to hane begged theyr pardon, but hauing a playne deniall, he conceyled suche an inwarde mallice towards the king, (though he shewed it not outwards at the first) that the same continued still boyling in his stomake, and ceased not, till through setting on of his wife and in reuenge of such vnthankfulness, he founde means to murder the king within the foresaid Castell of Forres" (vol. v. p. 234). "Donwald thus being the more kindled in wrath by the woordes of his wife, determined to follow byr advisse in the execution of so hauous an acte. Whereupon devising with himselfe for a while, whiche way he might best accomplishe his cursed intention, at length he gate oportunitie and sped his purpose as followeth. It chanced, that the king vpon the day before he purposed to departe forth of the Castell, was long in his oratoire at his prayers, and there continued till it was late in the night, at the last comming forth he called suche aforo him, as had faithfully serued him in pursuite and apprehention of the rebelles, and giving them hartle thankes, he bestowed sundry honorabile giftes amongst them, of the which number Donwald was one, as he that had bene euere accompted a moste faithfull servaunt to the king. At length hauing talked with them a long time, he got him into his pryue chamber, only with two of his chamberlaynes, who hauing brought him to bedde came forth againe, and then fell to banquetting with Donwald and his wife, who had prepared dines delicate dishes, and sundry sorts of drinke for theyr afer suppre or collation, wheret they sat up so long, till they had charged theyr stomakes with suche full gorge, that theyr heads were no sooner got to the pyllow, but a sleepe they were so fast, that a man might haue remoued the chamber ouer them, rather than to haue awaked them out of theyr drunken sleepe. Then Donwald though he abhorred the acie greatly in his harte, yet through instigation of his wife, he called foure of his servaunts vnto him (whome he had made priele to his wicked intent before, and framed to his purpose with large giftes) and now declaring vnto them, after what sorte they should workes the faite, they gladly obeyed his instructions, and speedely going about the murder, they enter the chamber (in which the king lay) a little before cockes crow, where they secreatly cut his throate as he lay sleeping, without any buckling 2 at all" (ut supra, pp. 234, 235). Then, after describing the precautions taken to throw off the scent of the murder, the narrative continues: "Donwald abouthe the time that the murder was a doing, got him amongst them that kepeth the watch, and so continueth in compance with them at the residue of the night. But in the morning when the noyse was reyzed in the kings chamber how the king was slaine, his body conveyued away, and the bed all berayed with bloud, he with the watches ran thither as though he had knowne nothing of the mater, and breaking into the chamber, and finding cakes of bloud in the bed & on the floorbe about the sides of it, he foorth with slew the chamberlaynes, as glitte of that hauous murder, and then like a madde man running to and fro, he ran sacketh every corner within the castell, as though it had bene to haue seene if he might haue founde either the body or any of ye murthers hid in any pryue place: but at length comming to the posterne gate, & finding it open, he bured the chamberlaynes whom he had slaine with at the fault, they hauing the keyes of the gates commited to their keeping at the night, and therefore it could not be otherwise (sayd he) but that they were of counsel in the committin of that moste detestable murder. Finally suche was his own earnest diligences in the inquisition and triall of the offendours herelne, that some of the Lordes began to mislike the mater, and to smell forth shrewed tokens, that he should not be altogether cleare himselfe: but for so much as they was in that country, where hee had the whole rule, what by reason of his frendes and authoritie togethers, they doubted to vter what they thought till time and place should better serue thereunto, and hereupon got them away every man to his home" (ut supra, p. 236).

99. Lines 3, 4:

the fatal BELLMAN,
Which gives the stern'gest good-night.

The Clarendon Press edd. compare Webster, The Duchess of Malfy, lv. 2-4:

I am the common bellman,
That usually is sent to condemn'd persons
The night before they suffer.

100. Line 6: I have drugg'd their possiets.—Malone quotes Randle Holmes, Academy of Armoury, 1688, bk.

[2] Literally, an after-supper; a late meal after the usual supper.
NOTES TO MACBETH.

ACT II. Scene 2.

iii. p. 84: "Posset is hot milk poured on ale or sack, having sugar, grated blaket, and eggs, with other ingredients boiled in it, which goes all to a curd." It was customary to take a posset immediately before going to bed. There is an allusion to it in II. 1. 31.

101. Line 16: I heard the owl scream and the crickets cry.—Compare Ovid, Metamorphoses, x. 452, 453, where, just as the fated woman is entering the abhorred chamber, the omen

Funereus abobo letali carmine fect;
thus translated by Sandys:

The funeral Owle thrice rent
The ayre with ominous shrieker.

—Edin. 1632, p. 347.

George Meredith, in Margaret's Bridal-Eve, Part IV., has a wonderfully effective use of the same figure, when the bride is going to tell her bridegroom the secret of her shame:

She heard from the woods the howling owl.

—Modern Love, &c., 1859, p. 140.

102. Lines 25, 26:

Methought I heard a voice cry "Sleep no more! Macbeth does murder sleep,"—the innocent sleep, &c.

This arrangement is Johnson's, and seems greatly preferable to that of Hamner, who gave all the lines from "sleep" down to "feast" to the voice.

103. Line 37: Sleep that knits up the ravell'd sateen of care.—Sh. print sleeve, which was probably intended to mean the same as sleeve. The word means the soft, raw, untwisted silk; it is sometimes known as floss-silk. The Clarendon Press edd. quote Florio: "Batista, any kind of sateen or raw silex."

104. Lines 56, 57:

I'll gild the faces of the grooms withal;
For it must seem their guilt.

Gild was often employed to represent smearing with blood. Compare ii. 3. 118: "golden blood;" and King John, li. 1. 216. A similar pun on guilt and gilt occurs in II. Henry IV. iv. 5. 129:

England shall double gilt his treble guilt.

105. Lines 62, 63:

The multitudinous seas incarnadine,
Making the green-one red.

Incarnadine (from the Italian incarnadino, flesh colour) is used here in the sense of to dye red; the only example of the word as a verb up to the time of Shakespeare. Carew uses it in his Obequies to the Lady Anne Hay, but no doubt with Shakespeare in mind. In the first three Sh. the second line is printed: Making the Greene one, Red," a slight and obvious printers' error in punctuation which some editors have actually had the incredible denseness to defend and even adopt! The three and more pages on these two lines in the Variorum Shakespeare are, so far as I know, quite the most amusing reading in any of those volumes. Whether waters might admit of discoloration; whether the allusion was not rather to the fishes, whose hue, however, "could suffer no change from the tint of blood;" corrective remarks concerning some "ingenious author" who had suggested that "Making the green-one red" might really be the right reading—a construction quite "unexampled;" these, and other such divagations of the learned fancy, will be found in those exhilarating pages. [It is evident, from the use of the capital letters to both Greene and Red in Pl., that the interpretation given above is the right one.—F. A. M.]

ACT II. Scene 3.

108. Lines 1-47.—The authenticity of this scene, from lines 1-47, the one humorous passage in the play, has been vigorously denied and vigorously upheld. Coleridge (Notes and Lectures upon Shakespeare, 1849, vol. i. p. 249) says: "This low soliloquy of the Porter, and his few speeches afterwards, I believe to have been written for the mob by some other hand, perhaps with Shakespeare's consent; and that, finding it take, he, with the remaining ink of a pen otherwise employed, just interpolated the words, 'I'll devil-porter it no further: I had thought to have let in some of all professions, that go the primrose way to the everlasting bonfire.' Of the rest not one syllable has the ever-present being of Shakespeare."

Against this emphatic declaration of a great poet may be set the emphatic declaration, on the opposite side, of another great poet—Mr. Browning, who, in a letter printed in the New Shakespeare Society's Transactions, affirms his belief that the passage must have come from the hand of Shakespeare. For my part, I can see no particular reason to doubt that it is Shakespeare's, while I entirely fail to see that it is a very brilliant specimen of his humour, or at all above the capacity of Middleton, to whom some would assign it. In comparison with the Grave-digger's scene in Hamlet, to which the enthusiastic advocates of the Porter's scene would compare it, the humour here is, to my mind at least, of very middling quality. But I am far from being able to see that "not one syllable has the ever-present being of Shakespeare."

On the contrary, I think it is a roughly-written passage introduced by Shakespeare partly for the sake of dramatic contrast, partly to provide a part for the comic actor or low comedian, the clown. [After again seeing the play acted, it is evident that some such scene is necessary here in order to give time for Macbeth and Lady Macbeth to get rid of all traces of the murder from their hands, and for the former to recover his self-possession. Davenant, who makes Macduff and Lady Macduff both guests of Macbeth at this time, introduces a short scene between Lennox and Macduff, in which occur the following exquisite lines:

Mac. Raising this morning early, I went to look out of my Window, and I could scarce see farther than my breath;
The darkness of the night brought but few objects
To our eyes, but many to our ears.

—Davenant's Works, vol. v. p. 34.

This is "po' try" with a vengeance! I think most persons will prefer the Porter's prose, coarse though it be.—F. A. M.]

107. Line 2: he should have old turning the key.—Compare Merchant of Venice, iv. 2. 15: "We shall have old swearing," for a similar use of old as an emphatic expletive. In Arden of Faversham, ii. 2. p. 84 (Bullen's reprint) we have "For heere will be old physician when the press comes forth of Paulus."
ACT II. Scene 3.

NOTES TO MACBETH.

109. Line 16: A French hose. —Stubbes, in his Anatomie of Abuses, thus describes the French hose: “The French-Hose are of two divers making, for the common French-Hose (as they list to call them) contayneth length, breadth, and sidines sufficient, and is made very round. The other contayneth neither length, breadth nor sidines (being not past a quarter of a yard side), whereof some be paned, cut and drawne out with costly ornamentes, with Canions annexed reaching down beneath their knees.” (New Shak. Soc. Reprint, p. 56). Shakespeare refers to French hose in Henry V. iii. 7. 56; and in The Merchant of Venice, i. 2. 80, Portia says: “I think he bought . . . his round hose in France.”

110. Lines 21, 22: the prinnose way to the everlasting boynder. —Compare Hamlet, i. 3. 90: “the prinnose path of dalliance,” and All’s Well, iv. 5. 67: “they’ll be for the flower way that leads to the broad gate and the great fire.”

111. Line 27: the second cooke. —See Romeo and Juliet, iv. 5. 4: “the second cooke hath crow’d.”

112. Line 63: combustion. —Compare Henry VIII. v. 4. 51: “kindling such a combustion in the state.” Cotgrave has “Combustion: f. A combustion, burning, or consuming fire; also, a tumult; and hence Enforcer en combustion ase. To make a stirre, to raise an uproar, to keep an old coyle against.”

113. Lines 73-74: Most sacrilegious murder hath broke ope The Lord’s anointed temple, and stole thence The life o’ the building!

“There is a confusion of metaphor here. Reference is made in the same clause to 1 Samuel xxiv. 10, ‘I will not put forth mine hand against my lord, for he is the Lord’s anointed;’ and to 2 Corinthians xi. 16, ‘For ye are the temple of the living God’” (Clarendon Press ed.).

114. Line 81: Shake off this downy sleep, death’s counterfeit. —Compare Midsummer Night’s Dream, iii. 2. 364: “death-counterfeiting sleep.”

115. Line 85: Ring the bell. —Theobald considered this to be a mere stage-direction that had crept into the text from the prompter’s book; and a number of very respectable editors have followed him in omitting it. But it seems to me that the reiteration of the order is a very natural one, and the break in the metre not more serious than many others in the play.

116. Lines 96, 97: Had I but died an hour before this chance, I had liv’d a blessed time.

Compare Winter’s Tale, iv. 4. 472, 473: If I might die within this hour, I have liv’d To die when I desire

ACT II. Scene 4.

117. Line 107: Their hands and faces were all bade’d with blood. —Compare II. Henry VI. iii. 2. 200: “murder’s crimson badge.”

118. Line 118: His sister skin lade d with his golden blood. —See note 104 above for the likening of blood to gold (compare the red gold of old ballads). Johnson was certainly right in taking these curiously artificial metaphors as intended to convey a sense of Macbeth’s dissimulation — “the studied language of hypocrisy.”

119. Lines 121, 122: their daggers

UNMANNERLY BREECH’d with gore.

Farmer quotes from the 6th Dialogue of Erondelle’s French Garden, 1605: “Boy, go fetch your master’s silver-hatched daggers, you have not brushed their breeches, bring the brushes,” &c. Douce, on the other side, perhaps preferably, takes the more familiar breeches to be meant, and that “the expression, though in itself something unmannerly, simply means covered as with breeches.” The Clarendon Press ed. compare Twelfth Night, iii. 4. 274: “strip your sword stark naked.”

120. Lines 127, 128: What should be spoken here, where our fate, HID IN AN AUGER-HOLE, may rush, and seize us? Scott, Discoveries of Witchcraft, speaking of the pretended powers of witches, mentions among other difficult feats, “They can go in and out at auger holes” (book i. chap. 4, Reprint, p. 8). The meaning here is that our fate may be concealed in the smallest hole or cranny.

ACT II. SCENE 4.

With the portents described in this scene compare Holinshed’s description of those which followed the murder of King Duffe: “For the space of vj. moneths together after this haynous murder thus committed, there appeared no summe by day, nor Moone by night in any partes of the realme, but still was the skie covered with continual clowdes, and sometimes suche outragious winde arrose with lightnings and tempestes, that the people were in great feares of present destruction” (vol. v. p. 235). And again further on: “Monstrous sights also that were seene within the Scottishe kynghome that yeare were these, horses in Lothian being of singular beautie and swiftnesse, did eate their owne flesh, & would in no wise taste any other meete. In Angus there was a gentlewoman brought forth a child without eyes, nose, hands, or foote. There was a Sparrowe also strangled by an Owle” (ut supra, p. 237).

121. Line 7: And yet dark night strangles the travelling lamp. —F. 1, F. 2 have travelling, F. 3, F. 4 travelling, as most editors now print. It is possible there may be an allusion to both meanings—“struggling with difficulty onward.” What are now two distinct words of different spelling were formerly used interchangeably, as were, e.g. “metal” and “mettle.”

122. Line 8: It’s night’s PREDOMINANCE. —Predominance is an astrological term, referring to the planets whose power is at its height. Compare Lear, i. 2. 134.
123. Line 12: A falcon, towering in her pride of place.—Both towering and place are technical terms in falconry. Place means "the greatest elevation which a bird of prey attains in its flight" (Griffith). Compare Massinger, The Guardian, l. 11:

```
Then, for an evening flight,
A tiercel gentle, which I call, my masters,
As he were sent a messenger to the moon,
In such a place does, as he seems to say,
See me, or see me not! the partridge sprung,
He makes his stoop. —Works, p. 460, vol. i.
```

124. Line 23: "Ravin up."—"Ravin down" is used in the same sense in Measure for Measure, I. 2. 123. See note on that passage.

125. Lines 21, 22:

```
He is already nam'd, and gone to Scone
To be invested.
```

Scone was called the Royal City of Scone or Soone as early as the first decade of the tenth century after Christ. It was situated a little distance to the north of the town of Perth, and is now called Old Scone; New Scone being a little to the S.E. of it, nearer Perth. The Stone of Destiny was transferred to Scone, from Dunstaffnage in Argyllshire, by Kenneth Macalpine, soon after the foundation of an abbey there in 883. Many of the Scottish kings were crowned on this stone; till Edward I., having conquered Balliol, removed it to Westminster. In a separate stipulation, at the time of the Treaty of Northampton, the stone was to be restored to Scotland; but the restoration was never carried out. Sir Walter Scott tells us that it was originally brought from Ireland by "Fergus the son of Eric, who led the Dalriads to the shores of Argyllshire." It was used at the coronation of the present Queen, the chair of Edward the Confessor being placed upon it; and it is said that at that ceremony some small fragments of the stone were broken off. Charles II. was crowned at Scone, as a compliment perhaps to the Scotch, January 1st, 1651. This was after the defeat of the Scotch Cavaliers by Cromwell at Dunbar, but before the more decisive battle of Worcester.—F. A. M.

126. Line 33: Colme-kill.—The meaning of this word (according to Jameson's Dict. s. v. clove) is the cell or chapel of St. Columba or Colum, who landed on this little island (better known as Iona) in the year 563, in order to preach Christianity. The ruins of the cathedral and monastery which were built on the island may still be seen. All the Scottish kings, from Kenneth III. to Macbeth inclusive, i.e. from 973 to 1040, were buried at Colme-kill.

"To the Highlanders of the present day Iona is known as 'Innian-Druibhnesch' or the Island of the Druids—as 'Il-cholum-chille,' or the Island of Colum, of the Cell, or Cemetery, whence the English word cloomykill is derived" (New Statistical Account of Scotland, 1845, vol. vi. p. 313).

—F. A. M.

ACT III. SCENE 1.

The murder of Banquo, plotted in this scene and the next, and carried out in scene 5, is thus told in Hoffneshed:

"These and the like commendable laws, Macbeth caused to be put as then in use, governing the realms for the space of tenne yeares in equall justice. But this was but a counterfaitse scale of equitie shewed by him, partly against his natural inclination to purchase thereby the favoure of the people. Shortly after, he beganne to shewe what he was, in steede of equitie practising crueltie. For the pricke of conscience (as it chaueneth euere in tyrantie, and suche as alayyns to any asiste by vyrfteous means) caused him euere to feare, least he should be searesed of the same cuppe, as he had ministrd to his predecessour. The woordeis also of the three weird sisters, wold not of his mind, which as they promised him the king-dome, so lykewise did they promise it at the same time, unto the postertiue of Banquo. He willed therefore the same Banquo with his sonne named Fleusance, to come to a supper that he had prepared for them, which was in doede, as he had devised, present death at the handes of certaine murthurers, whome he hyred to execute that doede, appoynting them to meete with the same Banquo and his sonne without the palayce, as they returned to their lodgings, and there to slay them, so that he woulde not hauue his house slaudered, but that in time to come he might cleare himselfe, if any thing were layde to his charge vpon any suspition that might arise.

"It chauened yet, by the benefite of the darke night, that though the father were alaine, the son by the helpe of almightie God reseruing him to better fortune, escaped that daunger: and afterwardes hauing some inclking (by the admonition of some frendes which he had in the courte,) howe his life was sought no lese then his fathers, who was slayne not by chance medley (as by the handling of the mater Makbeth would hauue had it to appeare,) but euon vpon a prepensd 1 devise, whereupon to suoyde further perfyll he fledde into Wales" (Reprint. vol. v. p. 271).

127. Line 10: Sennet sounded.—The Fr. print sennet. The word was variously spelt, and of frequent occurrence, in the stage-directions of old plays. See III. Henry VI. note 66.

128. Line 12: And all-thynge unbeCOMING.—"The adjectives all, each, both, every, other, are sometimes interchanged, and used as pronouns in a manner different from modern usage. In this instance 'all' is used for every" (Abbott, Sh. Grammar, § 12). Elwin quotes the Hymn in the Compline from Henry the Eighth's Primer:

```
O Lord, the maker of all things,
We pray the same in the evening.
```

129. Lines 41-44:

```
Let every man be master of his time
Till seven at night; to make society
The sweeter welcome, we will keep ourself
Till supper-time.
```

The punctuation in the text is Theobald's, and seems very preferable to that of the Fr., which place a comma after night and a colon after welcome.

130. Lines 55-57:

```
and under him
My Genius is rebuk'd, as, it is said,
Mark Antony's was by Caesar.
```

---

1 Preconceived, predetermined.
ACT III. Scene 1.

NOTES TO MACBETH.

ACT III. Scene 2.

Compare Antony and Cleopatra, ii. 3. 18–22:

Therefore, O Antony, stay not by his side;
Thy demon, that’s thy spirit which keeps thee, is Noble, courageous, high, unmatchable.
Where Caesar’s is not; but near him thy angel
Becomes a fear, as being overpowers’d.

This is closely copied from North’s Plutarch (ed. 1681, p. 926, lines 8–10).

131. Line 63: Thence to be wrench’d with an unlined hand.—Compare Winter’s Tale, v. 2. 68: “He was torn to pieces with a bear.” Compare note 129 below.

132. Line 65: fil’d.—This word, meaning defiled, of which it is apparently an abbreviation, is not used elsewhere by Shakespeare. Compare Spenser, Faerie Queene, iii. 1. 62:

She lightly left out of her filèd bedd.

133. Line 70: To make them kings, the seed of Banquo kings!—If you have needes, which some editors adopt. Very many more agree in taking the plural to be a mere error of the press. No similar example has been adduced, except a few confessedly problematical ones from plays whose text is anything but dependable.

134. Line 72: And champion me to the utterance!—This is, fight with me & flourish. Colgrave has “Combatre à outrance.” To fight at sharpore, to fight it out, or to the vittermost; not to spare one another in fighting.” The wood utterance is used again, in the same sense, by Shakespeare in Cymbeline, iii. 1. 73.

135. Line 81: How you were borsne in hand.—See Taming of the Shrew, note 140; Measure for Measure, note 46. Compare also Hamlet, ii. 2. 65–67:

whereas grieved,
That to his sickness, age, and impotence,
Was falsely borsne in hand.

136. Line 88: Are you so gosseled.—Probably an allusion to the precept in the gospel, “Pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you” (Matt. v. 44).

137. Line 110: Have so incendi.—Fi. print hath; the reading is Rowe’s.

138. Line 116: distance.—This word is not elsewhere used by Shakespeare in the sense it here has, “hostility,” “antagonism as of opposing enemies.” The Clarendon Press edd. give an instance of it in Bacon, Essays, xv. 62: “setting them at distance, or at least distrust among themselves.” Coles, Latin Dictionary, has “Distance [discord], dissidium, discordia.”

139. Lines 129–131:

I will advise you where to plant yourselves,
Acquaint you, WITH A PERFECT SPY, O’ THE TIME,
The moment on’t.

We have adopted a very simple emendation, first suggested by Johnson, of a for the, and the punctuation of Collier as said to be given by the Old Corrector. This passage has been made the subject of much discussion by the commentators, but the meaning of it seems to be clear. The difficulty, supposed or real, lies in line 130; but if we take with to mean “by,” “by means of,” as it frequently does in Shakespeare (see line 63 above, and note 131), it is plain that Macbeth refers to his intention to acquaint the two Murderers, by means of one who may be trusted to watch Banquo closely, of the time when to commit the murder; and this interpretation is fully borne out by a passage in the third scene of this act. When the Three Murderers enter, it is evident that the first distrusts the man who has joined them, for he asks, “But who did bid thee join with us?” to which the Second Murderer answers:

He needs not our mistrust; since he delivers
Our offices, and what we have to do,
To the direction just.

This passage evidently means that the Third Murderer has brought them exactly the direction, which Macbeth promised to send them by the perfect spy, o’ the time. The alteration of the to o makes the meaning clearer, though it is possible the right reading may be “By the perfect’s spy.” Compare above, in the letter from her husband read by Lady Macbeth: “I have learn’d by the perfect’s report.”

Steevens proposed to put a full stop after line 129, and to take Acquaint you as = “Acquaint yourselves,” and the perfect spy o’ the time as = “the exact time, the time most favourable to your purposes,” which they were to spy out. Undoubtedly you is frequently used for yourselves, but, on the whole, I think the interpretation given above is the preferable one.—F. A. M.

140. Line 134: To leave no RUBS nor botches in the work.—Compare Richard II. iii. 4. 4, and note 242.

ACT III. Scene 2.

141. Line 13: We have SCOTCH’d the snake, not kill’d it.—Scotch’d is Theobald’s almost universally-accepted emendation of F1’s search’d. Scotch’d occurs again in Coriolanus, iv. 5. 106: “he scotch’d him and notch’d him like a carbonado.” Scotch’d occurs in Antony and Cleopatra, iv. 7. 10, as a substantive of similar meaning to the verb, which means “to cut slightly.”

142. Lines 19, 20:

better to be with the dead,
Whom we, to gain our PEACE, have sent to peace.

This is the reading of F. 1; F. 2, F. 3, F. 4, with a large proportion of modern editors, print place; to my mind a much less impressive and a much less Shakespearean word. [There is no doubt much to be said in favour of the correction made by F. 2, obvious as it is, and perhaps suspiciously simple. Macbeth did not murder Duncan to gain peace, but to gain the throne. If this sentence referred to the murder of Banquo, peace would be the more appropriate word. For the use of place in the sense of a high dignity, we may compare Measure for Measure, li. 4. 92:

Whose credit with the judge, or own great place.

Mr. Irving, it may be mentioned, retains in his acting-edition the reading of F. 1; in favour of which reading it may be said that Macbeth was not only thinking of the murder of Duncan, but also of the two grooms whom he had killed in order to secure his own safety. —F. A. M.]

143. Lines 26–30.—F. 1 prints these lines as in our text, except that in line 28 it has among instead of among, the latter being the correction of F. 2, which, however, in line 29 unnecessarily introduces the word still, reading:

Let your remembrance still apply to Banquo.

There is no need for the insertion of this word, as remembrance was, in Shakespeare’s time, often pronounced as a quadrisyllable. Steevens, in his edition, 1798, who is followed by the Cambridge edd. and others, divided the two imperfect lines (31, 32) thus:

Unsafe the while, that we Must save our honours in these flattering streams.

Malone arranges the passage thus:

Lady M. Come on; gentle my lord,
Seek out your rugged looks; be bright and jovial
Among your guests to-night.

Macb. So shall I, love;
And so, I pray, be you: let your remembrance
Apply to Banquo: present him eminence, both
With eye and tongue; unsafe the while, that we Must save our honours in these flattering streams.

Steevens thought that something had been omitted from the text after the words Unsafe the while, and suggested that Shakespeare might have written:

Unsafe the while it is for me, that we.

I would suggest that while was intended to be connected closely with the words that see, and that line 31 in F7 should have read something like this:

Unsafe, alack we rest the while that we,

the meaning being, not that Macbeth and his wife were unsafe because they had to flatter Banquo, but that they were unsafe in spite of their stooping to that; and therefore there was a stronger motive for his removal; as, while he lived, flatter him as they might, they could never be safe.—F. A. M.

144. Line 38: But in them nature’s copy’s not eternae.—This is very likely an allusion to legal phraseology, though some have supposed nature’s copy to mean man, formed in the image of God. Cowell, in his Interpreter, has “Copie hold (tenura per copias rotuli curiae) is a tenure, for the which the tenant hath nothing to shew, but the copie of the Rolls made by the Steward of his Lord’s court. . . . some copiehold is finite, and some certaine: that which is finiteable, the lord taketh at his pleasure” (First Edn. (1607) sub voce). The word eternae, for eternal, is only used by Shakespeare here, and in Hamlet, ii. 2. 612.

145. Line 42: The shart-borne beetle.—F. 2, F. 4 print shart-born, which some suppose to mean born among shards, or in dung. But in one or two places Shakespeare has linked shart with beetle in a way that leaves no doubt as to the meaning—the scaly wings of the beetle. Compare Antony and Cleopatra, iii. 2. 20:

They are his sharts, and be their beetle;

and Cymbeline, iii. 3. 20: “The sharted beetle.” [The scientific name for the wing-cases is elytra; anyone, who has observed beetles, knows the startling effect when these hard elytra are suddenly opened, and the membranous underwings (which in some beetles are very large in proportion to their body) are suddenly unfolded, and the insect, that was just now walking or running, is borne away in rapid flight. The sharts or elytra remain immovable during flight, but probably help to buoy up the insect while on the wing.—F. A. M.]

146. Lines 46, 47: Come, seeking night,
Scarf up the tender eye of pitiful day.

Seek is a term in falconry, meaning to sew up the eyes of a hawk. Compare Othello, i. 3. 270; iii. 3. 210; and Antony and Cleopatra, iii. 13. 112. Coitgrave has “Silet les yeux. To seek, or to wrap, the eye-lids, (thence also), to hoodwink, blind, keep in darkness, deprive of sight.”

147. Lines 60, 61: Light thickens, and the crow
Makes wing to the rooky wood.

Rocky may be meant for “frequented by rooks” (which to me seems rather the preferable interpretation, so far as sense is concerned), or for “dusky, gloomy,” or “foggy.” The Clarendon Press edd. cite the Promptorium Parvulorum: “Rocky, or mysty. Nebulosus.” [Rocky is given in Grose’s Provincial Glossary as “misty,” and in Bailey as “mysty;” both authorities state it to be a North-country word. It is given in Brockett, but not in the Yorkshire, Westmoreland, or Tyneside Glossaries; and I have always heard rook, not rock or roul, used for “smoke” in the North. Steevens proposes to read “makes wing to rook r’ the wood,” and quotes Henry VI. v. 6. 47: The raven rook’d her on the chimney’s top (see note 333 of that play). Chaucer uses rouches and ruckling in the sense of “to lie close;” and Gower in the Confessio Amantis, bk. iv., has, speaking figuratively of the priests or monks:

And now they ruchen in her nest
And restes as hem liketh best.

Rocky wood may mean here the wood into which the crow went to rook or roost.—F. A. M.]

ACT III. SCENE 3.

148. Line 6: Now spurs the late wanderer space.—Lated, for belated, occurs again in Antony and Cleopatra, iii. 11. 3.

ACT III. SCENE 4.

149. Line 5: Our hostes keeps her state.—The state was a chair of state, placed on a raised platform at the head of the table, and covered with a canopy. Coitgrave has “Daiz, or Daiz. A cloth of Estate, Canopie, or Heauen, that stands over the heads of Princes thrones also, the whole State, or seat of Estate.” Compare Coriolanus, v. 4. 22; Twelfth Night, ii. 5. 50; and I. Henry IV. ii. 4. 415.

150. Line 6: We will require her welcome.—Require, here, as in some other places in Shakespeare, means simply “ask,” not “demand.” Compare Antony and Cleopatra, ill. 12. 12.

151. Line 14: 'Tis better thee without than he within.—The grammar of this line is faulty, however we take it; but the meaning is either “It is better outside thee than inside him,” or “It is better for his blood to be on thy face than for him to be within.”
NOTES TO MACBETH.

153. Line 57: With twenty TRENCHED gashes on his head.
   —Compare Arden of Feverham, iii. 1. (ed. Bullen, p. 42):
   And Machiavel name, a scandal unto mine,
   Is deeply trench'd in my blushing brow.

154. Line 52: We'LL hear ourselves again. —Punctuated as in the text (the punctuation of the Fr.) the meaning may be taken to be, We'll talk with one another again.
   Ourselves again has been understood as the ablative absolute, "when we are ourselves again;" and Dyce rendered the sense certainly easier, but perhaps not better, by punctuating, We'll hear, ourselves, again.

155. Line 41: Were thegra'T'd person of our stage present.
   —Compare Lear, i. 4. 257, where grace is used,
   as here, in the sense of "gracious."

156. Line 55: upon a thought. —Compare I. Henry IV.
   iv. 4. 241: "and with a thought seven of the eleven I paid;"
   i.e. as quick as thought.

157. Line 62: O, these flaws and starts. —Compare
   Hamlet, v. 1. 236, and see note on that passage.

159. Line 73: the time has been. —F. 1 prints times has, which the later Fr. correct into times have, a reading less easily explained as a printer's error, and not so good in sense.

161. Line 93: Those hast no speculation in those eyes.
   —Compare Troilus and Cressida, iii. 8. 109. Singer quotes Bullokar, Expositor, 1616: "Speculation, the inward knowledge, or beholding of a thing."

162. Line 101: the Hyrcan tiger. —Compare III. Henry
   VI. 1. 4. 156: "tigers of Hyrcania;" and Hamlet, ii. 2. 472:
   "the Hyrcanian beast." See Merchant of Venice, note 176.

163. Lines 105, 106:
   If trembling I inhábit, then protest me
   The baby of a girl.

164. Line 111: And overcome us like a summer's cloud.
   —Oversome is used in the sense of "come over," "overshadow." Compare Spenser, Faerie Queen, iii. 7. 4:
   All cover'd with thick woods that quite it oversome.

166. Line 122: It will have blood; they say blood will have blood. —Fr. print:
   It will have blood they say:
   Blood will have blood.

The pointing in the text was first introduced by Whalley. A few editors follow the Fr.; but Johnson (Miscellaneous Observations on Macbeth) is probably right in his interpretation: "Macbeth justly infers that the death of Duncan cannot go unpunished, 'It will have blood! then after a short pause declares it as the general observation of mankind, that murderers cannot escape." I cannot help feeling, however, that, to the ear at least, the reading of the Ff. is more harmonious and more impressive.

167. Line 123: Stones have been known to move, and trees to speak.—Mr. Paton (in Notes and Queries, Nov. 6, 1869) suggested that there was an allusion, in the first clause of this line, to the rocking-stones (one of which was near Glamis Castle), by which it was thought that the Druids tried persons suspected of crimes. In the trees that speak we have, perhaps, an allusion to the story in Virgil of the bleeding tree which revealed to Aeneas the murder of Polydorus (Æneas, bk. iii. ii. 22-48).

168. Line 124: Augurs and understood relations; i.e. soothsayings and knowledge of the secret links of things. Augurs is spelt Augures in Ff. Florio, 1598, has "Augusre, an augure, a soothsaying, . . . a wishing of good hap, a forboding."

169. Line 140: sezn'd.—This word is used, as here, for carefully examined into, in Hamlet, iii. 8. 75: "That would be sezn'd."

170. Line 144: in deed.—Ff. have indeed, as one word. The rectification was made by Theobald.

ACT III. Scene 5.

171. Stage-direction. "Enter the three Witches, meeting Hecate."—Hecate, the "infernal" name of Diana in Roman mythology, was, in the middle ages, generally supposed to be the goddess or mistress of witches. In Scot's Discoveries of Witchcraft (Booke 3, Chap. xvi.), we read that "Certeine generall counsellors, by their decrees, have condemned the confusions and erroneous credulity of witches, to be vaine, fantastical and fabulous . . . to wit; their night walkings and meetings with Herodias, and the Pagan gods: &c. . . . The words of the counsellor are these: It may not be omitted, that certeine wicked women following satans provokations, being seduced by the illusion of divels, believe and profess, that in the night times they ride abroad with Diana, the goddessse of the Pagan, or else with Herodias, with an innumerable multitude, upon certeine beasts, and pass over manie countries and nations, in the silence of the night, and do whatsoever those fairies or ladies command, &c." (Reprint, p. 51).

—Hecate is spelt in F. 1, F. 2 Hecat, as, of course, it must be pronounced. The name is always so accented in Shakespeare. In I. Henry VI. iii. 2. 64 it is, however, a trisyllable. It is used as a disyllable in Ben Jonson's Sad Shepherd, ii. 8, and in Milton's Comus. Angrily, for angrily, is used in two other passages: Two Gent. of Verona, i. 2. 62, and King John, iv. 1. 82.

173. Lines 23, 24:

Upon the corner of the moon
There hangs a vaporous drop profound.

"This vaporous drop," says Steevens, "seems to have been meant for the same as the virus lunare of the an-

1 In the music to Middleton's Witch, mentioned in the Introduction, it is written Hecat.—F. A. M.

ACT III. Scene 6.

174. Line 33: Stage-direction. Music and song within. "Come away, come away."—This is substantially Capell's stage-direction. Ff. have Musique and a song. After line 35 is a second stage-direction: Sing within. Come away, come away, &c.

The words sung here in Mr. Irving's stage version are as follows:

Come away come away
Hecate, Hecate, come away!

Over woods, high rocks, and mountains,
Over seas, our mistress' fountains;
Over steeples, towers and turrets,
We fly by night, amongst troops of spirits:
No ring of bells to our ear sounds,
No howls of wolves, no yelp of hounds.
No ring of bells, &c.

They are, however, transferred to the end of act iv. scene 1. These words are taken from a scene in Middleton's Witch (act iii. scene 3) transferred bodily by Denman into his hideous deformation of Shakespeare's play. It shows what a false estimate of Denman's contemporaries must have had, since they seem to have believed that he could have written the last eight lines of this song, which are infinitely superior to any of the desperately prosy rubbish he has introduced into his version of Macbeth. It is doubtful whether the song, indicated in the stage-direction of the Folio, included much more than the first five lines of the song given in Middleton's Witch:

Come away, come away,
Hecate, Hecate, come away!

Hic. I come, I come, I come, I come,
With all the speed I may.

—Works (Dyce's ed.), vol. iii. p. 393.

Whether Middleton wrote the lines beginning Over woods, high rocks, &c., himself, of course we do not know. One very good emendation is introduced by Denman, either of his own invention or from the copy of the MS. to which he had access, and that is in the fifth line of the song as given above, which in Middleton runs

Over steeples, towers, and turrets.

Dyce, in his edition of Middleton, vol. iii. p. 304, says that he suspects that that was the true reading, and refers to what Hecate says above in The Witch, act i. scene 2 (p. 205): In moonlight nights, on steeples-tops.

—F. A. M.

ACT III. Scene 6.

175. Line 8: Who cannot want the thought.—This double negative was sanctioned by the usage of Shakespeare's time, and seems in his own case to have been particularly seductive. Compare Winter's Tale, iii. 2. 56, &c.

9 It is "Over steeples" in the music to the Witch mentioned in the Introduction.
ACT III. Scene 6.

176. Lines 21, 22: and 'cause he fast'd
His presence at the tyrant's feast.
Compare Lear, ii. 4. 143, 144:
I cannot think my sister in the least
Would 'fast her obligation.

Tyrannic is perhaps used here, as in III. Henry VI. iii. 3. 69, 70, for usurper, the original meaning of the Greek word.

177. Line 33: Hath so exasperate the king.—Compare Trollius and Cressida, v. 1. 34: "why art thou, then, exasperate!" And see instances of the truncated participle in similar words, such as dedicate (Measure for Measure, ii. 2. 154), &c. F. read their 'king'; the correction is Hamner's.

178. Line 41: The cloudy messenger.—Compare I. Henry IV. iii. 2. 82, 83:
Such aspect
As cloudy men use to their adversaries.

179. Lines 43, 49:
this our suffering country
Under a hand accor'd.

Compare similar constructions in, for example, Richard II. ii. 2. 8:
As a long parted mother with her child;
Othello, v. 2. 4:
Nor scar that whiter skin of hers than snow.

ACT IV. Scene 1.

180. Line 1: Thrice the brinded cat hath mew'd.—Cole, Latin Dictionary, has "Brinded, variegatus." The more familiar form of the word is "brindled."

181. Line 3: Harpy.—This may be a missprint for Harpy (as Steevens considered), or it may be meant as another form of the same word.

182. Line 6: Toad, that under cold stone.—Various attempts have been made, all as bad as possible, to render this line syllabically equal with its fellows. It is quite rhetorical as it stands. Cold and stone must, of course, each be pronounced slowly and with emphasis. Similar accentuations for effect will be found, in one form or another, in most poets who have paid much attention to the niceties of versification. The most remarkable instance I recollect of deliberate interference with natural accent is in a line in one of Tennyson's later Idyls of the King, Pellias and Ettarre, which has to be read thus:

And [the word] of the torn—saw across her throat.
—Works, ed. 1879, p. 465.

[In Davenant, this and the next line are printed:]
Toad which under merry stone
Has days and nights late thirty-one;
an arrangement which disturbs entirely the metre Shakespeare had chosen. Charles Kean, in his version, adopted the very cacophonous emendation:
Toad that under closest stone;
and so it is generally printed in all acting versions. In Mr. Irving's version he follows Rowe:
Toad that under the cold stone.

But, in this case, the, which, according to the rhythm, would be accented, must be joined to the under preceding it, and so form a dactyl. Even this, perhaps the least objectionable of all the emendations, makes the line, to some extent, weaker; and the only reason for its adoption in the acting version is that it is very desirable, on the stage, to avoid anything which compels the actor or actress to pronounce the vowel as if it were a double sound, such as co-old for cold.—F. A. M.

183. Line 8: Sweller'd venom.—Steevens quotes an old translation of Boccace's Novels, 1629., "an huge and mighty toad even wailer'ng (as it were) in a hole full of poison." As for the question of the venom rightly or wrongly attributed to the toad, see note 202 to Richard II.

184. Line 16: Adder's fork.—See note 293 to Richard II.

185. Line 17: howlet's wing.—Pope, who altered everything, altered howlet to ovelet. But howlet was the spelling of Shakespeare's time. Coles (Lat. Dict.) has "Howlet, bubo;" and Colgrave, "Huette. An Howlet, or the little Horne-Owle."

186. Line 23: Witches' mummy.—Mummy was formerly used as a medicine. Compare Webster, The White Devil, i. 11. 12:
Your followers
Have swallowed you like mummia, and, being sick
With such unnatural and horrid physic,
Vomit you up I the kennel.

Sir Thomas Browne, Hydriotaphia, v., says: "The Egyptian mummias which Cambyses spared, arracke now consumed. Mummy is become merchandise, Murrain cures wounds, and Pharaoch is sold for balsmes."

187. Line 24: ravin'd, i.e. glutted with prey. Compare Phineas Fletcher's Locusta, 1597, c. iii. st. 18:
Whom that Greekc leopard no sooner spithe,
But she, devour'd, and fill'd his empty maw:
But with the ravin'd prey his bowels broke;
So into fowre divides his brazen yoke.

See ravin up, ii. 4. 28 above; ravin down, Measure for Measure, i. 2. 128; and ravine (as an adjective) in All's Well, iii. 2. 140.

188. Line 29: alivered.—Boyer (French Dictionary) has "To aliver, verb. act. (or cut into ailers) Couper en branches." The verb is used again in Lear, iv. 2. 30. and the noun in Hamlet, iv. 7. 174.

189. Line 32: slab.—Boyer has slabbey ("plashy, full of Dirt"). Slab seems to be used here for slimy. The word, as an adjective, is not found elsewhere.

190. Line 34: ingredients.—The F. have ingredientz. The correction is Rowe's.

191. Line 38: Stage-direction. Enter Hecate.—This stage-direction is Ritson's. The F. have "Enter Hecat, and the other three witches." As the other three witches were already on the stage it is difficult to see how they can now enter. Dyce gives examples of similarly-worded stage-directions from Cowley's Cutler of Coleman Street.

192. Line 43: Stage-direction. Music and a song: "Black spirits," &c. As is pretty generally known, the stage-direction indicates the introduction of the song begin-
NOTES TO MACBETH.

185. Line 59: genmes.—F. 1, F. 2 have germaines; F. 3, F. 4 germain; Pope read germains; Theobald germains, and the Cambridge editors germens. The same word, spelt germaines and permains in the originals, occurs in a similar connection and sense in Lear, iii. 2. 8, which makes it very unlikely that the reading of F. is right, or that it means, as Pope supposed, "relations or kindred elements."

186. Line 69.—"The armed head, represents symbolically Macbeth's head cut off and brought to Malcolm by Macduff. The bloody child, is Macduff untimely ripp'd from his mother's womb. The child with a crown on his head, and a bough in his hand, is the royal Malcolm; who ordered his soldiers to hew them down a bough and bear it before them to Dunainane." (Upton, Critical Observations on Shakespeare, First Edn. 1746, p. 53.)

187. Lines 60, 61: none of woman born
Shall harm Macbeth.

This prophecy, together with the one contained in lines 92-94 below—

Macbeth shall never vanish'd be until Great Birnam wood to high Dunainane hill
Shall come against him—

may be found in Holinshed: "a certeine witch, whome he had in great trut, had told that he should never be slaine with man borne of ane woman, nor vanquished till the wood of Bernane came to the castell of Dunainane" (Re-print, vol. v. p. 274).

188. Line 96: bodements.—This word is only used by Shakespeare in one other passage, in Troilus and Cressida, v. 3. 79, 80:

This foolish, dreaming, superstitious girl
Makes all these bodements.

189. Line 97: Rebellion's head rise never.—The F. have Rebellion's dead. The reading in the text is Hamm'er's, said to be from a conjecture of Theobald's. (On referring to Theobald's Shakespeare Restored (First Edn. 1790) I find that he gives "Rebellion's head rise never," adding in a footnote "or Rebellion's head" (Appendix, p. 187). We have followed Theobald in omitting any commas after head; nearly all the editors insert one, although it changes the construction if not the sense of the emendation.—F. A. M.)

190. Line 111: A show of eight Kings.—Holinshed gives (vol. v. pp. 272, 273) a long account of how Banquo's descendants became ultimately kings of Scotland. Fleance, after his escape from the murderers of his father, took refuge in Wales with the prince of that country, by whose daughter he became the father of a natural son, Walter, who subsequently came to Scotland, and having distinguished himself very much, was made Lord Steward of the realm, and so took the name of Steward (which afterwards became Stewart or Stuart). His great-grandson, who was also named Walter, had a son John, who married the heiress of Bonkili. This John was killed at Falkirk, leaving a son, also called Walter, who married Margerie Bruce, daughter of Robert Bruce, by whom he had a son, who succeeded to the throne as King Robert the Second. He was the first of the eight kings, the next...
ACT IV. Scene 1.

NOTES TO MACBETH.

ACT IV. Scene 2.

being Robert III. and the last James the Sixth of Scotland and First of England; and it is the latter that shows a glance to Macbeth, and not Banquo, as it says in the stage-direction of F. 1. Marie Stuart is omitted, for all allusion to that ill-fated queen would have been no less unpleasant to her son than it would have been to her late "dear friend and cousin," Queen Elizabeth. It is rather curious to think what Macbeth might have seen in the glass, had Shakespeare been endowed with any prophetic powers. Could it have shown Macbeth the ultimate fate of the Stewart or Stuart family, he might have been consol'd by the reflection that in Banquo's case, as in his own, "royal honours" proved not to be an unmixed blessing.

200. Line 119: And yet the eighth appears, who bears a GLASS.—Compare Measure for Measure, ii. 2. 95, and see note 78.

201. Line 123: For the BLOOD-BOLT'ER'd Banquo smiles upon me.—Steevens and Malone both say that bolted is a word well known in Warwickshire, meaning to bemear, befoul. Compare Arden of Faversham, iii. 1. p. 44 (ed. Bullen):

Me thinks I see them with their bolted hair;
Staring and grinning in their gentle face.

where bolted apparently means, as bolted here, "matted with sweat or blood." Steevens quotes Holland's Flints, xii. 17, where, speaking of a goat's head, he says: "Now by reason of dust getting among, it bolteth and clutterbeth into knees and knaps."

202. Line 158: But no more SIGHTS!—Collier, on the authority of his MS. Corrector, altered SIGHTS to SIGHTS, a very intelligible error of typographry, but no improvement, that I can see, to the sense of the passage. Is it any wonder that Macbeth has had enough of SIGHTS for the present?

ACT IV. Scene 2.

203. Line 9: the poor wren.—Harting (Ornithology of Shakespeare, p. 143) says: "There are three statements here which are likely to be criticised by the ornithologist. First, that the wren is the smallest of birds, which is evidently an oversight. Secondly, that the wren has sufficient courage to fight against a bird of prey in defence of its young, which is doubtful. Thirdly, that the owl will take young birds from the nest."

[I think that Mr. Harting is a little hypercritical here. The common wren, Tropidonotus vulgaris, is indeed not absolutely the smallest of British birds, for the golden-crested Regulus, otherwise called the golden-crested wren, is smaller. Yarrell gives as the length of the common wren four inches, and as the length of the golden-crested Regulus three inches and a half. The smallest of the tits is slightly larger than the wren.]

The little wren is very bold and very familiar; but it is the common blue tit or Billy Biter, as the small boys call him, which is most especially vigorous in the defence of its nest. As to the accusation against the barn-door owl of taking young birds from the nest, Mr. Harting gives, on pp. 91-94, a most interesting summary of the evidence for and against the accused. It must be confessed that the circumstantial evidence is rather against the owl; though he has found a vigorous defender in the late Charles Waterton. The wren has been the small cent of many traditions. For some unknown reason Jenny Wren was married to Cock Robin; and I believe, with due deference to the translator, that the Zaunkönig (hedge-king) of the Tales, numbered 102 and 171 respectively, in Grimm's collection (see Margaret Hunt's Translation of Household Tales, vol. ii.) was intended to be the common wren, to be seen in every hedgerow, and not the willow-wren or willow-warbler, a member of the family of the Sylviaeae, and no relation to our friend Jenny.—F. A. X.]

204. Lines 19-22:

when we hold rumour
From what we fear, yet know not what we fear,
But float upon a wild and violent sea
Each way and move.

This is one of the many obscure and difficult passages in this play which one scarcely knows how to treat; for one cannot make them clear and intelligible without such a radical alteration of the text, as the most audacious commentator may fear to perpetrate. It is much safer to retain the text of the Folio, in spite of its apparent obscurity, if by the aid of that text we can make any sense of the passage in question. Ross is trying to excuse to Lady Macbeth, the apparent cowardice of her husband in flying from his country, and leaving her and her children to the mercy of Macbeth. He says:

But cruel are the times, when we are traitors,
And do not know ourselves;

the meaning of which is generally taken to be "When we are traitors and do not know ourselves to be traitors," in which case we should have expected that the text would have been, as Hamner printed it, "and know't ourselves." It may be that the meaning of these words is "When we are,"—that is to say, "as if we were—traitors, and do not know ourselves, i.e. the exact motive or effect of our own actions." This meaning seems to coincide with what follows. He continues "when we hold rumour, that is to say "entertain or believe rumour, from what we fear, i.e. "interpreting it by the aid of our fears," or "giving it the shape of our fears," yet know not what we fear, but float upon a wild and violent sea; being tossed up and down and driven each way without any control over our own movements." The words each way and move are those in which the chief difficulty lies. Shakespeare never uses move as a substantive, but always as a verb; and, if we understand it here as equivalent to "move up and down with the chopping action of the waves," it makes very good sense. However elliptical the expression may appear, we have a similar use of the verb in Cymbeline, iii. 1. 26-29:

and his shipping—
Poor ignorant baboons—on our terrible seas,
Like egg-shells merr'd upon their surges, crack'd
As easily 'gainst our rocks.

Ross's meaning may be thus paraphrased: "The times are cruel when such is the uncertainty and agitation of men's minds, that they play the part of traitors to their own duties, and lose the power of perceiving the effect of their own actions;" or, "when they are set down as traitors to their ruler, without the consciousness of having done anything to deserve it. At such times, when the minds of men are full of a vague fear, and every idle rumour takes its shape from these fears, they feel certain of nothing; they have no sense of security in anything, but are like persons tossed about on the waves of a stormy sea, driven this way and that at the caprice of the billows."

— P. A. M.

205. Line 54: Poor bird! thou'rt never fear the net nor line.—F. 2. F. S. F. 4. read line. Doubtless a misprint, which only two editors, singularly enough, seem to have adopted into their text, Pope and Capell.

205. Line 59: Now, God help thee; poor monkey!—Monkey is not elsewhere used by Shakespeare as a term of endearment; but ape is thus used in two places, II. Henry IV, ii. 4. 234, and Romeo and Juliet, ii. 1. 16.

207. Line 83: Thou liest, thou shag-hair'd villain!—Ft. print shag-car'd. The reading here, and generally, adopted is Steevens' conjecture, first used by Dyce. The expression is quite the dramatics of the time. Compare II. Henry VI. iii. 1. 387: "like a shag-hair'd crafty kern." Shag-hair'd occurs twice as a term of descriptive abuse in Cyril Tourneur's Atheist's Tragedy, ii. 7. (Mermaid ed. p. 284): "In the meantime comes a shag-haired dog by;" and v. 2 (p. 355): "Down, you shag-haired cur" (spoken by D'Amville to the headman).

ACT IV. Scene 3.

This scene (down to line 189) follows Holinshed very closely, in many parts almost textually. It is indeed so close a transcript that it is unnecessary to give the prose at length. Perhaps the fact that Shakespeare has here merely turned prose into verse is the reason why the scene is (to my thinking, at least) so tame and artificial compared with the rest of the play. I can never feel that this interview between Malcolm and Macduff (of course I refer to the first 189 lines) has been treated by Shakespeare in a really convincing way; long before I was aware of its authority in Holinshed, I always felt as if I were reading a narrative, not overhearing a conversation. I think Shakespeare must have written it out it a sense of duty, or of historical fidelity, and that having no interest in it himself he was content to copy tamely. The incommensurable latter part of the scene has no basis in Holinshed beyond the barest statement that "Makbeth most cruelly caused the wife and children of Macduff, with all whom he found in that castell, to be slaine."

208. Line 4: birthdom.—This word is spelt birthdome in the Ft. It means of course "birthright," and is formed by analogy with the numerous English words ending in "-dom," such as "kingdom," or the word used in 1. 5. 71 above, "masterdom."

210. Line 15: deserve.—Ft. have disserve. Theobald altered this to deserve, which has been generally accepted.

211. Lines 19, 20:

A good and virtuous nature may recoil
In an imperial charge.

Recoil is used in the same slightly irregular sense ("give way under," "swerve") in v. 2. 23 below, and in Cymbeline, i. 6. 128. "Perhaps," say the Clarendon Press edd., "Shakespeare had in mind the recoil of a gun, which suggested the use of the word 'charge', though with a different significance."

212. Line 54: after'd.—F. 1. F. 2. have after'd, F. 3 after'd, F. 4 afterd. The spelling in the text was adopted by Steevens after Heath's conjecture. After is a legal term meaning to assess, estimate, and also to confirm. We find in Cowell's Interpreter: "After may probably bee thought to proceed from the French (aferiteres, afer alti) after (i.e. confirmare, affirmare)." It signifies in our common law those that be appointed in Court-lects, &c. upon oath to mulct such as have committed faults arbitrarily punishable, and have no express penalty set down by statute" (edn. 1607, C. 1). Boyer (Fr. Dict.) has "To After, v. a. (A Term used in the Exchequer, that is, to confirm by Oath)."

213. Line 59: Sudden.—Compare II. Henry IV. iv. 4. 34, 35:

As humorous as winter, and as sudden
As laws congealed in the spring of day.

214. Line 71: CONVY your pleasures in a spacious plenty.—Convay is once or twice used by Shakespeare with the meaning of "conduct," "manage secretly," as in Lear, i. 2. 109: "I will seek him, sir, presently; convey the business as I shall find means, and acquaint you withal."

215. Line 88: summer-seeming.—Various needless attempts have been made to amend this epithet, which requires no amendment. Lust is compared to the brief and passing heat of summer; avarice takes deeper root, and has no date or intermission. Compare Donne's Love is Alchemy:

So, lovers dream a rich and long delight.
But get a Winter-seeming Sommer's night.

—Foscus (Grosart's edn.1, vol. i. p. 199.)

218. Line 88: sions; i.e. plenty, used generally in the singular = harvest. Shakespeare employs it again in The Tempest, iv. 1. 110, 111:

Earth's increase, sions plenty.
Bars and garners never empty.

217. Line 108: And does BLASPHEME his breed.—Boyer, in his French Dictionary, has "To Blaspheme, to speak Evil of," and Bacon, Advancement of Learning, i. 2. § 9, speaks of "blasphemy against learning."

218. Line 111: Died every day she it'sd.—This is probably derived from 1 Cor. xv. 51: "I die daily." [Note that in F. it'sd is printed thus, and not lived as Dyce prints it. This is one of those minutiae of rhythm concerning which the Folio is generally trustworthy. Shakespeare could never have meant the final ed of it'sd to be pronounced here. The defective metre is supplied naturally by the speaker's pausing before he says Fare thee well.—P. A. M.]

219. Line 113: HAYE banish'd me.—Ft. print hath. The correction or modernization is Rowe's.

220. Line 118: trains; i.e. devices. Boyer (Fr. Dict.) has "Train (a trap or wheedle), Embuches, piege, amover, ra[r]ce, t alturpoire." The word is derived from the French Traisie, "a plot, practise, conspiract, deule" (Coitgrave). It is only used as a noun in the present passage, but it occurs as a verb in a Comedy of Errors, ill. 2. 45, &c.

221. Line 133: before thy here-approach.—P. 1 has they for thy. With here-approach compare my here-remain, line 148 below.

222. Line 134: Old Siward.—This famous warrior was, undoubtedly, a historical personage, although a great deal of tradition surrounds his origin. His grandfather was said to be a bear, not in a figurative but in a literal sense. According to Palgrave, referred to by French, Siward encouraged this fable as tending to enhance his fame. He was a successful general under Hardicanute, and afterwards under Edward the Confessor, when he defeated the rebel Earl Godwin and his son. Edward was the uncle of Malcolm, and partly for that reason was selected to help that young prince in his effort to regain the throne which Macbeth had usurped. Siward’s eldest son Osborne (the young Siward of this play) was killed in the action before Macbeth’s castle. Earl Siward’s wife was Adrina, daughter of Ailred. By her he left a son Waldtheof, who was beheaded by William the Conqueror, and afterwards under Edward the Confessor, when he defeated the rebel Earl Godwin and his son. Edward was the uncle of Malcolm, and partly for that reason was selected to help that young prince in his effort to regain the throne which Macbeth had usurped. Siward’s eldest son Osborne (the young Siward of this play) was killed in the action before Macbeth’s castle. Earl Siward’s wife was Adrina, daughter of Ailred. By her he left a son Waldtheof, who was beheaded by William the Conqueror, and afterwards under Edward the Confessor, when he defeated the rebel Earl Godwin and his son. Edward was the uncle of Malcolm, and partly for that reason was selected to help that young prince in his effort to regain the throne which Macbeth had usurped. Siward’s eldest son Osborne (the young Siward of this play) was killed in the action before Macbeth’s castle. Earl Siward’s wife was Adrina, daughter of Ailred. By her he left a son Waldtheof, who was beheaded by William the Conqueror, and afterwards under Edward the Confessor, when he defeated the rebel Earl Godwin and his son. Edward was the uncle of Malcolm, and partly for that reason was selected to help that young prince in his effort to regain the throne which Macbeth had usurped. Siward’s eldest son Osborne (the young Siward of this play) was killed in the action before Macbeth’s castle. Earl Siward’s wife was Adrina, daughter of Ailred. By her he left a son Waldtheof, who was beheaded by William the Conqueror, and afterwards under Edward the Confessor, when he defeated the rebel Earl Godwin and his son. Edward was the uncle of Malcolm, and partly for that reason was selected to help that young prince in his effort to regain the throne which Macbeth had usurped. Siward’s eldest son Osborne (the young Siward of this play) was killed in the action before Macbeth’s castle. Earl Siward’s wife was Adrina, daughter of Ailred. By her he left a son Waldtheof, who was beheaded by William the Conqueror, and afterwards under Edward the Confessor, when he defeated the rebel Earl Godwin and his son. Edward was the uncle of Malcolm, and partly for that reason was selected to help that young prince in his effort to regain the throne which Macbeth had usurped.

223. Line 135: Already at a point.—Rowe prints all ready in two words. At a point means prepared. The Clarendon Press ed. quote an instance from Foxe’s Acts and Monuments, ed. 1570, p. 209: “The Register there sitting by, being wear, belyke, of tarrying, or else perceiving the constant Martys to be at a point, called upon the chancellours in hast to rid them out of the way and make an end.” Florio has, “Essere in punto, to be in a readiness, to be at a point.”

224. Lines 136, 137: the chance of goodness Be like our warrantied quarrel.

“Chance of goodness is equivalent to ‘successful issue,’ and like is also to be understood in connection with it:—may the issue correspond in goodness to our good, righteous cause. ‘Chance of goodness’ forms one idea like ‘time of scorn,’ Othello, iv. 2. 54” (Delius). The Clarendon Press ed. take the meaning to be “May the chance of success be as certain as the justice of our quarrel.”

225. Lines 142, 143: their malady convinces

The great essay of art.

Convinces is used here, as in i. 7. 64, in the sense of “overpower.” Compare Cymbeline, i. 4. 103, 104: “Your Italy contains none so accomplish’d a courtier to convinces the honour of my mistress.” As for assay, Furness quotes Colgrave: “Preuve: 1. a proofe, tryall, essaye, experiment, experience.”

226. Line 146: ’Tis call’d the evil.—This passage about touching for the evil, that is to say scrofula or the king’s evil, as it was commonly called, is supposed to have been inserted out of compliment to James I. Edward the Confessor was the first king who was said to have had this power, on his death the monarchs of France and England claimed and exercised this power. Andrew Borde, who wrote in the time of Henry VIII., mentions it: “The kinges of England by the power that god hath given to the, doth make sicks me whole of a sycnes called the kynge’s eyell” (Reprint, C. 1 n). The same miraculous power was claimed for the kinges of France. James I. was fond of exercising this supposed power, and so was his son. Charles II. touched for the king’s evil when in exile, and also after the Restoration, in his case the virtue of his touch must have been certainly inherited from some very remote ancestor. Everyone who has read Boswell’s Life of Johnson will remember that the great doctor recollected being taken, when but thirty months old, to be touched by Queen Anne in 1712. This touch, however, was without any effect (Boswell’s Life, ed. 1874, vol. i. p. 15). It was also the custom to hang some gold coin about the sufferer’s neck (see below, line 158); but this additional consolation was certainly not administered by Edward the Confessor. When Charles II. touched in exile, from motives of economy he dispensed with the coin; but when he came to the throne, a special medal was struck called a touch-piece. The Clarendon Press ed. tell us that the identical touch-piece, hung round the neck of Samuel Johnson by Queen Anne, has been preserved in the British Museum. —P. A. M.

227. Line 160: Where sighs and groans and shrieks that rent the air.—Rent, the reading of the P., was an alternative form of rend. It does not seem worth while to modernize it. This form occurs in Shakespeare in five other places, viz. in Midsummer Night’s Dream, ill. 2. 215; III. Henry VI. iii. 2. 175; Richard III. i. 2. 126 (where the Qq. have rend); and in Titus Andronicus, ill. i. 281, and Lover’s Complaint, 55, both works of doubtful authenticity.

228. Lines 169, 170: where violent sorrow seems

A modern ecstasy.

Ecstasy was used in a number of places in the sense of trite and commonplace. Compare As You Like It, ii. 7. 156:

Full of wise sayes and modern instances.

Ecstasy was used for any commotion of mind, pleasurable or the reverse. Compare ill. 2. 22 above. In Hamlet, iii. 1. 188, in Ophelia’s beautiful speech, and elsewhere, it is used for “madness.”

423
NOTES TO MACBETH.

ACT IV. SCENE 3.

229. Lines 176, 177:

Macd. How does my wife?

Bos. Why, well.

Compare Antony and Cleopatra, il. 5. 31-33:

Mess. First, madam, he is well.

Cleo. Why, there’s more gold.

But, sirrah, mark, we use

To say the dead are well.

230. Line 196: Where hearing should not latch them.

can, to catch, to seize; Gael., glac, catch.” Compare Sonnet, exilii. 5. 6:

For it no form delivers to the heart

Of bird, of flower, or shape, which it doth latch;

also Midsummer Night’s Dream, ill. 2. 36, and see note 175 of that play.

231. Line 196: a sea-grief; i.e. a grief that has a single owner. “It must, I think, be allowed that the attorney has been guilty of a flat trespass on the poet” (Stevens).

Compare Troilus and Cressida, ill. 2. 54: “a kiss in sea-farm.”

232. Line 210: Whispers the over-straught heart. —“Whispers is often used without a preposition before a personal object. Rarely as here, or in Much Ado, ill. 1. 4 (‘Whisper her ear’”) (Abbott, 5h. Grammar, § 290).

233. Line 231: This tune goes manly. —All the Folios have time, which seems to be a manifest misprint; in fact, one so very obvious that, for that very reason, it may have escaped correction. It is quite clear how very easily the two words may be mistaken for one another. The emendation was first made by Rowe, and is followed by most editors; and, as Malone remarks, it is supported by a previous passage in the same play, i. 3. 88: “To the self-same tune and words.” Gifford in one of his wonderful “bow-wow!” notes to The Roman Actor of Maarssinger, act ii. scene 1, sneers at this emendation, and says: “Time, however, was the more ancient and common term: nor was it till long after the age of Maarssinger, that the use of it, in the sense of harmony, was entirely superseded by that of tune” (ed. 1806, p. 388). Unfortunately for this extremely cocksure statement, there is no proof that time was ever used for tune at all. If Gifford had said that tune and time were the same words, there would have been some sense in it; but no two words can well be more distinct in their meaning than time and tune; the former always referring to the measure or rhythm of music, and the latter to the air or melody. There is one well-known passage in Hamlet, ill. 1. 106:

Like sweet bells jangled out of tune and harsh,

where the same misprint occurs—at least in Qq., for Ff.

have time—and where the reading may be doubtful; but that of the Ff. is generally preferred.—F. A. M.

234. Line 239: PUT on their instruments. —For this use of put on compare Hamlet, lv. 7. 182:

We’ll put on those shall praise your excellence.

1 “I am Sir Oracle,

And when I ope my lips, let no dog bark!”

—Merchant of Venice, i. 1. 93-94.

424

ACT V. SCENE 1.

236. Line 4: Since his majesty WENT INTO THE FIELD.—

Stevens considered this statement to be an oversight on the part of Shakespeare. “He forgot that he had shut up Macbeth in Dunainane, and surrounded him with beings.” But we may well suppose that Macbeth had taken the field before he was compelled to retreat into his castle. Bos. in the preceding scene, had said that he had seen “the tyrant’s power afoot.” Macbeth was not yet aware of the advance of the English auxiliaries.

236. Line 22: Ay, but their sense ARE shut.—This is the reading of Ff. and it is strongly supported, I think, by a passage in Sonnet xvi. 10, 11:

that my adder’s sense

To critic and to flatterer stopped are.

Abbott points out in his Shakespearean Grammar (sec.

471) that: “The plural and possessive cases of nouns in which the singular ends in s, es, oe, or, and ge, are frequently written, and still more frequently pronounced, without the additional syllable” (p. 356). Horse is frequently used for the plural; compare ii. 4. 14 above:

And Duncan’s horses—a thing most strange and certain—where horses should be pronounced if not written horses;

and compare Antony and Cleopatra, ill. 7. 8. 9:

If we should serve with horses and mares together,

The horses were merely lost.

A good reason for not adopting what was originally Davenant’s alteration of “sense is shut,” is because we thus avoid the very cacophonous conjunction of siblants.

—F. A. M.

237. Line 60: Hell is murky.—Stevens printed this sentence with a note of exclamation, and says: “She certainly imagines herself here talking to Macbeth, who (she supposes) had just said, Hell is murky, (i.e. hell is a dismal place to go to in consequence of such a deed,) and repeats his words in contempt of his cowardice.” I believe this to be the complete misapprehension of the spirit of the passage. The words bubble up from a conscience never so much at ease as she tries to suppose, and they come, in this unconscious self-revelation, with the most poignant effect between words that are resolute (“why, then ’tis time to do’t”) and words that are contemptuous of irresolution in another (“Fie, my lord, fie! a soldier, and afaire!”). This little sentence, though it passes and is forgotten, is said with an accent and shudder of the deepest conviction.

238. Line 84: Remove from her the means of all annoyance.—Annoyance, in the sense of “injury” (here, means of annoyance = means of suicide), occurs several times in

Shakespeare. Compare Richard Ill. ill. 2. 15, 16:

And heavy-gaited toads, lie in their way,

Doing annoyance to the treacherous feet.

239. Line 88: My mind she has MATED, and amaz’d my sight.—Mated, in the sense of confounded, confused, occurs several times in Shakespeare. See Comedy of Errors, notes 82 and 187.

ACT V. Scene 2.

ACT V. Scene 2.

240. Line 5: the mortified man. — This has generally been understood to mean the man who has “mortalized the flesh,” the ascetic; compare Love’s Labour’s Lost, i. 1. 28:

My loving lord, Dumas is mortified.

The Clarendon Press ed. suggest that mortified should be taken in its literal sense of dead; as in Erasmus on the Creed, Eng. tr. fol. 15: “Christ was mortified and killed in death as touchyng to his flesh: but was quickened in spirit.”

241. Line 10: And many unrough youths. — If. spell the word unrough. It is not elsewhere used by Shakespeare, though rough in the opposite sense occurs in The Tempest, ii. 1. 249, 250:

Till new-born chins
Be rough’d and rasonable.

242. Lines 15, 16:
He cannot buckle his distempered cause
Within the belt of rules.

Compare for the obse metaphor Troullis and Cresteida, ii. 2. 30-31:

And buckle in a waist most pathognome
With spans and inches so diminutive
As fears and reasons.

8. Walker suggested that for cause we should read course, and his hint was taken by Singer, Dyce, Collier, and Hudson. The change is to say the least, quite unnecessary. Cause, symbolized as a distempered or disordered body, stands for the party belonging to Macbeth. The comparison is one often employed by Shakespeare.

243. Line 23: His pester’d sense. — Pester was not in Shakespeare’s time quite so unlargely a term as it is now, and it occurs several times, very seriously, in the sense of “annoy,” “hamper.” Compare Hamlet, i. 2. 22: “to pester us with message.”

244. Lines 27, 28:
Mest es the medicinal of the sickly weak,
And with him, &c.

It is evident from the hint of the second line that medicine, whether literally or figuratively, is meant rather for the physician (Fr. médecin) than for the physic. Florio has: “Medico: a medicine, a phisician, a leech;” but this sense was not usual. Compare All’s Well, ii. 1. 75, and Winter’s Tale, iv. 4. 506, where medicine is used somewhat, though more playfully, in the same sense.

245. Line 30: To dew the sovereign flower. — Dew as a verb occurs in II. Henry VI. iii. 2. 340: “dew it with my mournful tears.”

ACT V. Scene 3.

246. Line 3: I cannot taint with fear. — Taint as an intransitive verb is only used by Shakespeare here and in Twelfth Night, iii. 4. 145: “I lost the device take air and taint.”

247. Line 8: the English epicures. — Compare Holinshed: “For manie of the people abhorring the riotous maners and superfluously gormandizing brought in among them by the Englishmen, were willing enough to re-cease this Donald for their king, trusting (because he had beene brought up in the Iles, with old customs and maners of their ancient nation, without tast of the English likerous delicate) they should by his severe order in government recouer againe the former temperance of their old progenitors” (Reprint, vol. v. p. 284).

248. Line 10: Shall never sag with doubt. — Sag is still used in some provincial dialects, as it is currently in America, for “droop,” “give way,” “become overloaded.” Halliwell quotes Pierce Pennible, 1592: “Sir Rowland Russecoast their dad, goes sagging every day in his round gascoynes of white cotton.” The word often occurs in Walt Whitman. Compare “Out of the Cradle endlessly rocking” (Leaves of Grass, 1854, p. 100):

The yellow half-moon enlarged, sagging down, drooping, the face of the sea almost touching.

249. Line 11: loom. — This Scotch word is used only here, very appropriately in a drama whose scene is Scotland. Loom, however, which is practically the same word, occurs in Othello, ii. 2. 95, and Pericles, iv. 6. 19.

250. Line 15: patch. — It has generally been said that Patch was the name of the fool who belonged to Cardinal Wolsey; but it appears that it was rather a nickname given to the household fool before Wolsey’s time; and that it may have been so used, either as an allusion to their dress of coloured patches, or it may have been connected with the Italian pazzio, which Florio explains as “a fool,” also “foolish.” Douce in his Illustrations of Shakespeare (pp. 158, 160) gives a long and interesting note on this subject.—F. A. M.

251. Line 16: those linen cheeks of thine. — Compare Henry V. ii. 2. 73, 74:

Look ye, how they change!

Their cheeks are paper.

252. Lines 20, 21:

Will sheere me ever, or dissease me now.

This passage has been a famous battle-ground for commentators. Dyce adopted the curious conjecture of Bishop Percy:

Will chair me ever or diseace me now.

F. i has die-sate, but the three other Folios all read disease. First, with regard to chair: although chair is used frequently in Shakespeare for the “chair of state,” the “throne,” for instance in II. Henry IV. iv. 5. 95, where the king, addressing his son, says:

Dost thou so hunger for mine empty chair?

and in several other passages in the historical plays, yet it is never misspelt cheers. F. i, F. ii have, in the passage in our text, cheers; F. iii, F. iv cheer, and I think that it has been most clearly proved by Mr. Ellis in his communication to the Athenæum of January 25, 1868, and quoted at length by Furness (pp. 257, 258), that it is quite impossible to regard cheers or cheer as a phonetic spelling of chair. I find that amongst the quotations given under chair, in Richardson’s Dictionary, from old writers before the time of Shakespeare, it is spelt variously chare, chaire, chaires (once in Wicliff), chayere (once in Gower, while he spells the word chare in another passage), and, finally, chayre (in Sir T. Elyot’s Governor).
NOTES TO MACBETH.

ACT V. Scene 3.

I have examined the passages in which it occurs to F. 1. in the sense of a throne, where it seems invariably to be spelt chayre or chair.

As to adopting the reading diessat I think that the authority of F. 1 is quite insufficient, for it is much more probable that diessat was a misprint for dassat than that it was meant to represent diessat, a word which seems only to be used in The Two Noble Kinsmen, act v. scene 4 (I take the quotation from my own copy of the Quarto, 1634): speaking of a horse Pithirus says (p. 87):

seekes all foule meenes

Of boystrous and rough Iadrie, to diessat

His Lord.

And it will be observed that diessat is printed there with the two as, as we should certainly expect to find it in F. 1, in this passage, if that were the true reading. If diessat were a misprint, is it not more probable that the syllable esse is a mistake for esse, rather than for diessat? So far, as regards the literal and etymological aspect of this question. Next as to the sense. Is not the antithesis of cheer and diessat quite as complete, and more poetic than that of chair and diessat? We have a passage in Hamlet which almost seems to guide us in deciding on the reading here (iii. 2. 174):

you are so sick of late,

So far from cheer and from your former state.

The word diessat is an extremely characteristic one. It occurs frequently in old writers, and especially in the earlier versions of the Bible, where it means "to grieve," "to render uneasy or unhappy;" and surely if we accept it here in its double sense, that is to say in its older one, already mentioned, and in the general sense "to render sick or diseased," is it not a most forcible word? Does not the reading which we have adopted in common with Mr. Furness—who, I believe, was the first to print the verb diessat with the hyphen, thereby reconciling the reading of F. 1 and F. 2—is not this reading much more in accordance with the whole sentiment of the passage? Macbeth is not thinking of the throne, of his royal honours; what weighs upon his mind throughout this scene is his unhappy friendless position, old age is before him, but none of its consolations. Just two lines above he has said "I am sick at heart." His mind is diseased (see line 40 below); and he goes on to ask the doctor if he could not find the disease of his land (line 51), could purge out the enemies who are thronging against him; then he would applaud him "to the very echo." The idea of sickness and disease seems present in his thoughts throughout this scene. As to adopting the course taken by the Cambridge ed. and others, that is to say of retaining cheer and of altering the diessat of F. 1 into the proasnic diessat, that seems to me a course which is almost indefensible upon any grounds whatever; for it sacrifices the beauty of the passage without even having the merit of retaining the exact reading of the earliest text that has come down to us. For if diessat, in its double and pregnant sense, is not to be adopted, surely diessat—to dispossexe, a word which is a thoroughly old English word and used by Spenser, Hall, Holland, and Drayton, would be preferable. As to push there is no real difficulty; this word being used frequently by Shakespeare, in a figurative sense, of a sudden violent attack.—F. A. M.

ACT V. Scene 4.

255. Lines 22, 23:

Is fall'n into the ear, the yellow leaf.

Stevenson (after Johnson's conjecture) read May of life, which yields an excellent sense, literally more exact than the Fr. reading, which yet seems to me entirely natural and probable. Compare Peveril, 1. 1. 54: "ready for the way of life or death;" and Masinger, The Roman Actor,

If that when I was mistress of myself
And in my way of youth, &c.

—Works (ed. Gifford), i. 33.

I think, too, that "my way" has a much better sound than the too close alliteration of "my May."

256. Line 35: Skirr the country round.—This word is used again, but intrasitively, in Henry V. iv. 7. 63, 64:

we will come to them,

And make them skirr away.

Stevenson quotes Beaumont and Fletcher, Love's Cure, or The Martial Maid, act ii. scene 2:

Whilst I, with this and this, well mounted, skur'd

A horse troop through and through.

[Symson and other editors print skir'd, but according to Dyce the first Folio of Beaumont and Fletcher reads skur'd.—F. A. M.]

255. Line 39: Curs her of that.—So F. 2, F. 3, F. 4. F. 1 omits her.

256. Line 55: What rhubarb, senma, or what purgative drug.—F. 1 has Cyme; F. 2, F. S Caron; F. 4. senma. "The F. 2," says Hunter, "correctly represents the pronunciation of the name of the drug now called senma in Shakespeare's time, and is still the pronunciation of it by the common people. Thus, in the Treasure of Hidden Secrets, 1627, 'Take the Scene of Alexandria one ounce,' &c. Colgrave spells the word sena and sensa, and explains it as "a little purgative shrub or plant." Dyce supposes the Cyme of F. 1 to be a misprint for Cyman, one of the ways of spelling sensa.

ACT V. SCENE 4.

257. Lines 4-7:

Let every soldier how him down a bough,

And bear't before him: thereby shall we shadow

The numbers of our host, and make discovery

Bvr in report of us.

Hollinshed says: "Malcome folowing hastily after Macbeth, came the night before the battle unto Byran wood, and when his armie had rested a while there to refresh him, hee commanded euery man to get a bough of some tree or other of that wood in his hand, as bigge as he might bear, and to march forth therwith in such wise, that on the next morow they might come closely and without sight in theys manner within viewes of hye enemies."

258. Lines 11, 12:

For where there is ADVANC'TAGE to be GIVEN,

Both more and less have given him the revolt.

So Fr. Many emendations have been proposed; perhaps Johnson's is the best and the simplest. He proposed to read, "where there is a vantage to be gone," in the sense of "to be off," "to depart," "to escape," but there is surely no need for altering advantage to a vantage in this case; for, as Johnson pointed out, advantage is frequently used by Shakespeare as a favourable opportunity, e.g. in Tempest, ii. 3. 18:

Do not, for one respite, forego the purpose
That you resolved to effect.

Sex. The next advantage
Will we take thoroughly.

In F. t. the given, in both lines, is printed in the unlined form, and it certainly seems as if the double ending were intended in line 11; and for that reason, if for no other, we would not alter the text in spite of the repetition of the word given, which may seem awkward, but is quite Shakespearean. The meaning may be "where there is to be, i.e. where there must necessarily be given the advantage, i.e. opportunity of descent, the more and less, that is to say the greater and the less (= probably, "the officers and private soldiers"); revolt from Macbeth. Macduff goes on to say, "none remain with him but those who are obliged to,") which thoroughly agrees with what Macbeth says himself, line 49, in the preceding scene: "the thanes fly from me;" and again in the next scene (lines 5, 6) he says:

Wore they not forced (i.e. reinforced) with those that should be ours, We might have met them barefooted, bare to beard.

If Macbeth had elected to give battle to the enemy outside his castle, he would have been compelled to afford an opportunity to those who were disinclined to desert to Malcolm's side.—F. A. M.

259. Line 21: Towards which advance the war.—Stevens has an interesting note on the irregular endings of many of the scenes in Macbeth. "It has been understood that local rhymes were introduced in plays in order to afford an actor the advantage of a more pointed exit, or to close a scene with additional force. Yet, whatever might be Shakespeare's motive for continuing such a practice, it may be observed that he often seems immediately to repent of it; and, in the tragedy before us, has repeatedly counterbalanced it by hemistichs which destroy the effect, and consequently defeat the supposed purpose of the antecedent couplets." Compare in the present play, besides the instance here, the end of l. 5; iii. 2; iii. 4; iv. 1; v. 1; v. 2.

ACT V. SCENE 5.

From here to the end of the play Shakespeare follows, in outline, the narrative in Hollinshed, which, to avoid chopping it up into small pieces, I give here: "On the morrow when Makbeth beheld them coming in this sort, he first marneyled what the matter ment, but in the end remembred himself, that the prophecys which he had heared long before that time, of the comming of Byrnane wood to Dunimmone Castell, was likely to bee now fulfild. Nenerthelesse, he brought his men in order of bastell, and exhorted them to doe valiantly, howbeit his enemies had scarcely cast from them their boughes, when Makbeth percyng their numbers betok him straight to flight, whom Makduff pursuyn with great hatred even till he came vnto Lunfannain, where Makbeth percyng that Makduff was hard at his back, leapt beside his horse, saying, thou traytor, what meanest it that thou shouldst thus in vaine follow me that am not appoynted to be slain by any creature that is borne of a woman, come on therefor, and recwayne thy rewarde which thou hast desired for thy paynes, and therewith all he lyft vp his swordes thinking to have slaine him. But Makduff quickly assaying from his horse, ere he came at him, answered (with his naked sword in his hand) saying: it is true Makbeth, and now shall thine insatiable crueltie haue an ende, for I am even he that thy wyards haue tolde the of, who was never borne of my mother, but ripped out of hir womb: therewithall he stept unto him, & slue him in the place. Then cutting his heades from the shoulders, hee set it vpon a poll, and brought it vnto Malcolm. This was the end of Makbeth, after he had reigne d xv. yeares over the Scottissshmen" (vol. v. pp. 276, 277).

290. Lines 11-13:

My FELL OF HAIR
Would at a daimal treatise rouse and stir
As life were in't.

Coles, Latin Dictionary, has "Fell (skin), pellis." The word is used again in Lear, v. 3. 24: "flesh and fell." With these lines compare Hamlet, iii. 4. 121, 122:

Your bedded Air, like life in excrements,
Starts up and stands on end.

291. Line 19: To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow.—"It is not impossible," says Halliwell, "that Shakespeare may here have recollected a remarkable engraving in Barclay's Ship of Fools, 1670, copied from that in the older Latin version of 1498:

They folowe the crowes crye to their great sorowe,
Cras, cras, cras, to-morrow we shall amende,
And if we mend not then, shall we the next morowe,
Or els shortly after we shall no more offende;
Amende, mad foule, when God this grace doth sende.

292. Line 28: Dusty death.—It is scarcely to be believed that commentators have seriously exercised themselves over this incompareably appropriate epithet, one unfortunate person conjecturing that we should read dusty for dusty and another unfortunate persons finding it plausible and convincing.

293. Line 37: Within this three mile.—This is precisely what a working-man would say to-day; in Shakespeare's time such constructions were not the vulgarisms they now are. Compare I. Henry IV. iii. 3. 54: "this two and thirty years."

294. Line 39: Upon the next trees shall thou hang alives.

-F. 1 has shall.

295. Line 40: Till fames cling thee.—Cling is from Anglo-Saxon cingan, to shrink up. Compare Piers Ploughman, 9010, 9011:

Or whan thou closnest for cold
Or cropyest for dry.

Cling, in some districts, appears to have a similar meaning to the more familiar clam or clam, meaning pinched with cold or starved with hunger.

296. Line 42: I pull in resolution.—So F., with the meaning, evidently, of pulling in a horse, checking. Johnson conjectured "I pull in resolution," and the Clarendon Press ed. suggest "I pale in resolution."
ACT V. SCENE 6.

NOTES TO MACBETH.

ACT V. SCENE 6.

287. Line 1: LEAVE screens.—Leave is Shakespeare’s only form of the word now spelt leafy. It occurs again in Much Ado, ii. 3. 76 (rhyming with “heavy”) and in Perticles, v. 1. 61. Colcs (Lat. Dict.) has “Leavy, frondusus;” Boyer, “Leavy, A. (or full of leaves) Feuillus, plein de feuilles.” Neither gives Leafy.

289. Line 4: Lead our first battle.—Battle is used here, as in III. Henry VI. i. 1. 8; Henry V. iv. 3. 69; Julius Caesar, v. 1. 4, and v. 3. 108, for a division of the Army. The old English word bataille, like the French bataille, had the secondary sense of battalion. Cotgraves has: “Bataille: f. A battel, or fight between two Armies; also, a battel, or maine battel; the middle battellion, or squadrion of an Army, wherein the Prince, or general, most commonly marcheth: . . . any squadrion, battellion, or part, thereof.”

ACT V. SCENE 7.

292. Lines 1, 2: They have tied me to a stake; I cannot fly. But, bear-like, I must fight the course.

Course was the technical name for a single onset of dogs at a bear-baiting. The word is used again in Lear, iii. 7. 54. Steevens quotes Brome, The Antipodes, 1658: “Also you shall see two ten-dog courses at the great bear.”

270. Line 12: But swords I smile at, weapons laugh to scorn.—Daniel conjectures that swords should be words, as in Henry V. iii. 2. 33: “a breaks words, and keeps whole weapons.”

271. Line 17: kerm. See 1. 2. 13. The word is here used in the general sense of boors, as in the passage quoted by Dyce from The Tragedie of Claudius Thiberius Nero, 1607, sig. C 3 verso: And these rude Germaine kermes not yet subdued.

ACT V. SCENE 8.

272. Line 9: the intrenchant air.—The word intrenchant does not occur elsewhere in Shakespeare, trenchant only in Timon of Athens, iv. 3. 116. Intrenchant, which should properly mean “not cutting,” is here used for “not to be cut,” as in “the air, invulnerable,” Hamlet, i. 1. 145; “the woundless air,” 2. iv. 1. 44.

273. Line 13: DESPAIR thy charm.—Compare Ben Jonson’s lines to Shakespeare, prefixed to the First Folio: Shine forth, thou Starre of Poets, and with rage, Or influence, chide, or cheer the drooping stage. Which, since thy flight from hence, hath moun’d like night. And despaired day, but for thy volumes light.

274. Line 20: That PALTHER with us in a double sense.—Compare Antony and Cleopatra, ill. 11. 61-63:

Now I must
To the young man send humble treasuries, dogge
And PALTHER in the shifts of lowness.

Cotgrave has “Harceller . . . . to haggile, huckle, hedge, or poulter long, in the buying of a commodite.” I copy this from the edition before me, that of 1660. The Clarendon Press edd., in quoting the passage, give it as “haggile, hucke, dodge.” I suppose hedge is a misprint that has crept in with the revision.

275. Line 54.—Stage-direction. After this line we have apparently two rather conflicting stage-directions in 1. 1: Exeunt fighting, Alarmare, and Enter Fighting, and Macbeth slain. Then immediately Retreat, and Flourish. Enter with Drummes and Colours, Malcolm, Seyward, Ross, Thane, and Soldiers, and below, after line 58: Enter Macduff, with Macbeth’s head. It seems to me that unnecessary trouble has been made about this stage-direction. It is quite possible that, as the last scene was played in Shakespeare’s time, Macduff and Macbeth, after one driving the other off the scene, returned fighting after a brief interval, when Macbeth was killed; and that after Macduff had killed him close to what we call the “wing” or “side entrance,” he dragged the body off the stage; as he could not well pretend to cut off the head before the audience; Seward and the rest would appear upon the “upper stage,” as they are supposed to have entered the castle before in the last scene, or rather, as it stands in the Folio, at the beginning of this scene, there being no eighth scene in the Folio. As the attack was made on Macbeth when in his castle, he must have been compelled by the besiegers to make a desperate rally; it is not likely that he got very far from the castle walls, and the fight between him and Macduff was supposed to take place on the ground in front of the castle. I really can see no reason to suppose, with the Clarendon editors, that Shakespeare’s share of the play ended here, line 54; for if the slight episode of the death of Siward’s son was Shakespeare’s work, I think it is only natural that he should make those, on whose side he was fighting, take some notice of that brave young soldier’s death.

—F. A. M.

278. Lines 39-55.—The incident of the death of young Siward is taken from Holinshed’s History of England: “It is recorded also, that in the foresaid battle, in which Earl Siward vanquished the Scotsies, one of Siwardes sonnes channeled to be slayne, whereof, though the father had good cause to be sorrowfull, yet when he heard that he dyed of a wound which he had receyved in fighting stonely in the forepart of his body, and that with his face towards the enimle, hee greatly rejoyced thereat, to heare that he died so manfully. But here is to be noted, yt he not now, but a little before, (as Henry Hunt. saith,) yt Earl Siward, wente into Scotlande himself in person, hee sent his sonne with an army to conquer ye land, whose hap was ther to be slaine: and when his father heard yt newes, hee demanded whether he receuved the wound whereof he died, in ye fore parte of the body, or in the hinder part: and when it was told him yt he receyued it in the foreparte, I rejoyce (saith he) euyn with all my harte, for I woulde not wish ye other to my sonne nor to my selfe, any other kind of death” (vol. 1. p. 749).

277. Line 41: The which no sooner had his PROWESS confirm’d.—Prowess must be slurrd over in pronunciation, so as to make it practically one syllable only. Walker (Shakespeare’s Verfication, p. 119) cites Greens, Alphonus, ill. 1 (ed. Dyce, ii. 27): Whose prowess alone has been the only cause.
This line, too, gives an example of such pleonasm as that in the preceding line of the text:

He only liv'd but till he was a man.

278. Lines 54, 55:

behold, where stands

The usurper's cursed head.

Holinshed says: "Then cutting his [Macbeth's] head from his shoulders, he [Macduff] set it upon a pole, and brought it unto Malcolm." (see above note at beginning of this scene). It is on the authority of this passage that Malone added the words "on a pole" to the stage-direction of the Fy.

279. Line 56: I see thee compass'd with thy kingdom's pearl.—Compassed with a pearl is a rather curious expression, but there is very likely an allusion, as the Clarendon Press edd. say, to the row of pearls that usually encircle a crown. Pearl is no doubt used here as a collective term. The word was a common synonym for "treasure," "ornament," as in Florio's Dedication to Lord Southampton of his World of Words: "Brave Earl, bright Pearl of Pearls."

280. Line 70: by self and violent hands.—Compare Richard II. iii. 2. 166:

Infusing him with self and vain conceit.

281. Line 72: by the grace of Grace.—Compare All's Well, ii. 1. 163: "The great'st Grace lending grace;" Two Gentlemen of Verona, iii. 1. 145, 146:

While I, their king, that be their impotence, Do curse the Grace that with such grace hath bless'd them.

---

WORDS OCCURRING ONLY IN MACBETH.

Note.—The addition of sub. adj. verb, adv. in brackets immediately after a word indicates that the word is used as a substantive, adjective, verb, or adverb, only in the passage or passages cited.

The compound words marked with an asterisk (*) are printed as two separate words in F. 1.

---|---|---|---
Affecer, | iv. 3 34 | Blood-boltered | iv. 1 123
Agitation| v. 1 12 | *Bloody-accepted | iv. 3 104
Air-drawn | iii. 6 8 | *Boneless | i. 7 67
Airilum-bell | ii. 3 79 | *Bottles (sub.) | iii. 1 184
All-hailed | i. 7 7 | Brainicky | ii. 2 46
All-thing | i. 1 13 | *Breched | ii. 3 122
Assemble | iii. 2 30 | *Brinded | iv. 1 1
Assassination | i. 7 2 | Buttrass | i. 6 7
"Anger-hole" | ii. 3 126 | Champion (verb) | iii. 1 72
Augurs | iii. 4 124 | Chadron | iv. 1 33
Authorized | iii. 4 86 | Cheaply | v. 3 37
Aravorice | iv. 3 75 | Choppy | i. 3 44
Aracoures | iv. 5 58 | Clamoured | ii. 3 65
Aracouis | iv. 5 58 | *Clatter (sub.) | v. 7 21
Baby | iii. 4 100 | *Clear 10 (adv.) | i. 5 72
Baby-brow | iv. 1 88 | *Clearness | iii. 1 133
Badged (adj.) | ii. 3 107 | *Cling | v. 5 40
Bake (intr.) | iv. 1 18 | Cloistered (adj.) | iii. 2 81
Bank | i. 7 6 | Compunctious | i. 5 46
Be-all | i. 7 5 | Confineless | iv. 5 55
Bear-like | i. 7 2 | Conspirers | iv. 1 91
Bellman | ii. 3 3 | Copy 12 | iii. 2 38
Birthdom | iv. 3 4 | Cowed | v. 3 18
Birth-strangled | iv. 1 30 | 8 Used figuratively — shed; in the sense of to fog occurs in mercy wines, iv. 1. 81, and Taming of the Shrew, iii. 1. 15.
Blanced | iii. 1 116 | 9 cried out; used in doubtful sense in Winter's Tale, iv. 4. 100.
Blanket | i. 5 54 | 10 severely; used adverbially in other senses.
8 Used figuratively — sheathed; in the sense of to fog occurs in mercy wines, iv. 1. 81, and Taming of the Shrew, iii. 1. 15.
9 cried out; used in doubtful sense in Winter's Tale, iv. 4. 100.
10 severely; used adverbially in other senses.
11 spotlessness; brightness, elsewhere.
12 to shrivel up; used twice in ordinary sense — to adhere to, in Macbeth, i. 2. 9 and Henry VIII. i. 1. 9.
13 copyhord; used frequently elsewhere in other senses.
14 immediately; used frequently elsewhere in other senses.
15 alienation; antagonism; used frequently elsewhere in ordinary sense.
16 Used figuratively — soft.
17 deep, sound; used frequently elsewhere in other senses.
18 defiled; used elsewhere in other senses.

---

13 — a thin slice; — a band, Lover's Complaint, 88.
14 — cursed; this verb is used in many different senses elsewhere.
15 — reinforced; used very frequently elsewhere a variety of places.
16 — an object of interest, Sonn. v. 2; used frequently elsewhere — intent, regard.
17 — a tailor's smoothing-iron.
18 — that which keeps and guards.
19 Of the mouth; used in several passages — the gums of trees; also from the eyes, Henry V. iv. 2. 46.
20 — melted; — to pour down like hail, in three other passages.

429
WORDS PECULIAR TO MACBETH.

Act Sce. Line
*Half-world... ill. 1 49
Heath  l. 1 6
Heath-put-oppressed... ill. 1 35
Hedge-pig... iv. 1 2
Held-broth... l. 1 10
*Hell-gate... ii. 3 2
Hell-kite... iv. 3 217
*Here-approach... iv. 3 133
Here remains... iv. 3 46
Hereafter... l. 1 29
*High-placed... ii. 1 98
Housekeeper  l. 1 97
Howl... l. 1 54
Howlet... l. 1 17
Hunter... ill. 1 97
Hurlbury... l. 1 3
Ill-composed... iv. 3 77
Illness... l. 1 51
Imaginings... l. 1 138
Impedes... l. 1 26
Incarnadine... l. 2 63
Indissoluble... ill. 1 18
Initiate... ill. 4 143
Interdiction... iv. 3 107
Intrenchant... v. 3 9
Jutty... (sub.)... l. 1 6
King-becoming... iv. 3 91
Lamentings... ill. 9 61
Limbeck... l. 7 67
*Lion-mossed... iv. 1 90
Loom... v. 3 11
Magot-ples... ill. 4 125
Malevolence... ill. 6 28
Manly... iv. 3 225
Mansionry... l. 1 6
Marrowless... ill. 4 94
Mastordom... l. 5 71

1 = a common; the plant of the same name, in Tempest, l. 1. 70.
2 = beadman; in several passages elsewhere = anchorites.
3 = a house-dog; = a stayer at home, in Coriolanus, i. 3. 56; and in uncertain sense in Twelfth Night, iv. 2. 11.
4 = the cry of a wolf; = a cry of anguish, in Henry V. iii. 1. 38.
5 = a kind of dog.
6 = Occurs as an adj. in I. Henry IV. v. 1. 78.
7 = The verb "to project beyond" occurs in Henry V. iii. 1. 12.
8 = hon. crib. 2.

Masterpiece... l. 3 71
Meekness... l. 7 17
Metaphysical... l. 5 70
Milk... l. 7 55
Minuteness (adj.)... v. 2 18
More-having... l. 1 10
Mouth-honour... v. 3 27
Multitudinous... l. 2 62
Nave... l. 2 22
Navigation... iv. 1 54
Night-shriek... v. 5 11
Nose-painting... l. 3 31

10 = new.
11 = to pass over; used elsewhere in other senses.
12 = to wrap as in a cloak; to decay, to waste, in Ant. and Cleo. ii. 7. 58; Hamlet, v. 3. 9.
13 = to grow lean; in a contemptuous moral sense in Merry Wives, iii. 5. 71; Hamlet, ii. 2. 216.
14 = used adjectively; = a, used in various other senses elsewhere.
15 = = used adjectively; = a, used in various other senses elsewhere.
16 = = used adjectively; = a, used in various other senses elsewhere.
17 = = used adjectively; = a, used in various other senses elsewhere.

Act Sce. Line
Ravined... l. 1 94
Rawness... l. 3 20
Receipt... l. 7 95
Resound... l. 3 36
Rhinoceros... l. 4 101
Rhubarb... v. 3 55
Rooded... l. 3 40
Rooky... l. 2 51
Rous... l. 3 12
Run... l. 1 134
Rump-fed... l. 1 36

18 = haste.
19 = a receptacle; = used in other senses elsewhere.
20 = Venus and Adonis, 262; Passionate Pilgrim, 578.
21 = used intrinsically; = in transitive sense used frequently elsewhere.
22 = inequalities, hinderances.
23 = the shell of a dragon; used frequently in other senses.
24 = = site.
25 = firmly resolved; this verb is used frequently elsewhere.
26 = = used elsewhere in other senses.
27 = = in ill health; == reluctantly, in Antony and Cleopatra, iii. 4. 7.
28 = = invisible; used elsewhere in other senses.

Act Sce. Line
Sprites... l. 1 127
Stables... iii. 3 92
Stanchless... l. 3 78
Stealthy... l. 1 54
Stickling-place... l. 1 78
Store-house... l. 1 34
Summer-seeming... l. 3 55
Supported... l. 1 23
Suspicass (sub.)... l. 3 74
Sweatered... l. 1 8
Swoop... (sub.)... l. 3 219

Temple-haunting... l. 1 6
Thick-cov... v. 3 38
Thin... ill. 1 17
Trains... iv. 3 115
Trammel... l. 1 7
Trisled... l. 3 4
Trumpet-tongued... l. 1 7
Unaccompanied... l. 1 5
Unattended... l. 2 69
Unbattled... v. 7 19
Unbecoming... ill. 1 13
Undecided... l. 3 79
Underwrite... v. 8 27
Unloose... ill. 3 17
Unmaned... l. 1 73
Unprovoked... l. 3 21
Unrough... v. 4 10
Unseamed... l. 1 22
Unsex... l. 1 43
Unshrinking... v. 8 43
Unspoken... iv. 3 139
Untied... l. 3 104
Unwiped... l. 3 108
Upoor (verb)... iv. 3 99

Valed (addr.)... ill. 1 96
Visitings... l. 1 6
Vulnerable... v. 3 11

Water-rugs... ill. 3 94
Whey-face (sub.)... v. 3 17
Woolling... l. 6 6
Wrongly... l. 5 23

20 = mood, temper; = Venus and Adonis, 153; Lucrece, 153; used elsewhere in other senses.
21 = reinforced; used in other senses elsewhere.
22 = devised; used in various other senses elsewhere.
23 = rendered trifling; used in other senses elsewhere.
24 = in its ordinary sense = a, used elsewhere in other senses elsewhere.